We have precious little of it and we are rapidly losing it; but even under the curse of government, side by side with despotism, the actions of individual free efforts are legion. Schools adopt free methods of instruction, they develop the liberal tendencies in their pupils; hundreds of societies spring up for self improvement and the benefit of mankind. Societies for scientific research are founded without the aid of government and they produce the best works. Poets, artists, scientists and others have worked upon individual effort and not by dictation of government. Everything that is good and noble, grand and beautiful, wise and useful, has been done by the spirit of liberty, from the love of freedom, in spite and in the teeth of government and authority. When man will have recovered from the effects of authority, when he will understand that freedom is the most precious thing, when he will be free to live, to work, to act, to develop, to enter into social relations with whom he is in sympathy, then warfare, conquests, robbery, theft, corruption, poverty and all the ornaments of the State, all the burden of authority will be looked upon as relics of barbarism.

This, my friends, is a rough sketch of Anarchism, of the ideal you hate and persecute, the ideal of thousands of men and women in all spheres of life, who are proud of being called Anarchists. You are shocked when you hear that word, you shiver at its very sound. Your fear is but the result of authority, which has instilled into you the hatred for those who wish you well, who at the risk of their own lives and comforts try to free you from the clutches of your masters. You do not see our work in this light, you join in the cry of fools and knaves "Hang the Anarchists," but I see the time coming when you'll understand that all efforts to check the growth of Anarchism are in vain. For its teachings are based upon the power of the individual within himself and not without. Its philosophy is based on that stern, undisputable logic that liberty is just as necessary for man as air, light and food.

Do not waste your time in trying to stop the waves of the ocean with a broom; it is useless. Already the elements are growing into immensity, tearing down every obstacle in the way; after the storm has passed the air will be calm and pure, and the world will be filled with the sweet odor of liberty.

PROSPECTS ARE GLOOMY.

The meeting of parliament is preceded by the usual crop of speeches. It is strange to observe the unanimity with which prosperous politicians shun the condition-of-the-people question. The country is tired of the poor. Ten years ago slumming was fashionable. Parliamentary commissions were held on the sweating system, on the invasion of destitute aliens, on the housing of the poor, and a dozen cognate subjects. Some legislation followed, but little good has been done. One-fifth of the inhabitants of London still occupy dwellings unsanitary from over-crowding. Within a mile of the Mansion House are masses of men, women and children who are more truly barbarian than the Basutos, Sudanese, or the aboriginal tribes of the Himalayas. Greater interest is excited among educated people by Sir William Harcourt's attack on prelates who have found the Narrow Way, a path to the House of Lords, than in the ghastly failure of civilization in Whitechapel, Spitalfields, and most of the great towns and the great cities in England and Scotland. It is true that the country is prosperous, that the revenue is increasing, that philanthropists are active, that politicians are eagerly on the lookout for grievances that will tell with the voters. But the mass of national misery is appalling. It remains practically untouched by legislation. Over a million of our social failures are provided for in our workhouses. The sum of poverty and degradation outside the poor laws, inherited by this generation from its predecessor, is not being reduced. We are in a fair way to hand down to the next generation greater embarrassment and more efficient machinery for the manufacture of larger masses of human degradation. The national debt of the country is under $100 a head. In 1815 it was $225 a head. While liability for past expenditures has thus diminished, responsibility for our social failures has increased. In London alone the number of prostitutes exceeds the population of Albany. The folk without homes in London equal the population of Boston. Known criminals exceed one third of the population of Memphis.

It is economically untrue that the rich are getting richer and the poor poorer; but the gulf between the Haves and the Have-nots is deeper and wider and blacker as education enables the latter to understand the contrast between their lot and that of the comfortable classes. I have seen men willing to work throw themselves down in the street praying for death to end the misery of want. I have heard the wailing of children locked lonely into a bare insanitary room while the mother, all too soon after recent childbirth, seeks the wherewithal to feed them. From the cheap lodging houses, from the railway arches, from the over-crowded tenements, rises an ever-increasing volume of inarticulate but unquenchable revolt against intolerable conditions of life. Statistics published by optimistic officials are satisfactory to those who wish to believe that all is well in this overcrowded island. Discontent is not a matter that lends itself to statistics. Discontent however is growing. For the present everything is quiet. Trade is good. The disinherited have no means of co-operation, no political pull, no leverage as against the prosperous members of the community. The combined efforts of all the churches and all the societies have undoubtedly produced certain visible effects, but the evils that remain are so enormous in their extent that the blindest and most preoccupied politician can scarcely fail to perceive that expanding trade, a strong navy, friendship with the United States, a settlement with France, and public and private charity will leave something to be desired if the British people are to escape the charge of hypocrisy.

Myriads of children produced in reckless disregard of parental responsibility and plunged into an environment of villany and vice, with no playground but the streets, is a feature in English city life which attracts little attention, but it is as much a reality as the Sedan disaster. The social reformers are no more in agreement than the theologians themselves, though there is a general conviction that a great deal requires to be done. Canon Barnett who has done brave and good work in Whitechapel for many years has recently called public attention to the horrors of Whitechapel and Spitalfields, but, with the exception of one or two letters in the newspapers, has met with no public response.

Although there is no country in the world where the social revolution is less likely to take place than in England, there is national weakness and shame in the social condition of the masses of our countrymen, and until a new Savonarola arises to arouse the national conscience, the tendency will be to go from bad to worse. Many of the younger members, especially on the unionist side, in the present parliament, are keenly alive to the social question, but the preoccupation of the country, and necessarily, therefore, that of the prime minister, in foreign affairs, renders them impotent, even if legislation could accomplish anything in a direction where nothing but change of character and of morals can be of permanent benefit.—Arnold White in Humane World, letter dated January 21, 1891.

The conditions in England are the same as in this country, but the "change of character and of morals" will never "be of permanent benefit" as long as the causes that produce such evil effects are left intact. With the abolition of monopoly in land and machinery and the repudiation of governments, which are the tools of those that control the means necessary to sustain and enjoy life, the social question will be solved. "Remove the restrictions to freedom of production and exchange," says James Armstrong, "and the abundant returns to industry will destroy the greatest temptations to crime and meanness. Banish want and the fear of want—which today hangs like a Damocles sword over the heads of the people. This will afford the better traits of human nature—now warped, repressed and crushed—fair opportunities for manifestation, and a wondrous change will be wrought; avarice will gradually dwindle away and assume less offensive forms, while the flowers of hope, kindness and generosity will flourish and bloom in perennial beauty, shedding their fragrance in a world of peace and plenty, a world redeemed and disenthralled."

And when we have removed the restrictions now hampering production, distribution and exchange, and the traits of human nature not warped and repressed by laws and customs, then we have attained a condition of freedom—Anarchist-Communism, a condition in which there will be plenty for every human being. V. L.

POLITICAL PARTY.

A political party attains the goal of the most benefficent endeavor, no less through constancy of purpose than through incorruptible leadership. Every party is somewhat a factor in the development or degradation of mankind, every organization contributes more or less to the sum total of human weal or woe; and, since every organization declares itself for freedom and not the enslavement of mankind, it has principles, the abandonment of which is criminal; and duties, the sacrifice of which deserves the severest condemnation.

The one duty of every party is the unfailing advocacy of what it deems the right, and its noblest principle, that which arrays it forever with democracy, against despotism. In the outset, persecuted it will preserve its purity, but, as it develops and rises to power, slander will give way to supplication, and men who were recently despised, will find themselves growing into favor. Venality, with subtle lure, points to the path of power, which may be surely and quickly traveled, if on the altar of the god of spoils, the best interests of humanity are offered up.

It is then that the party, whose former integrity was prophetic of real achievement, survives or perishes in a severer ordeal test. The general and melancholy lesson of all history is that the corruption of all organizations, both political and religious, upon their rise to power. The organization of parties makes it necessary to lodge great power in the hands of some or more individuals, who are certain to abuse it more often than use it. Liberty therefore, is best promoted by itself. It can be promoted by nothing else.

In the long run we will have either slavery or freedom, for liberty is like a flame—it either increases or expires. The least abridgment of freedom will at last result in tyranny; hence the progress of society has been a saw from slavery to liberty and back again. We are now growing towards slavery. Although while present institutions will be overthrown, but as the basic principle of slavery is likely to be left untouched, society will again journey to despotism.

The one great reform, therefore, that is needed is the abolition of the law of contract.—Armstong's Autonomist.

NO SPECIFIC LAW

Bearing on the Question of Teachers' Citizenship.

Question of Instructor Gale's Eligibility May Come up Before the School Board.

The question of Goddard Gale's eligibility to serve as a public school teacher on account of not being a citizen of the United States may be brought up at the meeting of the Board of Education on next Monday night. Gale stated when being examined as to his qualifications to serve as a juror in the Police Court that he had not yet taken out his second papers, although he expected to do so in a month.

The only section of the school law that seems to have any bearing on the matters is the following:

"It shall be the duty of all teachers to endeavor to impress upon the minds of the pupils the principles of morality, truth, justice and patriotism; to teach them to avoid idleness, profanity and falsehood, and to instruct them in the principles of a free government and to train them up to a true comprehension of the rights, duties and dignity of American citizenship."

City Attorney Dow, when spoken to, said that he didn't think the section above quoted was strong enough to debar a man who was not a citizen from teaching in the schools. However, he did not wish to give a legal opinion as to Gale's eligibility, as he had not looked into the law bearing on the subject.

Gale is employed as drawing teacher at the Central school, having held the place about a year. He came here from Livermore.

AN ANARCHIST PROPAGANDIST.

Emma Goldman Upon the Aim of Humanity.

Says It is For the Greatest Satisfaction at Smallest Exertion.

Declares That Absolute Freedom is Necessary to the Development of Individuality.

The announcement that Emma Goldman, a real live anarchist, would lecture at Grand Army hall last evening, attracted an audience of 200 people, some of whom were in sympathy with the sentiments of the speaker, and others attracted through curiosity or in a desire to hear of this social philosophy from one of the cult. Before the speaker of the evening was introduced, the singing section of the Verein Eintracht of Oakland rendered a chorus with fine effect. Miss Goldman, who has attained some prominence as a propagandist of the doctrines of the anarchist communists of the country, is a young woman who might be taken for a college student or an exponent of suffrage. She is of medium height, with hair tending toward the Titian, with strong features and wears eyeglasses. She speaks with a considerable vehemence and a foreign German accent. The topic of the speaker was The Aim of Humanity. She said that there are many people who think that life is fashioned by fate or shaped by divinity and not subject to human will. "We live in an age," she contended, "when actually have the audacity not to accept any political theory or religious doctrine upon authority. I investigate the authority [illegible] political principles and think for myself. I believe that most human beings are striving for some purpose, every one of them. If mankind did not have some ideal or end no one could [illegible] What, then, is the ideal of life? I have considered and investigated the subject and what I may not be infallible I think it is to reach the highest amount of happiness or satisfaction that most men strive to obtain the greatest amount of happiness with the least expense of time and energy is the common end of human life. Men's conception [illegible] of happiness differ greatly. Some are happy at the mere satisfaction of [illegible] wants, some desire higher intellectual [illegible] and others have the right to fight a battle for a cause or an ideal. Even to die for an ideal is happiness to some. For the realization of one's ideal of happiness there must be absolute liberty. Our forefathers had a certain conception of liberty [illegible] and they believed that the remedy for oppression was to get away from the conditions which created it, and they established what they called religious liberty in this country. But while theoretically religious liberty prevails, the church practically controls the education, the morals and the ethics of the country, and while persons who may differ from accepted beliefs are not subjected to the rack and thumbscrew they are often subjected to ostracism."

POPULAR UNREST.

"Why the great unrest of the people? Why the continual strife, battle and discontent? This is an evidence that there is life and growth. Stagnation follows the negative existence. Content with hope lost and crushing develop conditions favorable for despotism. To whom shall those who desire a better condition of things look for direction and leadership if they do not inform themselves? Yon Harvards and you Yales [illegible] with the sons of the workers [illegible] they are the show pieces of the sons of aristocrats. The rich send their sons to college simply because they desire the name of having a university education. These young men care little for the cause of the common people. They care little for the economics or the politics of the country [illegible] foro the law. The aspiration for wealth began when one man fenced in a piece of ground and said to the rest: "This is mine; keep off the grass." There are those among the working classes who are so dense that they think if the masters did not give them work they would have to lay down and die. It is a false idea that the beauties of nature were bestowed for the benefit of a few. The true conception of society is one of the interdependence of solidarity. That the happiness of each is based upon the happiness of all and that if your fellow man suffers you must suffer and if you suffer your fellow man must suffer. Let us try to become useful men and women and give what we have of ability and talent to educate and to help others. It is only through this that we will realize the true aim of life.

The lecture was followed by a number of questions which the speaker answered from her standpoint. During the evening there were distributed copies of Free Society, a publication issued in San Francisco, which is now in its fifth volume and is avowedly an exponent of anarchist communism.

THEIR HASTY ACTION.

Supervisors Quietly Discuss Their Having Taken up the Mehrmann Matter Monday Last.

During a quiet moment Thursday afternoon when no outsiders were in the room the Board of Supervisors had a little discussion over their action on Monday last in first deciding to postpone the Mehrmann hearing and in taking it up later when the coroner was away and passing on his bills.

It seems that Supervisor Church made the first declaration. He was of the opinion that the board should have abided by the first decision and not have considered the matter after Mehrmann had been told it would not be considered.

One of the members wanted to take some action, but Chairman Talcott ruled that all explanation, if there were any, had better be made next Monday at 10 o'clock when Dr. Mehrmann will be on hand with his attorney.

fate or shaped by divinity and not subject to human will. "We live in an age of doubt," she contended; "men actually have the audacity not to accept any political theory or religious doctrine upon authority. I myself have the audacity to differ from generally accepted political principles and think for myself. I believe that most human beings are striving for some purpose; have some end to attain. If men did not have some ideal or end human society could not exist. What, then, is the chief end of life? I have considered and investigated the subject and while I may not be infallible I think it is to reach the highest amount of happiness or satisfaction that most men strive to attain the greatest amount of happiness with the least expense of time and energy is the common end of human life. Men's conception of what real happiness is differ radically. Some are happy at the mere satisfaction of physical wants, some desire higher intellectual satisfaction, others have their highest delight in fighting for a cause or an ideal. Even to die for an ideal is happiness to some. For the realization of one's ideal of happiness there must be individual liberty. Our forefathers had a certain conception of liberty, they believed that the remedy for oppression was to get away from the conditions which created it, and they established what they called religious liberty in this country. But while theoretically religious liberty prevails, the church practically controls the education, the morals and the ethics of the country, and while persons who may differ from accepted beliefs are not subjected to the rack and thumbscrew they are often subjected to ostracism."

POPULAR UNREST.

"Why the great unrest of the people? Why the continual strife, battle and discontent? This is an evidence that there is life and growth. Stagnation follows the negative existence. Content with more food and clothing develop conditions favorable for despotism. To whom shall those who desire a better condition of things look for direction and leadership if they do not inform themselves? Your Harvards and Yales are not filled with the sons of the working classes, they are the show places of the sons of aristocrats. The rich and their sons do not seek the privilege of having a university education. These young men are cared little for the economics or the politics of the country.

In the German universities during the stirring times from 1848 to 1889 the leaders of radical thought were the students. The same is true today of the universities of Russia and it is among the students that most of the reforms originate. This is because in these countries many of the poor people work nights that their children may be educated and many of the students come from the ranks of the common people and are in sympathy with them. To some extent conditions have changed in Germany, where at the present time the highest conception of liberty with many of the students is that of drinking beer and bowing to the monarch the present representative of absolutism.

We find the church under the domination of the capitalistic class and arises to maintain its dominance over the thought of the people, but it will not permit liberty of thought.

The newspapers are the least suitable source of information for the people. They will give you full accounts of the Jeffries-Sharkey prize fight and of the latest purchase of a European prince by an American millionaire's daughter, or the social doings of the aristocrats, but do the newspapers report the proceedings of labor meetings or speeches of those who are trying to better the conditions of the working classes. They are simply jumping jacks in the hands of capitalists who own them.

IDEALS OF LIBERTY.

The average young man of the rising generation in this country has no real conception of what liberty means. If the American people realized what real liberty [illegible] the existing conditions for an instant? There can be no real equality without equality of opportunity. If you had no laws you would have equality: if you have laws you will not have equality. Only public freedom will permit the development of personality. Now position and importance attaches to a person not for what he is but for what he possesses. Society rests upon the basis of the almighty dollar. Wealth gives power and creates inequality be-

THE FOUR TRAVELERS.

She had found it dull in the city,
So had they in a different mode
She traveled to seek for amusement,
They traveled to look for a job.

She was loaded with fruit and candy,
And her section was piled with flowers,
With magazines, books and papers
To shorten the weary hours.

Her friends came down in a body
With farewells merry and sweet,
And left her with laughter and kisses
On the broad, plush-cushioned seat

She was weary before she started,
For the journey was dull and far
"Traveling's hardly a pleasure,"
Said the girl in the palace car.

* * * * * * *

They shuffled out in the darkness
And crept in under the cars,
To ride on the trucks as best they might
To cling by the chains and bars

None came to see their starting,
And their friendliest look that day
Was that of a green young brakeman,
Who looked the other way

They were hungry before they started
With a hunger that turned to pain
"Traveling's hardly a pleasure,"
Said the three men under the train.

* * * * * * *

She complained of the smoke and cinders,
She complained of the dust and heat,
She complained of the table service,
She complained of the things to eat.

She said it was so expensive,
In spite of one's utmost care,
That feeling the portere and waiters
Cost as much as a first class fare;

That the seats were stuffy and dirty,
That the berths were worse by far
"Traveling's hardly a pleasure,"
Said the girl in the palace car

* * * * * * *

They hung on in desperate silence,
For a word meant a tell tale shout;
Their foul hats low on the blood-shot eyes
To keep the cinders out

The dust beat hard on their faces,
The noise beat hard on their ears,
For a moment's rest to a straining limb
Meant the worst of human fears.

They clutched and clung in the darkness
With a stiffness that grew to pain,
"Traveling's hardly a pleasure,"
Groaned the three men under the train

* * * * * * *

She stepped airily out in the morning,
When the porter had brushed her awhile
She gave him a silver dollar,
He gave her an ivory smile

She complained to her friend that morning,
Of a most distressing dream
"I thought I heard in the darkness
A sort of a jolting scream,

"I thought I felt in the darkness
The grave wheels joggle and swing
Traveling's hardly a pleasure
When you dream such horrible thing."

* * * * * * *

They crept shuddering out in the morning,
Red spots with the coal's black stain
"Traveling's hardly a pleasure,"
Said the TWO men under the train.

THE "FOURTH" OF 1899.

It was the morning of the Fourth of July, and tradition, said I, must do something unusual by way of celebrating it. Since four o'clock the roar and rattle and din of battle had resounded in my ears; I feared to look out lest I should see blood flowing down the streets. A flag fluttered against the sky in view of the upper part of my window; I heard shouts, and could it be?—a groan. Tremblingly I looked out. The smell of powder was in the air, but all looked peaceful. Several small boys were hovering over a piece of live coal; a man hurried by on a bicycle; a little girl sauntered carelessly along on the opposite side of the street.

No signs of alarm or excitement—we were still safe.

"I shall get away from this noise," I said, "I shall seek the quietest spot I can find, and quietly observe this significant day. Surely, I may consistently commemorate it. It marked an epoch in the world-long struggle for freedom. A huge portion of the burden of the ages was thrown off when my forefathers conceived and noted down that wonderful Declaration of Independence. The aristocrats, the conservative patriots do well to ignore the meaning of the day, and observe its customs —shoot off fire-crackers and empty, boastful eloquence."

I boarded a train and rode until the woods and streams looked wild and natural. I got off at a water tank and found a lonely country road winding in and out among trees, now in the sunshine, now in the shade. I followed it; so quiet, so enticing was the peaceful path that I walked amid the birds and shy, joyous animal life, long and dreamily, and came suddenly upon a pretty grove, prettily occupied.

A group of matrons hovering over capacious dinner baskets, and chattering placidly of the many little things which interested them; a few farmer-looking men gathered in twos and threes, whittling and discussing crops and politics; a throng of merry young people laughing and glancing at each other in the vague delight of youth and good health.

Good! An old fashioned, country celebration! The ubiquitous small boy and his fire-crackers were here, but inoffensively so, and I would be simple and old fashioned too.

An officious looking man climbed up on the wooden platform to read the Declaration of Independence. First, a song was sung by an amateur quartette, then the reading proceeded.

In loud sonorous tones the words rang out. "All men are created free and equal, with certain inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," and more of the familiar sentences floated out on the still air. "Government should rest on the consent of the governed," and one after another those bold sentences which created such a reverberation round the world when first they were read aloud.

A stir amid the little audience gathered on the plank seats in front of the platform, indicated something unusual. A tall, lank man, with a stern face and something of an air of authority about him arose to his feet, while several hands sought to pull him back to his seat.

"Mr. Chairman," he began in a high-pitched, strident voice, "I want to protest against such words being read here. Under the circumstances, they sound too much like treason. I know, our forefathers wrote them, but that was more than a hundred years ago, and they succeeded in establishing their declaration. That made a big difference. After the surrender at Yorktown, they were no longer rebels, insurgents or rioters, they were citizens of a great nation.

"Now, our nation is spending money and sending the flower of her youth half way round the globe, to teach a lot of half-savage brown-skins that they have no business to govern themselves in their own islands. They belong to us, and this nation means to civilize 'em if two thirds have to be killed to do it. Our soldiers have had to wipe out a town in a single night—kill all the inhabitants, and burn the houses, in order to teach them. We've had to stab wounded men who were trying to crawl away and hide in the bushes; the strong young men of our country must be sacrificed; those who can outlive poisoned beef, unsanitary conditions, fevers, etc., will fight the Filipinos, and may be kill more of them, than they kill of ours.

"Now, if we want to be truly patriotic, we won't be reminding our great war leaders today of words our forefathers said when they were similarly situated to these islanders. Why do we, loyal citizens of the United States, want to be talking about 'all men being free and equal' and 'government resting on the consent of the governed,' and all the rest of it when our worthy administration is having such a time putting down a lot of barbarous people for saying the same thing. Less said about such things the better, in times like these, I say," and the old man sat down.

Several men arose to speak at once, all was confusion and noise for a few moments. Then the women folks, fearing trouble, announced loudly that dinner was ready and the crowd gathered around the board tables.

I wandered slowly away, unable to decide in my own mind whether the old man was in earnest or not.

FROM SAN JOSE.

On July 11, Emma Goldman again addressed a San Jose audience at Hale's Hall. This evening she spoke upon the subject of "Charity" and while she did not carry out the general conception of Anarchy by bomb throwing, she at least, with well directed aim, threw bombs of thought into the well guarded prison of deep-rooted prejudices. "We give," said she, "then wish to dictate what shall be done with that which we have given. A beggar accosts us on the street and asks for money for food. With some hesitancy we give him twenty five cents or so, and afterwards are perfectly horrified to find that he has spent that quarter not for something to eat but for something to drink. Instantly we object to his doing so. If we had been really charitable we should have been willing for him to spend the money for whatever he most desired.

"The poets sing the praises vie with one another in proclaiming and all join in declaring that there is no love like a mother's. But when the girl of today dares to be led by her natural impulses, when she dares bid defiance to Madame Grundy and be herself, when she dares give expression to her love, the hands of so-called charity instantly seize her and the child born of this love is taken off to the foundling asylum. What becomes of this mother's love? But of course she has none. Love exists only at Madame Grundy's decree. Still, we call ourselves charitable."

In forcible language she attacked all of the abuses and mockery which exist under the name of charity. Any one hearing this lecture could not fail to be impressed by the truth and logic so clearly portrayed. And if ever a place needed radical work San Jose is that place. To be sure there are some broad, liberal people in San Jose, but they are few in number. Let us hope that the seed which Emma Goldman has sown will bear abundant harvest and through the darkness of ignorance at least some light will penetrate.

At her third lecture she spoke on "Why I am an Anarchist-Communist" and showed explicitly that real freedom to pursue happiness can only exist when authority—government in every form—is abrogated and the means to sustain life with are at the disposal of every member of society.

At the same meeting Miss DePeatt spoke on "What Shall we Do to be Damned?" demonstrating clearly that to be true to ourselves means to be damned, shocking many pious Christians and other "nasty-nice people."

Anarchy.—A social theory which regards the union of order with the absence of all direct government of man by man as the political ideal: absolute individual liberty.—Century Dictionary.

DIFFERENCES AMONG ANARCHISTS.

Are these fundamental or simply different versions of the same thing? If we could establish a dictionary among ourselves, but this would never do; our kick is against authority, and we don't want to establish one even for the definition of words. Still, if we could only agree to define our terms as we go along—every man an authority in himself—it seems to me we might avoid a good deal of quarrel and thereby have more time and opportunity to fight our common enemy—established authority. Accordingly, I define Anarchy—A condition of liberty, which means an absence of all established authority; no rule or rulers man is bound to respect. By established authority I mean forceful authority. Our shoemaker may be an authority on shoes. The specialist with peculiar faculty and diligent practice may establish an authority in his line, still no man is bound to patronize him. Even a faculty for deciding questions of justice and equity may establish an authority among men. I remember reading of an old gentleman who had succeeded in establishing himself such an authority, and was respected far and wide for the justness of his decisions. The writer called him "an Anarchist king." Such authority, I believe, would abound in a state of Anarchy, wherein no force but the inherent force of an idea existed. No man or woman should be in a position to say "you must" or "must not" act so and so, every person being subject only to nature and its forces.

Now, what is natural? Reaction follows action; force engenders force; love creates love. If you smile, a smile is returned; if you frown, you are met with a frown. Every individual acts in accordance with his own nature. When forced to act otherwise he becomes a rebel. Milton personified the idea in his "Rebellion in Heaven," where love was placed in power. It matters not what motive moves the ruler. A forceful authority is always a tyrant. A "good" master is just as much a master as a "bad" one. It is the master that incites rebellion. The rebel in man is really the best thing about him. It is born of intelligence and self reliance. The ego of man is a scientific conception.

Says W. K. Clifford: "As the dim and shadowy outline of the superhuman deity fades away from before us we perceive with greater clearness the shape of yet a grander and nobler figure—of him who made all gods and shall unmake them."

Any authority outside of the individual must be regarded as a god, to enable him, or it, to exist. Man's nature rebels, awakening intelligence seeks evidence against authority, an irresistible conflict is inaugurated. Liberty triumphant, what then? Why, the individual freed from restraint seeks dominion over others. The freed slave often makes the worst tyrant. To seek dominion is as natural as to seek liberty. Hence, "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." I would define liberty as the absence of all restraint of the individual in his pursuit of happiness. Invasion is a restriction of that pursuit, and hence an enemy to liberty. But "who is to decide when doctors disagree" in regard to liberty? Here theory creates a "parting in our ways," some contending that an organization to protect the individual must arise. Of course it is a voluntary organization, and its members must retain their right of secession. The theory works all right under our present regime and will undoubtedly be a stage in the future evolution of society. But is it our highest ideal? Is it an evolution of liberty or authority? Is it opposing authority or qualifying it? The Anarchist posits the principle of liberty as a goal, a means and an end. He would not qualify slavery. He would not reform authority. He would abolish them. Slavery is none the less slavery because the slaves voluntarily enter it or even love their chains. The Anarchist is not a leader, a chief, to guide and direct men, but a teacher to instruct and advise. His force is the force of an idea, a principle. There is a substantial agreement in the minds of men as regarding acts being invasive or non-invasive. It is only when an abstraction as "God," "government," "good of society" or "good of humanity" is introduced, invented by designing rascals to bewilder the minds while they pick the pockets of the people, that any quarrel arises.

Natural justice, natural right, natural law, is very clearly defined, and would be rightly applied if men would deal with man, and not appeal to the doctrinaires of some organization—the "government" of political economy, the "social organism" of Socialism, or "voluntary organization" of Anarchists. Let us examine "organization," its object and aim. It aims to accomplish what the individual is supposed to be unable to do. Its "glittering generality" is "to protect the individual in his liberty; to successfully co-operate for individual advancement; to restrict and punish all who would invade the liberty of the individual." This is the aim, but what is the result? We find the motion or machinery is propelled by sovereign power. This power was originally "of God," later "of the king," by and by "of the nobles," and lastly "of the people." What is it? Our Anarchist friends would confine it to a voluntary organization limited. Our governmentalist friends would extend the supreme authority over certain territory. Of course the two cannot occupy the same space and are antagonists. But suppose the government force surrenders? The people have become convinced that the Anarchist is superior, more potent to reach that higher place of society. The Anarchist organization recognizes society. But will the nature of man be changed? Will he not rebel against the new authority? "Why yes," say our friends, "but he has the right of secession." But hold on! Conditions have changed. There is no opposing force to get behind. The Anarchist force was all right when playing "second fiddle" but becomes all wrong when "chief musician." When supreme power is vested in an individual or number of individuals all rights of the people are altered, or annulled, or abolished, as "public necessity may require." It is folly to tell what an Anarchist organization would not do or could not do. "Power pollutes whate'er it touches." Any organization to be at all effective must have sovereign power. Individuals must be subordinated to the will of certain officials, and a higher power with established authority must result, and, to a certain extent liberty must be denied. Hence, as an advocate of liberty, I deny the rights assumed by organization.*

Not wishing to monopolize the space of Free Society I leave further discussion of the differences among Anarchists to a future number.

EMMA COLOMAN IN OAKLAND, CAL.

The announcement that Emma Goldman, a real live Anarchist, would lecture at Grand Army hall last evening, attracted an audience of 210 people, some of whom were in sympathy with the sentiments of the speaker, and others attracted through curiosity or in a desire to hear of this social philosophy from one of the cult.

Before the speaker of the evening was introduced, the singing section of the Verein Eintracht of Oakland rendered a chorus with fine effect.

Miss Goldman, who has attained some prominence as a propagandist of the doctrines of the Anarchist-Communists of the country, is a young woman who might be taken for a college student or an exponent of suffrage. She is of medium height, with hair tending toward the Titian, with strong features, and wears eyeglasses. She speaks with considerable vehemance and a foreign German accent. The topic of the speaker was "The Aim of Humanity."

She said that there are many people who think that life is fashioned by fate or shaped by divinity and not subject to human will. "We live in an age of doubt," she contended; "men actually have the audacity not to accept any political theory or religious doctrine upon authority. I myself have the audacity to differ from generally accepted political principles and think for myself. I believe that most human beings are striving for some purpose; have some end to attain. If men did not have some ideal or end, human society could not exist. What, then, is the chief end of life? I have considered and investigated the subject and while I may not be infallible I think it is to reach the highest amount of happiness or satisfaction that most men strive to attain; the greatest amount of happiness with the least expense of time and energy is the common end of human life. Men's conception of what real happiness is differ radically. Some are happy at the mere satisfaction of physical wants; some desire higher intellectual satisfaction; others have their highest delight in fighting for a cause or an ideal. Even to die for an ideal is happiness to some. For the realization of one's ideal of happiness there must be individual liberty. Our forefathers had a certain conception of liberty; they believed that the remedy for oppression was to get away from the conditions which created it, and they established what they called religious liberty in this country. But while theoretically religious liberty prevails, the church practically controls the education, the morals and the ethics of the country, and while persons who may differ from accepted beliefs are not subjected to the rack and thumb-screw they are often subjected to ostracism.

"Why the great unrest of the people? Why the continual strife, battle and discontent? This is an evidence that there is life and growth. Stagnation follows the vegetative existence. Content with mere food and clothing develope conditions favorable for despotism. To whom shall those who desire a better condition of things look for direction and leadership if they do not inform themselves? Your Harvards and your Yales are not filled with the sons of the working classes, they are the show places of the sons of aristocrats. The rich send their sons to college simply because they desire the name of having a university education. These young men care little for the cause of the common people. They care little for the economics or the politics of the country.

"In the German universities during the stirring times from 1848 to 1880 the leaders of radical thought were the students. The same is true today of the universities of Russia, and it is among the students that most of the reforms originate. This is because in these countries many of the poor people work nights that their children may be educated and many of the students come from the ranks of the common people and are in sympathy with them. To some extent conditions have changed in Germany, where at the present time the highest conception of liberty with many of the students is that of drinking beer and bowing to the monarch, the present representative of absolutism.

"We find the church under the domination of the capitalistic class and anxious to maintain its dominance over the thought of the people, but it will not permit liberty of thought.

"The newspapers are the least suitable sources of instruction for the people. They will give you full accounts of the Jeffries-Sharkey prize fight and of the latest purchase of a European prince by an American millionaire's daughter, or the social doings of the aristocrats, but do the newspapers report the proceedings of labor meetings or speeches of those who are trying to better the conditions of the working classes? They are simply jumping jacks in the hands of capitalists who own them.

"The average young man of the rising generation in this country has no real conception of what liberty means. If the American people realized what real liberty is, would they submit to the existing conditions

* Comrade Ballou evidently refers to the so-called individualists who contend that "police, courts and prisons" will be necessary under Anarchy, demonstrating thereby that their conception of freedom is vague, to say the least. A. L.

The Emma Goldman Papers

for an instant? There can be no real equality without equality of opportunities. If you had no laws you would have equality; if you have laws you will not have equality. Only public freedom will permit the development of individuality. Now position and importance attaches to a person not for what he is but for what he possesses. Society rests upon the basis of the almighty dollar. Wealth gives power and creates inequality before the law. The aspiration for wealth began when one man fenced in a piece of ground and said to the rest: 'This is mine; keep off the grass.' There are those among the working classes who are so dense that they think if the masters did not give them work they would have to lie down and die. It is a wrong idea that the beauties of nature are for the benefit of a few. The true conception of society is one of interdependence, of solidarity; that the happiness of each is based upon the happiness of all, and that if your fellow man suffers you must suffer, and if you suffer your fellow man must suffer. Let us try to become useful men and women and give what we have of ability and talent to educate and to help others. It is only through this that we will realize the true aim of life."

The lecture was followed by a number of questions which the speaker answered from her standpoint.

During the evening there were distributed copies of Free Society, a publication issued in San Francisco, which is now in its fifth volume and is avowedly an exponent of Anarchist-Communism.—Oakland Enquirer, July 15, 1899.

HYPOCRISY OR FREEDOM, WHICH?

The Sunday Examiner of July 9 contained an article about an Indian girl, who had been taken from her savage tribe to our "civilization", to get an education and manners. After she had acquired a college education and all the manners of a high society girl, with the best opportunities of becoming a mistress of a rich man, she leaves "civilization" with all luxury, fashion and arts and returns to her tribe, casts aside her tailor-made gowns for the gaudy calico and cheap cotton handkerchiefs, weds a man of her tribe, performs such rough labor as comes to the female Indian, and enjoys life much better than among our "civilized" people.

The name of that Indian girl is Winneta Wilson, and she is from the northwestern part of Idaho. Her auto-biography is as follows:

"I was born on the battlefield while my mother was fleeing for her life from the approach of our enemies, the white men, and my father, Chief Looking Glass, was fighting with his thousands for our liberty, our lands and our homes.

"The history of the Nez Perce war has been written in blood. Side by side sleep its brave fighters, and the graves of the red men are a black spot in the history of the United States—records of shame, and frauds committed by dishonest Indian agents who have betrayed the trust reposed in them by the Great Father at Washington.

"It is true that since the outbreak of the Nez Perce war some twenty years ago, the Government has restored to us in a great measure our original preserves, but the best and bravest of my race have died, heroes of the battlefield and victims of a terrible wrong."

She then relates the history of the U. S.' persecution and butchery of her tribe in 1878 and concludes:

"Who, then, can blame me for feeling as I do? Who with any sympathy or sense of justice can condemn me for choosing to remain with my people? Why should I declare allegiance to those who in the past were not only disturbers of my people's peace, but their murderers as well?

"I want none of the white man's so-called civilization. I do not want to live in his world. My place is with my race—my kin are dearer to me than any new ties that I can form among the whites. My father was a red man. I have chosen a red man for my husband. My pappoose will some day be a red man. This is as it should be.

"I belong to a proud people; and none dare say that in returning to them I am not loyal. The love of father, mother and fireside—can I forget these sacred associations?

"Indian blood flows in my veins, and I rejoice in it. The Nez Perce faith teaches filial love, virtue and obedience, and although we have no colleges, no luxuries, no newspapers and no books, neither have we mortgages, gigantic trusts, tenements, sweatshops, lunatic asylums nor penitentiaries—all of which, and more that is equally repulsive to me, I have found in your boasted civilization.

"Living as children of nature, without pretense of any kind, we practice no deceit or hypocrisy, nor is there envy or jealousy in our midst. Our individual efforts procure sufficient food and shelter in these streams and forests. Civilization would make of us alms-takers, charity-seekers, beggars."

And that "respectable" reporter has the audacity to call this woman a "degenerate". Would it not be better for him to look in the mirror for the real degenerate?

Men that uphold a system so justly and aptly characterized in Winnetta's simple but strong arraignment are worse than degenerates.

No matter how much we may approve of education and refinement, what good are they, when only the rich are enabled to receive them? What good is art, when the majority of the people have not even the necessary means for their subsistence? Can any one blame that noble and courageous girl for condemning such a system? As far as I am concerned, I admire her action, and if not for the hopes I entertain that progress will sometime bring about social conditions that will enable every individual to be educated, free and happy, I would prefer to live among the savages and to even be called "degenerate," to living among the so-called "civilized" hypocrites. M. LEVITZKY.

"SCIENCE" VS. COMMON SENSE.

The May Arena has an article expository of some of the sleight-of-hand work performed by the greatest of present-day "scientific" impostors—when measured by the number of her dupes—Mary Eddy. The "discoverer" of Christian "Science" gets a severe shocking from one who had been within the fold, and uncovered the "discovery."

Mary learned something about hypnotic healing from P. P. Quimby who had treated her for spinal trouble. This formed the basis for her "Science and Health," which she published after his death. She denies, however, that her "science" bears any relation to hypnotism; indeed, she most vehemently denounces its vulgar materialism and shudders at the very thought that her great mind should be occupied with anything so beastly and low. No, no! The etherial spheres beyond the realm of material reach are the fruitful sources from which she absorbs her wondrous powers. Yet the writer of the article referred to does not know of a single instance wherein she effected the cure even of a headache. But what does it matter? She "founded" a church and then a "college" to facilitate the sale of her book, and soon her income enabled her to build a mansion in New Hampshire to which she retired from the vulgar gaze of the Boston mob, to enjoy in ease and comfort the just reward of her great genius.

The church grew, and with the sacredness of Mary and her Bible "key" and she soon found it prudent to forbid the use of any other book by the "faithful," not even permitting original sermons by her clergy, confining the Sunday exercises to readings from it, thus by action adding to her statement that "all is mind," the one, "and my mind is all."

For the humble souls who crave for a view of the sacred physiognomy of their heavenly guide, Mary has provided copyrighted photos at $2 each, while those who would fain possess a trophy from this great discoverer, may carry away souvenir spoons by depositing a five dollar gold piece for each one taken; any one may obtain these, for there is no difference in five dollar pieces. They are however especially recommended to members of the flock, for being blessed by the holy, if not virgin Mary; they are a great aid to the forgetting of their toothaches, etc. Mary, following the common practice of her craft, does not go into detail in explaining this phenomenon. Could and did she do so the game would be up and the Concord palace would soon become a vulgar materialistic boarding house, instead of the abiding place for ghosts and phantoms it now is, and Mary in her spare moments might write a "key" to some modern cook book.

Who would have thought that at this late day a fakir like Mary Eddy could have found "students" at thirty dollars per lesson? But she did, and in plenty. O, shades of Tom Paine, where is the age of reason you spoke of?

"In the Nineteenth Century," said Mary, "I affix the word Christianity to science and call the world to battle on this issue." What a glaring piece of audacity that is. Yet it was accepted, the battle begun, and Mary is now a god with thousands from all parts of the country crouched in fervent worship of her in the "mother church" in cultured Boston, whither they have gathered on their annual pilgrimage.

Again she says, "Christian Science and the senses are at war." Very well, then, since the senses are the only avenues through which science (knowledge) is conveyed to the brain of man her conviction as a lunatic and the condemnation of her vaporings ought to be easy. But no; Mary and her "science" are performing a valuable service to the "nation" in providing a means whereby the eyes of millions, who have outgrown the crude orthodox creeds, may be again turned skywards, leaving the grave earthly questions to be more justly and equitably settled by the plutes, priests and politicians.

The liberal contributions of far-seeing philanthropic capitalists are now in order; indeed the head of the piano trust is a regular and very active missionary already, and we would not be surprised to soon learn that the Standard Oil Co. has transferred its crusade against the senses to a new field.

Hail Mary full of "science," the plutes are with thee, blessed art thou among craven idiots! But cursed be thee and all thy kind, where courage and freedom hath invaded the mind, for the free man knows no good but himself, bows to no authority, nor reveres any law or edict that emanates not from his own brain. None but the feeble mind or body without courage or strength to take up life's burden and carry it boldly forward in the face of the innumerable obstacles that lie athwart its thorny path, but who in their endeavor to shirk the responsibility of their miserable existence by fleeing to hope, and gods, put any credence in the airy twaddle of balding priests. The lone of such weaklings that some relief, some haven of ease and pleasure from the fierce, relentless, struggle of life, ought, in justice, be their portion sometime, has long since grown into the possibility that it will. Therefore the priests, whose trade it is to impose their air-castle schemes upon the gullible mob of their fellows who have no understanding of the problem of life has ever had an easy task and the centuries of slavery under the yoke of Jesus and his crafty disciples in Church and State, have cleared the way for the new "science," the re-incarnated Karmaism, and the other fashionable spookologies of today, and I see in the growth of these arisms a sure sign of the decay of our civilization, for when man embraces any of them he releases his grasp of the earth and looks to fate or god to make things right, or goes mad and is condemned to an asylum, as was the case of two women in Chicago the other day who had taken Mrs. Eddy seriously, and tried to solve her "science." When men go into the clouds for the solution of questions that are under their feet, they are either mad or very near it. And the rulers of the earth will ever encourage such madness by feigning it themselves, and encouraging its propaganda, for while people keep their gaze thusly directed it is an easy matter to steal their lands and liberties, and point out to them a remote corner of the blue ethereal reigns where a heaven of bliss awaits them if they will only be patient and suffer much, a doctrine fit only for imbeciles, surely not for people of rational minds.

It is remarkable that all these new or recast myshes have women for their founders or chief promoters, and men are gradually receding from their time-honored occupations as gods. The new woman has invaded every sphere of man's usefulness. The "minister of divine grace" who has fought so heroically against the cheap scab labor of women, now finds them installed behind creeds of their own making, and by virtue of competition forcing the men into the ranks of the unemployed. And we can readily see that woman with her highly emotional nature and her more refined deceptive qualities, is much better adopted to leadership in the modern occult creeds than man, and to Mary Eddy is awarded the medal, par excellence queen of them all.

JAY FOX.

When people are freed from the daily terror of starvation and find out what they really want, being no longer compelled by anything but their own needs, they will refuse to produce the mere manities which are now called luxuries, or the poison and trash now called cheap wares. No one would make plush breeches when there were no flunkies to wear them, nor would anyone waste his time over making oleomargarine when no one was compelled to abstain from the use of real butter. Adulteration laws are only needed in a society of thieves; and in such a society they are a dead letter.—William Morris.

...the shoulder blade opened into the lung, making every breath painful, but the robust condition of the sufferer may enable her to hold out and allow the wound to heal. Assio is still at large and the officers are searching for him and a clearer insight into the details of the affair.

When found the woman still held her babe in her arms. The infant was covered with blood and slept as peacefully as though in a cradle.

It is understood that the woman confirmed the report that her husband had reproached her for leaving him and in a fury declared that he would kill her.

It seems that Pegano, the woman's lover, and several others were near when the assault occured; in fact, Pegano was participating in the conversation. He had taken the precaution to arm himself with a revolver, which probably caused the husband to leave him alone. The interloper, however, showed himself to be a coward in that he witnessed the attempted murder and fled without trying to protect the woman he had wronged.

GOVERNMENT DREDGING.

Will Probably Be Completed to the Head of Stockton and Mormon Channels.

Major Heuer, the government engineer appointed to look after the harbor and river improvements in this section of the state, has prepared the specifications for dredging both Stockton and Mormon channels to the head of navigation, to Center street on the former and El Dorado street on the latter. The specifications have been forwarded to Washington for approval, which is nearly always given a government engineer's recommendations.

As soon as the plans have been approved Major Heuer will ask for bids for doing the work. This is the first time that the government has made a move toward improving Stockton harbor, having declined on all previous occasions to extend the dredging inside the city limits.

SALOON FIRE.

Fire broke out in the Lafayette beer hall on Levee street at 5:30 this morning. An alarm was turned in but the employes had extinguished the blaze. The fire is supposed to have been caused by a lighted cigar stump thrown in some sawdust at the base of the bar, and must have smouldered all night. The bar was damaged considerably and a hole was burned in the floor of the saloon.

EMMA GOLDMANN.

The Woman Anarchist Talks to Stocktonians Two Evenings.

Emma Goldman, the woman who glories in her anarchistic record, spoke on Hunter square Saturday evening and at Union hall last evening. The woman is unquestionably well informed, and to an extent well read, but her discourse was in the nature of a sweeping denunciation of every existing condition, rather than along argumentative lines. All government, all religion and accepted moral codes came in for criticism.

Goldman is a rapid speaker, with a heavier voice than is possessed by many men. She has a fair presence, and every gesture and movement denotes great nervous energy. There is no question but that her talks are entertaining, providing the auditor is willing to pass for what they are worth her criticisms of cherished political, social and religious ideas.

In her address last evening at Union hall on "Authority vs. Liberty," she divided authority into three sections—church, governmental and moral. She bore very severely on the churches and bitterly denounced clergymen as a class who lived on the community without giving society any labor in return. She maintained that despite assertions to the contrary, the church had lost its hold on the people and that the government was now the source of authority which the Anarchists had to fight. She denounced constituted authority in all its forms and argued that without authority there would be no crime, no killing, no robbing.

She referred to Mrs. Grundy as the moral censor and violently reproached women as being their own worst enemies.

She said they accepted the decrees of Mrs. Grundy, and any woman who dared to disobey or step aside from the forms laid down by Mrs. Grundy was cast out of the pale of society.

Speaking about the rights of women, she said she pitied the men if ever the time did come when the women should get the upper hand and control, for they would give the men all the hell they could.

Miss Goldman was to have spoken again this evening, but owing to an exhausted physical condition and the fact that she is billed to speak in San Francisco to-morrow evening, her date for this evening was cancelled.

In Cleveland, where the street railway employees went on a strike in order to better their conditions; "life and property" are considered sacred and the troops eagerly protect the property of the company. What a sad spectacle! While the street railway owners enjoy a trip to Europe or the comforts of a summer resort the troops and wage workers, whose interests are identical, are fighting the battle for those that suppress and rob them, instead of consolidating their forces against their real enemy—monopoly and government.

Strange as it may seem, it is nevertheless true that what is considered a crime in this country is glorified when perpetrated in Manila. The more people one kills on the Philippine Islands the greater a hero is he and the more property destroyed the greater the glory. The difference is that here it is the poor workingman who here and there dares to attack the property of the rich while in the Philippine Islands it is the government that commits murder and destroys the property of those who resist the imposition of an invader. But, "might is right" nowadays, a condition which the workers might easily take advantage of if they but cared.

Slavery and involuntary servitude of the most degrading form exist in the Hawaiian Islands today as a means for the enforcement of contracts made by laborers to work on the sugar and coffee plantations. Thirty-six Galicians are now confined in Oahu prison, Honolulu, because they refused to comply longer with the onerous conditions imposed on them by their masters. They were convicted of "deserting contract service," and were sentenced to indefinite imprisonment. They can gain release only by buying their way out of prison or going back to the cane fields. And such slavery is openly practiced under the American government, which pretends to protect the weak against the strong and the constitution of which provides that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction! Yet the dear people never seem to learn that the flag is an emblem of plunder and that government exists to protect the plunderers.

The American citizen will never become a willing slave. He will never tamely submit to the decision of a corrupt judge or the police power of a corrupt officeholder. Those who think otherwise will discover their mistake if they ever should attempt to force or starve the honest and worthy toiler into capitalistic slavery. —Voice of Labor.

Nothing but boastful words, Mr. Editor. The "American citizen" has become a willing slave and tamely submits to the imposition of the officeholders. This is no flattery, but it is the truth the American citizen is much in need of, and the truth is that he is sleeping while the chains are being fastened around his neck. A. L.

UNWELCOME CHILDREN.

For thousands of years men and women have been trying to reform the world. Why have they failed? I will tell you why. Ignorance, poverty and vice are populating the world. The gutter is a nursery. People unable to support themselves fill the tenements, the huts and hovels with children. They depend on the Lord, on luck and charity. They are not intelligent enough to think about consequences, or to feel responsibility. At the same time they don't want children, because a child is a curse—a curse to them and to itself. The babe is not welcome because it is a burden.

These unwelcome children fill the jails and prisons, the asylums and hospitals, and they crowd the scaffolds. A few are rescued by chance or charity, but the great majority are failures. They become vicious, ferocious. They live by fraud and violence, and bequeath their vices to their children. Against this inundation of vice the forces of reform are helpless; and charity itself becomes an unconscious prompter of crime.

Intelligence is the only lever capable of raising mankind. The question is, can we prevent the ignorant and the poor and the vicious from filling the world with their children? Can we prevent this Missouri of ignorance and vice from emptying into the Mississippi of civilization? Must the world forever remain the victim of ignorant passion? Can the world be civilized to that degree that consequences will be taken into consideration by all?

Passion is, and always has been, deaf. These weapons of reform are substantially useless. Criminals, tramps and beggars and failures are increasing every day. The prisons, jails, poorhouses and asylums are crowded. Religion is helpless. Law can punish, but it can neither reform criminals nor prevent crime. The tide of vice is rising. The war that is now being waged against the forces of evil is as helpless as the battle of the fireflies against the darkness of the night.

There is but one hope. Ignorance, poverty and vice must stop populating the world. This cannot be done by moral suasion. This cannot be done by talk or example. This cannot be done by religion or law by priest or hangman. This cannot be done by force, physical or moral.

To accomplish this there is but one way. Science must make woman the owner, the mistress, of herself. Science, the only savior of mankind, must put it in the power of woman to decide for herself whether she will or will not become a mother. This is the solution of the whole question. This frees woman. The babes that are born will be welcome. They will be clasped by glad hands to happy breasts. They will fill homes with light and joy.

I look forward to the time when men and women, by reason of their knowledge of consequences, of the morality born of intelligence, will refuse to perpetuate disease and pain—will refuse to fill the world with failures. When that time comes the prison walls will fall, the dungeons will be flooded with light, and the shadow of the scaffold will cease to curse the earth.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

REPLY TO A CRITICISM.

In No. 219 of Free Society I wrote, perhaps quite bitterly, about the attitude and action of the miners' union members, and in No. 221 of Free Society some one signing their name as Mama Rookie essays to criticize what I said.

The point I made, or tried to make, seems to have been lost sight of by the critic. I said:

It seems that the miners love to be bossed, love slavery. With the Wardner episode and its consequences in their eyes, in fact with this sickening transaction going on, the miners' union convention at Salt Lake City endorsed the S. L. P.

It seems they are unable to learn the lesson—though its tuition comes high—that government is conspiracy and murder, and that they had as good a right to take possession of the mill at Wardner as to blow it up. It seems they don't understand that if the government owned and operated everything they would be more powerless, more servile and more completely under the thumb of the bosses.

That is the point, "sweet Marie;" that is the point I wished to make clear. They endorse government just when the government is treating them worse than mangy cur dogs, and I don't doubt but that nine hundred—and may be the extra ninety-nine—of each thousand of the men who manned the train, ran the scabs away from the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine and mill, and blew up the mill would have responded to a call at any time to put down the Anarchists.

Again I say, why did they declare war, arm themselves, appropriate enormous amounts of dynamite and make all preparations for war if they did not intend to carry it out? Mine managers, governors and military authorities are not so easily bluffed as that, and if they did not know that the government stood ready to defend the capitalists they were lacking in ability to perceive the most patent facts.

Some of them say that they could have held the passes and prevented the soldiers from coming in, but were too loyal and law abiding. Oh, suffering saints! But their loyalty did not save them from the bull pen, nor their homes from pillage.

My critic asks why I don't criticise McKinley, and reminds me that every one must do as they must. So must McKinley. Who expected McKinley to act differently from what he does? Not I.

Then, too, if these miners are condoned in their continued worship of the monster that crushes them, will they ever learn to see that an endorsement of the S. L. P. is an endorsement of government, of the very power that is now denying them the right to work unless they sign a paper that is a renouncement of all personal liberty? No! Point out this fact to them, and tell them to take their medicine if they love government so well, and it will start some of them thinking. Some of the good trades unionists and S. L. P.ites sneered at us when arrested and asked how we enjoyed fighting the government. How do they enjoy upholding the government?

The Coeur d' Alene affair is indeed a bitter lesson. Will the miners learn it? Will they ever learn?

EMMA GOLDMAN IN STOCKTON, CAL.

The seats at Union hall were nearly all taken last night by people assembled to hear Miss Emma Goldman, the Anarchist of New York, speak on "Authority vs. Liberty." She speaks very rapidly, but her enunciation is good and she follows her line of thought very clearly. She makes great use of sarcasm, lashing most severely what she regards as the evils of modern life.

She spoke last night of three forms of authority. "The church," she said, "reigned supreme for centuries, and to doubt the existence of God or the sanctity of "His" ministers meant most cruel persecution. But now thousands have developed from the idea of creation or a supernatural being." She declared that christian dogma rested on belief, which was not knowledge, and that the progress of science had rendered obsolete the ideas of the church. While there were a few who still went to church in sincerity, most men went to gain a reputation for piety that would be of help to them in business, women went to show their clothes and boys and girls went to flirt. "And," she added, "it is a good place to flirt, for so many are asleep."

"It is not true," she exclaimed, "that God made man, but man has made gods, and every page of the church's history is soaked with the blood of those who have refused to accept the authority of the church, but now that authority is abolished in the minds of intelligent men.

"After the authority of the church was abolished," she continued, "another form of authority took its place." She said that Ingersoll had done a great work, but he had substituted the authority of the statute book for that of the Bible, and as the laws were largely based on the Bible they were not much better. The chief difference was that the church had to work on the emotions, while the State used force. In primitive life all had things in common, but after a while some one built a fence around a piece of land and he was the first robber. Then some one else wanted that land, and the struggle began.

She said that all the commands of the State were negative. It prohibits killing, but by means of its police and detective and military forces it murders men by hundreds. It says "Thou shalt not steal," and if a poor woman steals a little toy for her baby she goes to jail, but if a rich woman steals a silk handkerchief, they have invented a new disease to cover the case and call it kleptomania. So that the crime is not in stealing, but in being poor. "There is no equality before the law," she cried, "he who has no money never has had and never will have justice in the courts."

She said that while there was a time in this country when men like Jefferson believed in the principles of democracy, now the chief concern was for the triumph of party, and the time would come, if something was not done to stop it, when we would have our Count Vanderbilt and Lord Gould.

She admitted that the people of this country enjoyed some liberty, but declared that things were changing, or this country would not dare to invade another land to plunder and kill its inhabitants for greed. With a sarcastic denunciation of the czar and the kaiser, and a declaration that the tyranny of the bosses in this country was little less burdensome, she passed on to speak of the tyranny of Mrs Grundy.

She maintained that American women were mentally and physically ruined by their slavery to fashion, and that though the term "new woman" was a term of reproach, yet the women who defied conventionalities for the good of humanity were its great benefactors. The remedy was not in giving women the ballot, for that would only be changing masters, but in establishing liberty for all.

She closed with a vivid description of the triumphs of liberty and a picture of the ideal society, which could be based on the idea of peace and mutual cooperation, for anything maintained by force is most decidedly wrong.

In conversation with a Mail reporter after the lecture, Miss Goldman said she had been fourteen years in America. She had been in the cause of Anarchy in Russia from the time she was 15 years old. She first appeared publicly in this country in 1888 in the strike of the garment makers in New York. In 1892 the authorities tried to implicate her in the shooting of H. C. Frick, superintendent of the Carnegie steel works, but failed. In 1893, during another strike of garment makers in New York, she was convicted of inciting to riot and served a year in prison. She said that she opposed all violence that was aggressive or invasive, but believed in self-defense, and hence justified the killing of President Carnot of France and other deeds of that kind on the ground that the victims were invaders of the rights of the people. In conversation she is quite pleasant, and, except for her intense earnestness, shows none of the qualities usually attributed to the Anarchists.—Stockton Evening Mail.

The above is a report of the meeting of July 23, as it appeared in the Evening Mail.

The editor of the Stockton Record was very gracious to admit that Comrade Goldman "is well informed and to an extent well read. She has a fair presence, and her gestures and movements denote great energy, and her talks are unquestionably entertaining." Very fair of a newspaper man, is it not? The gentleman laments the opposition of comrade Emma Goldman to all cherished (by whom?) authority, particularly to that of Mrs. Grundy and her husband, Anthony Comstock, and our morals. (Our morals are indeed shaky, if they cannot stand criticism.) Comrade Goldman also lectured on the "Aim of Humanity," on Hunter Square (open air), Saturday, July 22, and created quite a stir.

THE SAVING IDEA.

If Stephen T. Byington had read what I wrote on saving, with any attention, I think he could hardly say I was talking of those who put money away in stockings to be idle. I have not my former paper at hand to refer to—I generally start such things on a missionary tour as soon as I see them in print—but I remember using some such expressions as these: "It may be said the man who saves a penny now-a-days does not bury it in the earth, but puts it into a bank, which loans it out to some manufacturer or other capitalist who employs labor, thus enabling him to employ more labor; and thus it ultimately causes production, as much as if our economical friend had spent it for products to consume. This seems plausible; but consider. What does the manufacturer hire laborers for? To produce. And why does he want them to produce? That he may sell. And why does any one buy of him? To consume. Whoever stops consuming in order to accumulate, knocks away as much as he can of the corner stone on which the whole fabric rests. It stands to make money for him only because there are others less parsimonious than he. When, therefore, he tells others that by saving, as he does, they can become rich, like him, he talks rubbish. If they all did so, they would stay poor, and he would become poor." I also, I am sure, gave examples in proof, whose effect is to show that this miserable gospel of Poor Richard does a great deal of practical harm in other ways than by teaching "the ignorant" and "the unthinking" that they depend for bread on the thrifty; which, so far as my acquaintance with them goes, they think unanimously.

Both friend Byington and S. D. deny the originality of my anti-saving idea. To Byington, I will say that I want to learn the addresses of those ignorant fellows who entertain it. I don't know them, never saw one of them, won't quarrel with them about priority, but will, if I can find them, try to organize them for propaganda work wherever political economy is being discussed.

To S. D. I will admit it is probable an idea something like my view of saving may have struck others before. But if you come to that, there is no such thing as originality. Newton was not the first who thought that gravitation probably held the planets in their "spheres." Kepler thought that and said it, but had no time left to work out a proof of it, as Newton did. The quotation from our old Comrade Wilson certainly does not show that he apprehended my exact formula "a penny saved is two pence wasted." Such a letter as Byington's, and such books as those referred to in my former articles certainly do show that my view is far from being understood clearly as yet, even by those who have some glimmering of its meaning. They confound it with "the broken window argument," and the "spendthrift" argument—either exchange of products must needs run over the snag of accumulation and capitalism; or else war and waste are "good for trade"—either a rich parasite had better devour his capital with harlots than put it into some productive enterprise, or else all producers (marvelous, yet familiar to us), might grow rich by ceasing to exchange their products! I say, no. Consumption is the cause of production. Those who abstain from it to get a cinch on the means of production, and thus extort a tribute from the producers, are thieves—government, their provider with such means, being the big boss thief. Wealth increases because expected consumption causes production to run ahead of actual.* The applications of wealth to produce more wealth—useful only in view of ultimate consumption—are not made by abstinence but by invention. Waste does not stimulate production—in itself it discourages production,—but exchange encourages both the direct production of capital,* and the indirect production of its products. As to the parasite, it matters little what he does with his ill gotten wealth. The accursed thing will never prosper anyway. If these ideas all flow from the central one, that consumption is the cause of production,—if they operate on political economy as Copernicus' theory on astronomy, changing the standpoint from what is—moved to what makes all move; from the capitalist, who is the basis of orthodoxy; and the laborer, who is the basis of Socialism, to the consumer, who is the basis of Anarchism, and is universal man;—then they have all the originality anything needs. If not, then, certainly I may hang up my fiddle, for I do not care to bore the public with old tunes.

C. L. James.

* Karl Marx justly says that "wealth applied to produce more wealth," is not a good definition of capital. But we still lack another word to denote "wealth applied to produce more wealth;" so, except by inventing one, some ambiguity must be left.

POLITICS AND RELIGION, OR CHRIST IN OUR ACTIONS.

We find in the history of political progress that man always had to depend upon himself to better the state of affairs. Religion has always been an enemy to progress directly or indirectly. By religion I mean a habitual all pervading sense of dependence upon or reverence for and responsibility to a supernatural being, supposedly divine. As Christianity is one of the religious systems, I will prove that it is against all progress and attempts to hold society in a low state of intelligence. As the intelligence of human beings is advancing, the ministers are obliged to get fresh cloaks under which to hide their past teachings and to deny that Christ is God, born of a virgin and other myths of the past. Christ is now interpreted to be an ideal, or putting it in the words of J. S. Mills: "A standard of excellence, a model for imitation, and a pattern of perfection of humanity." In my opinion this is the most foolish assertion he ever made.

It is also claimed that Christ was the first Socialist and Communist. It is said by the clerical fraternity that, because Jesus was always with the poor and opposing the rich and because he told a young rich man who wanted to know how to be saved to sell all he had and to give it to the poor, he must have been the first Socialist and Communist. Let us see what Socialism and Communism is and whether Christ's philosophy agrees with it. Socialism is a theory which recognises the right of the workers to the full products of their labor. To bring it about the land and implements for production are to belong to the nation and not to privileged individuals. It is to do away with individual wealth and poverty. A Communist is one who believes in the doctrine that a number of people may live in groups, large or small, and hold property or goods in common, each person of the group or commune to have free access to them, consuming according to their wants, and producing according to their abilities. Let us see what Christ taught, and if it agrees with these definitions.

In Matt. vi, 24-34, we find that he taught: "Take no thought for the morrow," that God will take care of us, clothe us, shelter us, give us food without looking for it, like the sparrows and the lilies. Innocent children today are starving and, without shelter and clothing, go about from door to door begging for a crust of bread; even the birds are starving by thousands, and yet the Christians have the audacity to tell us that God looks after the world and cares for it.

Another verse, (Luke vi, 20,) reads: "Blessed be ye poor." Is this Socialism or Communism? Is poverty a blessing? Certainly not, it is a curse. It makes honest men thieves, brave men cowards, true men liars, and pure and virtuous women prostitutes. Another teaching, (Matt. v, 39): "Resist not evil." He that believes in that and practices it is not only a coward but a fool. This teaching has been the whip which tyrants and the priestcraft have used to enslave mankind. Progress and the betterment of our miserable conditions are impossible when such principles are taught. Teachings like: "Sell what thou hast and give to the poor" (Matt. xix, 21); "Give to him that asks thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not away" (Matt. v, 42); "Lay not up for yourself treasures upon earth, but lay up for yourself treasures in heaven" (Matt. vi, 19, 20); and "Ye have the poor always with you" (Matt. xxvi, 11) look nice on paper, but they are the most foolish advice that can be given. Christ did not understand the position of labor and capital; he did not know how poverty came into existence; he did not understand the political and economical condition of his own people, much less of the world, for if he had known, he would not have said such foolish things as pointed out above. Every advanced person is opposed to charity, and in favor of justice instead.

Now, let us see whether Christ was "the highest ideal of a man or a standard of excellence, and a model for imitation." He sanctioned and upheld human sacrifices, (Lev. xxvii, 28, 29); slavery (Ex. xxi, 2, 6, Lev. xxv, 44, 46), the killing of witches (Ex. xxii, 18, Lev. xx, 27). He taught that a father is to slay his own family for a disagreement of religion (Deut. xiii, 6, 10). He taught massacre (Num. xxx, 1, 18). In fact he held up everything that is bad in the sight of unbiased, intelligent and honorable people.

Some people may object on the grounds that this is contained in the Old Testament, therefore I will cite from the New Testament where he sanctions all these crimes and recommends their practice. "Think not that I have come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but fulfil. For verily I say unto you: Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Matt. v, 17, 19 etc etc. (2 Tim 15, 16, John v, 39, 46, 47.

Anyone wishing to be fair and to form conclusions whether to follow Christ would do well to read the following passages. Luke xiv, 26, xii 49-51, x x, 27, Matt x, 34, 35, x, 14, 15, Mark iv, 11, 12, v, 11, 13, xi, 1, 3, 12, 14, 20, 21.

In the words of Robt. G. Ingersoll regarding Christ "Was he kinder, more forgiving, more sacrificing than Buddah? Was he wiser, did he meet death with more calmness than Socrates? Was he more patient, more charitable than Epictetus? Was he a greater philosopher, a deeper thinker than Epicurus? In what respect was he the superior of Zoroaster? Was he gentler than Laotse, more universal than Confucius? Were his ideas of human rights and duties superior to those of Zeno? Did he express grander truths than Cicero? Was his mind subtler than Spinoza's? Was his brain equal to L. Kepler's or Newton's? Was he grander in death than Bruno? Was he in intelligence, in force and beauty of expression, in breadth and scope of thought, in wealth of illustration, in aptness of comparison, in knowledge of all passions, hopes and fears, the equal of Shakespeare, the greatest of the human race?" No! Then why should we follow him? All his good teachings were borrowed, but all the bad ones were his own. As Heine said "Formerly Christ rode on an ass, but now asses ride on Christ."

The sway of Christianity is over; the priest must make way for progress and the church collapses deservedly in its rubbish pile, for its practices are even worse than its principles.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

Kropotkin's work "The Conquest of Bread" has been translated into the Italian and may be had at the Italian library, (Biblioteca Sociale Libertaria,) Paterson, N. J. Price 75 cents.

The Little Freethinker is being published again by Elmina Drake Slenker, Snowville, Va., and it is to be hoped that this iconoclastic little paper will be liberally supported and circulated among the children.

The Socialist Labor Party of this country shares the inevitable fate of all political parties. Its leaders are fighting among themselves for supremacy and the outcome of it is its disintegration, its members largely joining the Social Democracy. The same fate, however, is in store for this latter organization. What a pity to waste so much time and effort in such fruitless work!

A private company pays $10,000 to the United States government for a twenty years' privilege of running the Mare Island ferry boats, the government paying the company $300 a month for carrying the United States officials and clerks who have the use of the boats gratuitously. The clerks are engaged only six hours a day, their work being merely nominal. The company realizes the handsome profit of from $2,500 to $3,000 a month, and all this profit comes from the "horny-handed son of toil"—yes, and horny-brained as well.

Wonderful things do happen. Millerand, the Socialist, who pretended to be overthrowing the present social system, and Gallifet, the commune butcher who in 1871 had the Socialists (men, women and children) murdered by the thousands, are co-operating in the French government in directing the affairs of the nation. Kropotkin, in his autobiography in the Atlantic Monthly,—which by the way ought to be read by every progressive person—says very correctly regarding political parties:

It always happens that after a political party has adopted a program, and has proclaimed that nothing short of the complete attainment of its aim will satisfy it, it divides into two factions. One of them remains what it was, while the other, although it professes not to have changed a word of its previous intentions, accepts some sort of compromise, and gradually, from compromise to compromise, is driven farther from its original program, and becomes a party of modest makeshift reform.

Again and again the labor leaders assure us that organized labor will solve the social problem peaceably. One cannot help wondering whether those leaders are fools or knaves. It is but necessary to consider the latest doings between capital and labor in order to realize that the "peaceful solution" is taking a rather bloody start. In Cleveland strikers and scabs are killing each other, up to ten days ago eight were reported dead and over a hundred wounded. Cars are being blown up with dynamite, which, to be sure, is supposed to have been the work of hirelings of the railway company. The merchants are sympathizing with the workers and refuse to sell their wares to the military. The scabs are bombarded with stones by the women. And that is called a "peaceable" solution.

Judging from latest reports the Cleveland strikers are going to win their fight, yet in the end, experience teaches, it is the corporations alone who are victorious. Not until the workers of the whole country realize that their interests are identical can labor be victorious. Instead of sending money and sympathetic dispatches to Cleveland all the workers of the whole country ought to lay down their tools simultaneously; then the Cleveland strike would be satisfactorily ended in one day. Besides the workers must learn that not themselves, but the bosses—the exploiters—ought to be made to suffer starvation and privations during the strike, for the products on hand belong to the workers and not to the employer; when the worker once realizes this fact, exploitation will be at an end. A. I.

FAREWELL!

Emma Goldman has come and gone. Her presence in this city has apparently not left a ripple upon the surface of this community. The City Hall, the sink of corruption where all the villainous political schemes against the welfare of the community are executed and where the uncanny, hungry crowd of vultures congregates and conspires against the pockets of the unwary and "uncary" citizen, still stands in its old place with its sawdust-filled walls, a monument to thieving contractors and boodlers who robbed the community of millions of dollars;—the new Hall of (In)Justice, the latest fat steal of another gang of robbers is nearing its completion and almost ready to coil like a boa-constrictor around the vitals of the toiler upon whom depends the support of all of these hightoned loafers' and robbers' institutions as well as all the burdens of our modern civilization;—and the infamous commercial gambling dens known as stockboards are running as busily as ever at their familiar headquarters at Pine and Montgomery streets.

Yes, all of these institutions against the existence and mischief of which Anarchism contends are still with us and—no! not a ripple on the surface! For we are not doing surface work. We are laying the foundations for a structure as broad as the world and as solid as a rock. And we have learned from experience that the only effective and lasting method of work is the quiet, penetrating method of reason. Ours is not the aim of securing sinecures for a number of political corruptionists by way of "political action." Nor are we engaged in the patriotic work of producing "heroes" by way of setting human beings to slaughter each other like wild beasts and pouncing upon and disturbing the peace and tranquillity of "black savages" who are "too ignorant to recognize our glorious flag." Ours is not the work of retrogression and destruction but rather of construction and elevation. Hence the daily papers with the "largest circulation" of lies, villainies and sensations disdained Emma Goldman's presence and courage.

Yet, while she may not have left a ripple upon the surface, Emma has certainly rendered very valuable services in the grand work of disrupting this so-called society of ours by applying the social surgeon's probe and laying bare to the view of the layman the superficialism, stupidity and irrationalism of this sham civilization of ours and pointing out the way to a real society and genuine civilization with Reason as its guide and human happiness as its effect.

During her stay of seven weeks in this city Emma Goldman has delivered the following lectures:

"Politics: Its Corrupting Influence on Man."
"Authority vs. Liberty."
"The Power of the Idea."
"Why I am an Anarchist Communist."
"A Criticism on Ethics."
"The Origin of Evil."
"The Aim of Humanity."
"Sex Problems."
"The New Woman."
"The Development of Trades-Unionism."
"Charity."

The latter was delivered before the San Francisco Freethought Society.

While all of these lectures were exceedingly instructive and interesting and cannot but produce beneficial results, the most important lecture and that by which she has, in the writer's opinion, made her mark was that upon "Sex Problems."

The fact in itself of a woman's delivering a lecture upon a subject the very approach of which is so much feared even by many men who consider themselves radical, attests an admirable courage, and the fearless manner in which Emma Goldman handled the question as well as its clear and thoroughgoing presentation was a matter of genuine delight to all true lovers of liberty present. She said in effect:

"Intelligent minds are at last becoming reconciled to the fact that everything in the universe is subject to the eternal processes of change and variety; that this old world itself is nothing but a lot of overhanging matter; hence our institutions, customs and habits are subject to the same process of change. We have learned to make and unmake political and religious institutions; we are gradually stripping ourselves of the gods and governments of our semi-barbaric ancestors; but we are still gingerly upon the question which is of most vital importance to the race: the sex question. And yet this is the very basis of the weal or woe of the race. The human being could stand all the political and religious tyranny and be comparatively happy if the freedom of the affections were but guaranteed. Instead of that the heart is hampered and hedged in by all manner of ridiculous social and political laws and inhibitions, and those who would live up to their natural inclinations are scorned, ostracised and even persecuted. Particularly distressing and humiliating is the position of the woman. While some ascetics yet hold the male transgressor of these ridiculous laws in contempt, he is excused and even encouraged by most in society. The poor woman, however, who is but the necessary complement to the act is condemned. This double standard of morality is a perversion of reason. The man's act that requires the co-operation of the woman must be wrong in him as well if it be wrong at all. But it cannot be wrong. The sex act is simply the execution of certain natural functions of the human body, as natural, as healthful and as necessary when exercised temperately as the functions of the stomach, the brain, the muscles, etc., etc. We do not pay or consult a preacher or politician in the use of our other organs why should we do so in the use of our procreative organs? It is a shameful, degrading and degenerating interference with individual liberty, and the whole intellectual world is beginning to revolt against it. Nor should it be any third party's business how many persons of the opposite sex our affections go out to and with how many of them we associate; whether we be monogamists or varietists. As a matter of fact there is hardly one man in a hundred but is a varietist; why then should not the woman enjoy the same right if she so pleases? And where indeed is the harm? The basic law of society is non-interference with the rest of its members: non-invasion; the sex organs as well as all the other organs of the human body are the property of the individual possessing them and that individual and none other must be the sole authority and judge over his or her own acts; political and religious freedom are incomplete without social and sex freedom; sex slavery as now existing must fall if man is to be truly civilized."

The lecture was well attended and the audience with exception of an occasional burst of applause was spellbound. The questions asked by the audience as well as the discussion following the delivery of the lecture were indicative of an intense interest in the subject and brought out many fine points too difficult to record in a brief report.

Emma Goldman has left this city last Wednesday bound for Denver, whence she goes to Kansas and then to Spring Valley, Ill., to deliver an oration upon Labor Day. Thence she expects to visit England and Scotland and later to proceed to Paris to the World's Exposition and participate in the Anarchist congress. It is not an improbability that she may some day return to the genial clime of California to make her home here. But whether she do or not and wherever her plans may take her, she will always carry with her the esteem of her fellow workers as one of the most energetic and indefatigable champions of human emancipation. RECENT EVIDENCE.

I was surprised to note that there was no comment in Free Society about the recent split in the S. L. P. in New York. Is it a case of small fry, or lack of interest in what the authoritarian brotherhood is doing?

It demonstrates beyond a doubt the failure of trying the dictatorial method of propaganda and its attempt to instil in the heads of the masses that socialism is good, if we will only bow down and worship. The administration of liberty will reap a harvest of [illegible] results.

The Anarchist chuckles a little at the failure of dictatorship. If it works such disastrous results in its infancy, what would it be if a whole nation were so governed?

The Socialist says those things will happen, they have happened before, and all such occurrences are but evolutionary.

To me as an Anarchist it proves that even in the ranks of the Socialists the desire for liberty is growing.

When the majority, or even the wise minority, reach the point of desiring liberty from the side of intellectual development—intelligent comprehension of what liberty means—I am convinced that the S. L. P. and other State-reform bodies will disintegrate, as they must, when the mind grows, and grow it must toward liberty and away from authority. B. F. Bauer.

Workingmen to the Rescue.

A list was circulated among the employes at the Denver Engineering works yesterday and $6.50 was realized in short order. A petition is now being circulated among the men of the Solis Cigar factory. It is hoped that other factories will follow suit at once. Every little helps. There are fully 300 secret organizations in the vicinity which have contributed nothing as yet. Letters have been sent them, and returns are eagerly awaited.

Mrs. William J. Rothwell and Mrs. Mahlon V. Johnson renewed their canvass among the physicians yesterday and got $31 additional, making about $100 they had secured from the profession in two days. Mrs. M. J. Thompson of Florence, could give but little, but she gladly sent in a money order for $1.

Troop C, First squadron of cavalry, has voted to donate $25.

The Denver Musical union yesterday sent the following letter to headquarters:

> The Denver Musical union, of which the First Infantry band are members, will furnish music for the entertainment of the Relatives' union on the occasion of the boxing contest to be given August 22 by the Olympic club for the free train benefit. Also, they will head the procession with a fine band on their arrival to this city.
> J. B. DURKEE.
> W. N. CAMPBELL.
> H. L. LIGHTFOOT.

Mrs. Ingersoll at once sent the following reply:

> Gentlemen—It gives me pleasure to receive your very generous offer of services now and appreciate the spirit of comradeship for your associates who have been in the service of their country.

The Denver Omnibus and Cab company will donate a big band wagon, with four white horses and a driver for the parade on Tuesday, preceding the boxing matches.

Apropos of the return of the boys, Mrs. E. C. Cady of Twentieth avenue writes that she will make a huge patriotic cake of red, white and blue, to be eaten at the banquet.

Tickets were received at headquarters yesterday for the twin performance at the Tabor and Broadway theaters Thursday afternoon. They range in price from 50 cents to $1.50. At the top of each is the phrase: "Lest we forget."—Kipling.

Five Thousand Tickets Provided.

Five thousand tickets have been printed. It remains for a patriotic public to decide whether or not they shall all be sold. The entertainment is promised by K. G. Cooper to be of the very finest order, and he says that the people must not infer that the talent will be ordinary simply from the fact that the proceeds will be devoted to a patriotic cause. Tickets will be on sale at headquarters from now on, and at the two theaters Wednesday and Thursday.

The Academy of Music concert at Elitch's will be given Friday afternoon next, instead of Thursday, so as not to conflict with the theaters. Miss Dora A. Diers, the manager, will conduct the programme in connection with that of Sig. Cavallo. As an inducement for a heavy company G from San Francisco is not growing very fast. Up to date only about $1,200 will be subscribed and it will require about $3,500 to give free transportation to the Cripple Creek soldiers to the camp. Those interested have confidence of raising the full amount by September 1.

The newly organized militia company of this city and Victor will give a picnic and entertainment at the City park on Sunday, August 27, and the boys are confident of being able to raise at least $1,000 by this means. The park has been donated by Hanley and Williams, the owners, free of charge.

HOUSE TO HOUSE CANVASS FOR FUND IN PUEBLO

Special to The News.

PUEBLO, Colo., Aug. 18.—A meeting of the Pueblo Soldiers Aid society was held this afternoon and it was determined to make a house to house canvass for subscriptions to the free train fund. More than $800 has been subscribed already and vigorous efforts will be made to get every dollar within a few days that can be secured for the purpose of bringing the boys home. Pueblo is making great preparations to give the members of the First Colorado a rousing welcome when they reach Pueblo and it is felt that this city should subscribe her full share to the free train fund.

SOCIALIST IDEA OF MARRIAGE

Emma Goldman Says God Will Take Care of the Children.

According to the belief of Emma Goldman, expressed in an address delivered last evening at 1820 Champa street, marriage is a cumbersome and useless form. Men and women who are congenial, and who are fitted for each other's society, she argued, should live together. If they discovered that they could not exist together happily then they should separate. Miss Goldman's sentiments were applauded by a small portion of the audience. Others remained silent, reserving their criticisms to be expressed as they left the hall.

"The New Woman," was the theme of the woman socialist's discourse. After congratulating the people upon the advancement that has been made by woman in recent years she drifted into a discussion of the marriage laws, saying:

"Woman is as free as man. Why should she be bound by religion or state to obey the mandates of man, be they reasonable or unreasonable? There should be no marriage laws of state or church. When a man and a woman become convinced that each can aid the happiness and well being of each other they ought not to hesitate to live together as man and wife. If there is a progeny God will take care of it. Such is the ideal life socialism. It cannot be seen to-day or to-morrow, for the laws of the land say that there must be marriage vows exchanged. My friends, there is a bright day coming. I can look forward and see the time when this ideal existence will be possible. With the politics of the world reformed, and with the social laws revised people will enjoy perfect happiness, but not until then."

HAVING TOO SOFT A SNAP

Street Employes Impose on Good Nature of the Superintendent.

Hoping to bring the bondsmen of the defunct Blake Asphalt company to time, and to secure the resurfacing of West Larimer street, the board of public works yesterday adopted a resolution requiring the company to begin work on the reconstruction within five days. If the repair work is not commenced within that time the American Surety company, the Blake company's surety, will be called upon to make good the guarantee.

During the past week two fine Capitol hill residences have been sold to wealthy mining men,—who will make Denver their home. Henry Bohm sold his handsome residence on the corner of Colfax avenue and High street to W. G. Campbell of Los Angeles, Cal., who is a wealthy mine-owner of Old Mexico. The consideration was $21,000 cash. In paying the compliment to Denver of choosing this city in preference to sunny California, which has heretofore been the home of Mr. Campbell's family, the Mexico mining man was not influenced by any business advantages, as he recently sold part of his interests for an amount that alone would permit him to live in any part of the world his wishes might dictate. He chose Denver as his home, because he considered it the most ideal residence city.

REPUBLICANS OF ARA

Straight Republicans of Arapahoe county have completed their district organizations so far as the city of Denver is concerned. Chairman Robert Morris of the county central committee, announces that the organization in the city is stronger than ever before in the history of the party. Now that the district organization is completed the leaders will personally begin precinct organization. Captains will be named in each precinct after the Tammany Hall idea and as soon as precinct organization is perfected, the organization by blocks will be prosecuted. The precinct captains will be elected as the members of the district organization see fit. The captains in turn will appoint lieutenants for each block.

Meetings of the different districts will be held each evening during the coming week. District E is arranging for a rousing celebration in Elk's hall on Thursday evening and other meetings will be scattered all over the city. In selecting district officers it has been the intention of the party leaders in each district to see that each faction of the Republican party is equally represented. Chairman Morris will call a meeting of the county central committee next week and the genuine preliminary work of the campaign will begin. The Republicans are

The Boer mothers can safely go with the men to the trenches. From their fathers and brothers they will not hear a word that may offend their ears. They will not be in the company of those whom barrack life is rearing, and will be received as mothers and sisters.

"And now, when we ask ourselves: "Who is the cause of all that bloodshed?" our pen refuses to write down the names of the Chamberlains, the Rhodes, the Rothschilds and other Christian or Jewish gold-grabbers. These are only the leaders of a current whose deepest springs are in the hearts of the whole of the British nation.

Yes, the whole English nation has been abetting the commission of this crime in South Africa. The British workers as well as their Jingo masters!

From the time of John Bright, when the British proletarians turned their backs to the Socialists who worked amongst the Chartists, the workers of this country have been induced to believe that the more their masters plunder in distant lands, the richer they will be themselves.

Under the pretext of finding new "markets" and keeping "open doors", the British workers have supported their masters in their policy of sucking the blood out of Turkish and Indian peasants, Egyptian fellaheen and Negro slaves. All the world had to be turned into a field of exploitation for the British, and the British workers have supported this policy with all their hearts for nearly half a century.

When the open town of Alexandria in Egypt was bombarded by the British ironclads, without even showing the mere pretext of "resistance", and when the church bells rang all over England to glorify this massacre: where were the English workers to protest against this act of highway robbery in which France refused to join? When the Matabeles were shot "like mad dogs," their cattle were taken, and serfdom—true serfdom, I mean—was imposed upon the survivors, what did the British workers say to that? They gave their approval.

"After all," the worker said, "there is competition all round to our manufactures; so it will not be bad at all if so rich a country as Egypt be brought under English rule, and if so many millions of blacks are enslaved to us." The idea that the wealth of a nation is measured by the number of rich men in the nation, is so deeply rooted in England that by this time many millions of so-called "free-born Britons" feel happy to have thousands of rich men in the country, and themselves to earn their living as servants, as valets, as gardeners, as butchers and grocers in the service of those who plunder distant lands, or by supplying luxuries and amusements to those adventurers when they retire to a mansion or a cottage in Surrey or the Isle of Wight.

Britain is literally studded with such mansions and houses belonging to officers and officials retired on full pensions after a short service in India and the Colonies, to bankers enriched abroad, to serf-owners in Africa and the like. The main wealth of the nation is no longer made by the country's manufactures. Her chief net income is the £80,000,000 that she gets every year as interest upon the more than £2,000,000,000 distributed as loans all over the world, loans mostly twice repaid already (as Hyndman has proved figures in hand) by Egypt, but still inscribed to their full value on the books of the Egyptian Treasury. Banking (i.e. trade in money), not the sale of British manufactured goods, is now the great and profitable occupation of the British in every town of the far East and far West. England is no more "a nation of shopkeepers," as Napoleon I. said and Mr. Huxley repeated with pride, but a nation of moneylenders and traders in gold. And, this being so, the British workers become more and more the servants and pleasure providers for rich moneylenders, for "administrators" of India who have brought it to the verge of starvation, for bankers trading in money in Asia and elsewhere, for the Armstrongs and Whitworths, with their sub-Armstrongs and sub-Whitworths, all enriched in providing the British nation with a fleet in order to maintain these sources of income.

Masters enriched by plundering all over the world, and well paid servants of those masters: this is what the British nation is going to become with gigantic strides. The present war was only the means of making a further great step in this direction.

The worst of it is that, far from condemning this policy of the nation, the great mass of the British workers, and especially the London workers, openly support it. The ideal of the "free Briton" seems now to be a well paid servant to the man who has made a fortune at Johannesburg, at Cairo or at Hong Kong; his ambition is to have his daughter wearing the slavey-bonnet in the rich man's mansion, and his son running in a butcher, grocer or milk cart to take orders at the "gents'" doors, to be employed in the stables or the gardens of an Alfred Chapus and to glory in the horses and gardens of his master; to carry all over England the mistresses of the rich men on their holiday trips; to amuse them in the theatres and circuses; to sweep the streets for them; to build them mansions; to light them by electricity and to supply them with luxuries from all corners of the world. To be a servant to the rich who plunder the world: this now seems to be the highest ideal of the "free Briton", and the war is nothing but an attempt to go further and further in that direction.

When an agitation was started in this country, in 1886, to nationalise the land, to return it to culture, to give the mass of the English nation access to their own land and to create a wealthy agricultural population which would be the best customer to British manufactures: what echo did that agitation find amidst the British workers, apart from platonic resolutions voted at the Trade Union Congress and forgotten as soon as the Congress was over?

No, to cultivate the land may be good for Boers and Hungarians; not for us. Is it not far better to say to our masters: "Plunder the world, and, provided you bribe us with some share of the spoil, we shall give you full power for that; we shall stand by you, glorify you, erect you bronze statues, and throw eggs and pen-knives at your opponents." And this was what the British workers have never ceased to say to their masters: when they seized Egypt, when they shot down the Matabele, when the great Empire took for itself the cattle of these starvelings and imposed serfdom upon them amidst a Jesuitic talk about Liberty!

Let us hope, at least, that the heroic struggle of the Boers for their independence, and all the blows that this war is going to give the just-mentioned policy of Britain in Asia and everywhere will at last open the eyes of the British workers and show them that a policy of robbery and of sharing the spoil is not always the easiest way to well-being for a nation any more than for individuals. The "Maffia" system carried on by a nation is as risky for it as the "Maffia" organised in Italy by individual robbers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Comrade Holt, of Yorkshire, writes to Cantwell as follows:

You will, perhaps, have some remembrance of the letters I sent to you a few years ago, when Commonweal was alive. I am still of the same opinion. I still believe that the problem of our great towns and cities is not only unsolved but unsolvable—unless taken in consideration with the agricultural interest. I regard, not only the minor evils from which our towns suffer, but the towns themselves as an effect, which it is useless to try to remedy whilst leaving the cause untouched.

I think I pointed out before, the absurdity of Land Nationalisation—inasmuch as the farm worker is already in practical possession of the land.

It is my earnest desire to see the worker able to retain possession and control of the produce he has raised, which impels me to write to you again. If only a knowledge of farm and country life was more widespread I think the task of showing or demonstrating the practicability of a solution of social evils by its help would be very easy.

If the problem of the towns is unsolvable, and there is a solution to the social problem: it must necessarily resolve itself on an agricultural basis. Being in possession, the question is: How to be able to hold both land and produce against Constituted Authority? The only way that I can see is to meet force by force; but how are we to organise ourselves into an efficient force?

No doubt it will take a large amount of propaganda work—far greater than any that has yet been undertaken in recent years.

This will imply a great expense, far more than can be raised in this country, try all we can. Where, then, has it to come from?

At the present crisis, at a time when the two South African Republics are engaged in a fierce struggle with the capitalists of this country, is it too much to hope for the means to be supplied us to strive for and proclaim a Commune in England?

Yours fraternally,

A. H. Holt.

THE EFFECT OF WAR ON THE WORKERS.

(Address by Emma Goldman on February 20, in London.)

Fellow Workers.—Let me begin my address with a quotation from one of England's greatest men: not the England of to-day, the invading, murderous, crushing England, but the England of a time when Liberty and Hospitality were her main virtues—the England that has given the world the profoundest thinkers, the most brilliant writers, the most touching poets, from among whom Carlyle stands out like a shining star upon the firmament. It was he who said, when asked "What is the net purport of War?":

"There dwell and toil, in the English village of Dundrudge, some five hundred souls. From these, by certain "Natural Enemies" of the French, there are successively selected, during the French war, say thirty able bodied men: Dundrudge, at her own expense, has suckled and nursed them: she has, not without difficulty and sorrow, fed them up to manhood, and even trained them to crafts so that one can weave another build, another hammer, and the weakest stand under thirty more smerdingain. Nevertheless, amid much weeping and swearing, they are coloured; all dressed in red; and shipped away, at the public charges, some two thousand miles, or say only to the south of Spain; and fed there till wanted. And now to that same spot.....are thirty similar French artisans, from a French Dumdredge, in like manner wending; till at length, after infinite effort, the two parties come into mutual juxtaposition: and Thirty stands fronting Thirty, each with a gun in his hand. Straightway the word "Fire!" is given: and they blow the souls out of one another; and in place of sixty brisk, useful craftsmen, the world has sixty dead carcasses, which it must bury, and anon shall teach far. Had these men any quarrel? Busy as the Devil is, not the smallest! They lived far enough apart; were the entirest strangers; nay, in so wide a Universe, there was even, unconsciously, by Commerce, some mutual helpfulness between them. How then? Simpleton! their Governors had fallen out: and, instead of shooting one another, had the cunning to make these poor blockheads shoot."

In these few pithy words of Carlyle, lies the whole secret of War and Militarism. Only a short while ago in what is called the greatest and freest land in the world (I mean America), from each Dumdredge, thirty, nay, more, men were selected, dressed in uniform and shipped to a strange country; and the same was done in many Dumdredges of Spain. Both Spain and America had nursed and suckled their sons into strong and sturdy craftsmen. These same sons had children and wives to care for often a mother and sister to support; but no amount of tears or prayers could keep them at home, they were told to go, and so they went to blow each other's brains out. Had they any quarrel? None whatever; they, too, lived far enough apart, and in this wide world there was rather a bond of helpfulness between them. What then? In the case of the American man, we were told that a beautiful sentiment, a deep moral, was the motive power, and so it was to some extent—at least, the American people thought so. It was the deep sympathy with the suffering Cubans, tortured and starved by the butcher Weyler under the regime of the Spanish clergy and government: it was the just indignation of the American people over the atrocities committed in Cuba—I say: of the American people: I should say, of the American worker—and this noble sentiment, these humanitarian feelings, served the American governors as a good pretext for fighting Spain in order to get Cuba into their clutches.

Do you wish to know how the American Spanish war effected the workers? I will tell you. First of all, America lost thousands of her sons—who either died of fever, lack of proper nourishment, or were killed by Spanish guns, or (as a reward for their patriotism and devotion to their country) by embalmed beef furnished by American capitalists. Instead of those strong, able-bodied men who left their shores for the battlefield, we have today thousands of broken-hearted mothers, hungry widows and orphans, who swell the number of the unemployed and reduce the wages of the workers. Then we have the War Tax of Two Cents—only a penoy, you koow, for the Government was kind to us—a penny War Tax that still, like the sword of Damocles, hangs over the workers' heads, that has increased the price of meat from 4d. to 6d., bread from 2d. to 2½d. per loaf, coals from 17s to 25s, per ton, rent from 24s. to 30s. a month, beer, clothing and other necessities of life to still higher prices; it has ruined hundreds of small tradesmen, increased the ranks of the unemployed and reduced wages.

Still, all this suffering could be patiently borne if only one knew that the Cubans had been helped. Were they helped? I deny it. I say that all the blood spilt, all the lives lost, all the money spent has been in vain; the Cubans have been freed from the atrocious government of Spain but only to fall into the hands of another almost as unscrupulous. We have but to think of Homestead and its strike where eleven men were killed and some 30 wounded; of the coal strike in the Coeur d'Alene mines in Idaho, where 200 men were thrown to rot in the Bull Pen and confessions extorted at the point of the bayonet; when we think of the atrocities rampant in the South, of the negroes lynched, tortured and burned by infuriated crowds without a hand being raised or a word said for their protection—when we think of all these things, then I say that the American Government is hardly an improvement upon that of the Spanish, signs of which can already be seen in Cuba, where, 12,000 workers being out on strike, the army was threatened to be called out. We have saved the Cubans from the bullets of Spaniards, only, it seems to me, to expose them to the brutality of the bloodhounds of American capitalism. But as if this were not sufficient, there is a still more degrading, humiliating and brutal result of the late American-Spanish war—I allude to the invasion of the Philippine Islands and the crushing of the Filipinos, those noble rebels who are still defending their independence, though slaughtered by hundreds, their homes burned, their wealth destroyed, and their women ill-used by the very men who went to free the Cubans in the name of Liberty. Columbia! cover your face under the shame of it; for you have become but a prostitute to the vice and greed of your sons!

Again we can say with Carlyle, out of every British and Irish Dumdredge, men have been selected, dressed in khaki and sent to the Transvaal to blow out the souls of the Boers. Have these Englishmen quarrelled with the Boers? Why, no; on the contrary they were friends until a short time back! What then? In this case we cannot even say their Governors have fallen out, for the Governor of the Transvaal has certainly done more than any self-respecting man could or ought to do in the effort to prevent war, by yielding to the demands of Chamberlain, Cecil Rhodes and Alfred Milner. No, it is not the Governors who have fallen out, but a few greedy and insatiable monsters, who have gone mad at the sight of the red Gold in the Transvaal like the proverbial bull at the sight of a red rag, and Britannia must sacrifice her sons at the footstool of her insatiable treasure. No fight so justifiable, no more righteous a defence, no nobler struggle for liberty, than that we see today on the side of the Boers, a handful of farmers who have known little of military drill or modern warfare, who, a peace-loving people, have taken to their guns only from sheer necessity and are showing the world that when a people fights for Liberty and independence it needs neither God nor King on its side. I see a report in one of your dailies, that a number of ministers have called upon you to repent; God because of your sins, having been against you no little in this war. Now I always believed the English were the most pious people on the earth; at least, they have always pretended to be such yet God has punished you; might it not be because you obeyed the call of your Governors to invade and slay a peaceful people? But no, your ministers call you to repent because God for once in their crude imagination is on the side of the righteous—otherwise he is too often on the side of the rascal. I hardly, however, think it necessary to go into details regarding the English-Boer War; enough has already been said from different sides as to the results likely to obtain on the workers: blind indeed are those who do not see them already. Aside of the increase of the cost of the coal and food, aside of your 50,000 children going to school without breakfast, you have sold your birthright for a mess of pottage; you stand before the world as willing slaves to the crimes of robbers and thieves, and you have shown yourselves incapable (in spite of the gifts of chocolate from her gracious Majesty and plum-puddings from your aristocrats) of meeting and beating a handful of farmers!

Do not tell me Mr. Chamberlain is responsible for this war; it is you who are responsible. With Ruskin I can say: "There are two kinds of slaves—one are scourged to their work by the whip; others by their ignorance; some are bought with money, others with praise [or promises of chocolate!]. Again, it matters not what kind of work slaves do; some are set to digging fields, others graves; some press the juice out of vines, some the blood of men, but it is slavery just the same, because you do things at the bidding of others."

Yes, fellow-workers, this is your curse—doing things at the bidding of others. When, oh when, will you learn to be yourselves, to think for yourselves, to act for yourselves! Not until you have learnt to understand the wrongs of War, of bloodshed, of legal murder and robbery: that all class and racial hatred is but the result of your ignorance, and that while you wilfully choose this ignorance you become the easy tools of your Governors, who are too cowardly to go out and fight themselves.

EDWIN MARKHAM WITH A HOE.

(From THE LITERARY DIGEST, New York.)

Mr. Edwin Markham recently paid a visit to the Roycroft Shop, where Mr. Elbert Hubbard, "the sage of East Aurora, N. Y.," holds court, and where the Roycroft books and other objects of art are made. Mr. Markham has of late been so often accused of being a maligner of the hoe and of the man who uses it that we rejoice with Fra Elbertus in his discovery that the poet is himself no stranger to that implement. The sage thus tells the tale (in The Philistine, October):

"When Mr Markham arrived at the shop, Saint Gerome, Sammy the Artist Ali Baba and I were just starting for the potato-field, each armed with a hoe. Mr Markham laffi heartily at our appearance and thought it was a planned reception; but it wasn't, it was all purely accidental.

"I sent one of the boys to the barn to find another hoe. Mr. Markham did not shy, and when he was provided we started away. We reacht the field, and hoed.

"Mr. Markham is no stranger to a hoe. He is hearty, bronzed, and his white hair and beard quite belie his strong nzeek and boyish spirit. As we hoed we discussed the 'hoe man.' Probably I know more clearly than Mr. Markham does, himself, just what he had in view when he wrote 'The Man with the Hoe.'

"So I explained to Mr. Markham what he meant. He was grateful.

"The trouble with the hoe-man is too much hoe—it is hoe-congestion.

"The hoe is all right, and all men should hoe.

"If all men hoed a little, no man would have to hoe all the time.

"To hoe all the time sheets the brow.

"To never hoe tends to hydrocefalus and nervous prostration.

"Many men never hoe, because, they say, 'I don't have to.' It is a fool's answer.

"Then very many men are not allowed to hoe—the land is needed for game preserves. And in a country called Italy, where the true type of hoe-man is found most abundantly, there is an army of two hundred and fifty thousand fighting men who have to be fed with the things the hoe-man digs out of the ground.

"Wherever there are many soldiers there are also many hoemen.

"Some one must hoe.

"All food and all wealth are hoed out of the ground.

"If you never hoe, and yet eat, you are shaming the forehead of the hoe-man and adding to that awful look of God forsaken hopelessness. If you help the hoe-man hoe, he will then have time to think, and gradually the shape of his head will change, his eye will brighten, the outer mouth will become expressive, and at times he will take his dumb gaze from the earth and look up at the stars.

"Let us all hoe—a little."

TO NATURE.

I stand before thee silent and amazed,
Transported with delight, and filled with awe,
For on thy splendors, Nature, I have gazed,
And scanned the secrets of thy changeless law.
The everarching heavens are spread above,
The earth revolves in harmony below,
And in their midst stand I, all wrapt in love,
Flushed with their aspect's life inspiring glow.

When from the hills thou smilest unto me,
From azure skies and clouds of wondrous hue,
All my emotions then flow forth to thee,
Who dost my heart with such deep love endue.
And wells of music from my bosom gush,
When I behold thee, infinite and fair;
Forth from my body all the pulses rush,
To meet the fondlings of thy ambient air.

And when soft spring, awakening, overfloods
The earth with melody, and love, and light,
When gentle zephyrs kiss the opening buds,
Wafting their odors on the tranquil night,
When all the streams gush from the sunlit rocks,
And through the vales their peaceful passage trace,—
Then my wild heart, in thee rejoicing locks
All thy creations in my warm embrace.

How I was humbled in my foolish pride,—
When, in the haste of my unrammeled zeal,
I saw before me all thy wonders wide,
And dared to break Eternity's dark seal!
How thou hast chastened and made me wise
To be content in solitude, alone,
To smile at human sorrow and to rise
Above the world on thought's eternal throne.

Why should I tremble at the quick decay
Of youth's full bloom, and manhood's ample strength?
Why should I fear the fast approaching day,
When life's short thread shall have run out its length?
To thee, sweet Nature, I shall then return
To mingle ever with thy radiant spheres
And thy domain shall be the glorious urn
To keep my dust through all succeeding years.

THE PROPAGANDA AND THE CONGRESS.

(Read before the organizing committee of the Anarchist congress, Paris.)

COMRADES AND FRIENDS,—I have learned that the assistance received from the comrades in America and England in behalf of our congress, has not been very encouraging. I hope this has not led you to lose faith in the American or English Anarchistic movement, or that you have concluded the comrades in those countries are inactive or indifferent.

I have just finished an eight months' propaganda tour in America, having delivered 240 lectures, visited 60 cities, and addressed from 50,000 to 60,000 people, and a four months' tour in England and Scotland, which, although not as successful as the former, yet enables me to give you the assurance that the comrades, at least the English speaking of America and England, are heart and soul with you in your undertaking of the coming congress, and that they will assist you both materially and morally. The reason why you have heard so little from them so far is due to the various difficulties we have to deal with in the United States and Great Britain.

I shall try to give you an idea of how we stand in both countries just now, so that you may better understand our hard struggle. To begin with America, let me say: I am quite sure that many of you know more or less about the movement, I mean the Anarchist movement of the American people, not the foreigners, (for although the Italian, Spanish, French, Bohemian and Jewish Anarchists are larger and stronger in numbers, yet they are of no importance inasmuch as we must have the Americans interested in our philosophy, if we wish to succeed in the establishment of a free society in the United States), still you only know about it through our papers, and because of that you may not be aware of the fact that the American movement is yet in its infancy, not older than five or six years. Up to that period the movement was in the hands of the foreign speaking element, who themselves were either mostly Revolutionists only, or Anarchists by name, and Social Democrats in their tendencies. Only since the first issue of The Firebrand, in Oregon, seized by the authorities, and now published under the name of Free Society, in San Francisco, have we begun to make headway among the American people.

The best proof of my statement you will find in the fact that American trades unions, social and literary clubs, ethical and philosophical societies, no longer look upon us as bomb-throwers, wild beasts, drunkards, or uncombed and unwashed tramps, (this idea having been manufactured by our enemies, and their tool, the daily press), but meet us friendly, invite our lecturers and listen with interest to the exposition of the philosophy of Anarchist-Communism.

However, the American Anarchists not being numerous, and living in the far west, such as Colorado, Texas, and California, it will be extremely difficult for them to raise 1500 francs ($300) to send a delegate to the congress, (it may even cost more than 1500 francs). But we have not abandoned the idea of sending one yet. Comrade Peter Kropotkin has recently sent an article to Free Society, explaining the importance of the congress this being absolutely necessary, as some of the German Anarchists in America have opened a crusade against the sending of a delegate, and have denounced the congress as parliamentarian), and I shall soon have an article in the same journal proposing some of our ablest comrades as delegates, at the same time opening up a subscription to raise the necessary sum, and with the assistance of the foreign speaking comrades, especially the Jewish Anarchists, who are the strongest and most active, we hope to send a delegate from America. If, however, we fail in our aim, we have decided to send reports about our propaganda, and the general outlook for our ideas at large. Comrade William Holmes, James Morton, Carl Nold, and others, have begun to work out reports for California, Colorado, Texas, Missouri, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York, etc.

In England, the comrades have formed what is called a Congress Group, consisting of members of Freedom Group, including Comrade Kropotkin, Tscherkesoff, Tscharkoffsky and others. This group, with Comrade Charles, recently liberated from nine years hell in an English prison, as secretary, is in communication with groups of a similar nature in Leeds, Glasgow, and other cities for the purpose of raising funds for the congress, and working out reports. Leeds has already raised 300 francs, and the group has prospects of raising more. In all, you may expect at least six delegates from England.

At present, the comrades in England must pay all their attention to getting up meetings, demonstrations, and manifestoes against the most cruel, brutal, inhuman, unjust and dastardly war, brought about by a gang of large thieves and money-mongers, and sanctioned by the insatiable monster—government, against a handful of brave, courageous farmers, who are fighting like lions for their independence and liberty. The first large protest meeting was held February 20, and I can assure you that a London meeting has not seen as much enthusiasm and honest indignation for a long time.

As Anarchists it is our main aim to oppose and fight every form of injustice and oppression, and because of that, I hope you will join with us and the English comrades in the most vigorous protest against the cold blooded murder of the admirable Boer fighters by the English army, backed by robbers like Chamberlain, Cecil Rhodes, Milner, and other English capitalists who are anxious to get the gold mines in the Transvaal, over the bleeding and quivering bodies of the Boers and their families.

Down with all form of injustice; long live our love of independence and Anarchy! EMMA GOLDMAN.

A FEW POINTERS ON COMMERCIALISM.

This is a commercial age. Commerce is king—a despot, a Nero. Everything is in the market to be bought and sold. The earth and appurtenances, including mankind, living and dead, are "handled" for profit. The simple exchange of commodities for mutual benefit of the persons making the trade, has grown into the monster, commerce, or exchange for gain. In a system of exchange, the object of which is gain, the person to whom the gains accrue, acquire ascendency in proportion to his profits over the person who loses, and this enables him to demand premiums and to continue his exactions indefinitely. In commerce, to prey upon the weak is lawful, and the smart man, the one who puts his victim into the belief that it is the will of Providence that he should be devoured, is "successful."

Exchange of labor or of labor's products, when for mutual advantage, is co-operation; but commerce is one of the many varieties of slavery with which we are afflicted. It has long been our custom to speak of chattel slavery only, as slavery, and infer that all other forms of servitude were freedom; but the inference will not bear the weight of investigation.

Suppose two persons discover that by working together they can produce more than by working separately. When the job is finished, if one should say to the other: "I lifted more than you and I claim two thirds of the product. You couldn't have made a third as much, had you been alone," or "I thought of doing it this way. Brains should count for something. By right the extra product is mine," would the claims be just? In a co-operative movement, in which many persons engage, the impossibility of measuring the exact amount of brain or muscle to be expended by every individual will be readily seen, consequently the product cannot be divided according to ability nor to the amount of work performed, and as the union of forces should be for the benefit of all, "to each according to his needs" would be the most equitable division.

But profit to the individual is the acknowledged basis of our present system of co-operation,—if by any stretch of the imagination commercialism can be made to take on even a semblance of co-operation. It is, to be sure, co-operation after a clumsy fashion of the workers. The manipulators of the system, the "leaders," pocket the proceeds. The laborers must be deceived, so they will permit this to be done, therefore certain intricate business processes, that are quite beyond the comprehension of the mediocre mind, are made use of. As the wits of the "hard" become sharpened by constant grinding, new machinery is fitted to the original plant, and the disturbing element, which pointed a threatening finger at the system, supposing a change has been made to better its condition, subsides and again "peace and prosperity" reign supreme. The use of this machinery, though necessary for the maintenance of "trade," becomes senseless and burdensome when the end striven for is the welfare of the whole people. There is the endless bookkeeping; the retailing of small quantities of goods; the labor of printing the limitless advertisements of all things, good or bad—commercialism covers everything; manufacturing of money and stamps, the supporting of consuls and the general fussing of the national government, to say nothing of that of the county.

The profit system allows a person to accumulate more products than he has use for and guarantees him the power to say, "This is mine; I can do nothing with it, but neither shall you, unless you give me ten, fifty, a hundred per cent more labor or labor value in return than was required in its production." The master said to the slave, "You are mine;

MARTYRDOM.

To utter your thoughts before all men,
Speaking full freely with voice and pen;
True to the truth, while it brings to you
But cold contempt or a harsh taboo;
Or to lock your lips, all truth resigned,
While you make a grave of the fruitful mind
And fawn on the knee with the fawning crowd,
The shallow souled and the narrow browed,
The price of your silence a slave's ease; come,
Which is the greater martyrdom?

To act as you think—untrammeled and bold,
To reject, and to hold what is worthy to hold;
Enduring scorn, or things more fell
The mob perhaps, or a prison cell;
Or to chain your hands to your chained lips,
And wait, your birthright in eclipse
For the whip of a custom to come or go,
To the fetish of force your head bowed low,
Your payment a coward's existence, come,
Which is the greater martyrdom?

To live your life though the whole world blame,
Taking no thought of fame or shame
Fighting, and failing if you must,
Your face to the foe as you sink in the dust,
Or to sell yourself for a paltry peace,
And get for your sale a longer lease
Of a life that at most can be but a lie,
Bound in shame till it rot and die
All of its potencies palsied, come,
Which is the greater martyrdom?

THE MARRIAGE INSTITUTION.

Are the marriage relations considered by the devotees of that "time honored institution," or is it the marriage CEREMONY to which sacredness is attached? Ah! there 's the rub. We Americans do not worship idols as the ignorant and miserable heathens do, but we are sticklers for ceremonies. The harmonious operating of natural law is of minor consequence when a ceremony is at stake.

Still, when marriage rites are taken into account, the FEES usually contribute their share (and no mean part, either) to the performance, although the legality of the transaction is not endangered in all localities by a failure to foot the bills; but what an unappreciative rascally fellow he is, to be sure, who evades payment for—a wife! Does not the law literally bestow upon him this woman to love and to cherish?—and uphold him in confiscating the proceeds (in property or service) of her labor? He who begrudges the trifling sum required to pacify the law, and insure recognisance by society of his "respectability," is either a dolt or the personification of avarice!

"Once upon a time," when death overtook a poor mortal, his mourning friends placed a coin between his lips to induce the invisible ferryman to becomingly transport him across the "dark river." Unsophisticated souls! How easily we of modern times see that those people were hoaxed out of their wearily earned coppers. Had they lived a hundred years later, prior to giving up the ghost, they would have hired some of the Lord's satellites to "read their titles clear, to mansions in the skies;" or they would, perforce, have divided their scanty stores and have passed it over to a reverend gentleman when a child was born so it could be regularly christened, and not named off hand like a horse or cow. The christening mummeries included an item worth remembering; the child's spirit was safely switched off the track that leads to perdition. The blessing of the "holy fathers" at the nuptial ceremony was, no doubt, spontaneous and fervid in proportion to the size of the prospective requital for the service, etc., etc., at every important turn in life, or one that could be conceived by any stretch of the imagination to be important. You reverend adherents to the institution of marriage, do you see in it any similarity to those institutions of the "good old times?"

Did you ever hear of a county clerk, who issues the marriage license, or the priest, preacher or justice of the peace, who repeats the customary formula that legally binds the couple, did you ever hear of any of these beneficiaries giving the "happy pair" the slightest information about the forces of sex, social purity, prenatal influences or heredity? Is not the "tying of the knot" a purely perfunctory and ritualistic affair, done solely for the FEES? Then why does society look upon it as such a weighty matter? Is it not a case of the exploited worshipping the "letter?"

I shall leave to those who defend legal marriage flummeries the pleasant office of enumerating the reasons for retaining the institution, while I undertake to point out a few of its objectionable phases.

The promise exacted from the contracting parties, that they will live together till "death do part," whether the union prove to be "for better or for worse," is in the last degree revolting to a person whose dislikes are terse. It is simply preposterous to demand a promise of that sort of two individuals who cannot possibly foresee the probable alterations in their temper and temperament, brought about by the inevitable change in their habits, cares, and environment generally. To compel the fulfilment of the promise is monstrous. If, under certain galling conditions AND UPON THE PAYMENT OF A PRICE, the promise may be set aside, what gross absurdity to require it!

The law by causing the wife to be dependent on the husband for even the common necessaries of life, subjects her to his will, just as truly as the day laborer is subject to his master (employer). What can be worse than sex slavery?

Property, not morality, is the bulwark of the marriage institution. All the evils of any age are interdependent.

Sexual intercourse, where love is absent, is prostitution; neither sex escapes the corrupting effects.

Sex subjugation, by direct brute force, or by any indirect means, is prostitution.

Legal enactments or ceremonies do not soften the facts.—Viroqua Daniels.

OBSERVATIONS AND SUGGESTIONS.

DEAR COMRADES, FRIENDS, AND SYMPATHIZERS OF FREE SOCIETY,—Little has been heard of me in the columns of Free Society, and this may have led some of you to believe that I am inactive or out of the movement entirely; but I have been neither. True, I cannot boast of having been as active as I was during my tour through America, but I have done some propaganda after all, at the same time not leaving the progress of our American movement out of sight, especially devoting my attention to the health and growth of our brave little rebel, Free Society.

My tour has been reported in a previous number of Free Society, so I will say little about it, only adding that while it did not turn out as successful as the one in the States, I do not think my trip fruitless.

I had occasion to join in a monster protest meeting against the brutal attempt of a few big thieves —Cecil Rhodes, Milner and Chamberlain—to rob the brave and marvelously courageous heroes of the Transvaal and the Free State of their independence and liberty.

Every Briton boasts of his freedom of speech, and in fact I myself with most radicals believed, up to my arrival in England, that freedom of speech was a reality in Britain. During my four months' touring in England and Scotland, however, I had ample opportunity to convince myself that freedom of speech is as much a farce there as elsewhere. The worst of it is that this sacred right is not suppressed by the government, like in our "blessed land," but by the people themselves. By the "people" I do not only mean the ignorant, whisky-saturated, patriotism-maddened workers, but also the mental wage slaves: clerks, bookkeepers, cashiers, typewriters, commercial travelers, and other flunkies to money and titles. We, too, have had to deal with a patriotic craze, but it was at least tinctured with humanitarian sentiments, and I cannot recollect one single instance of having been disturbed in any of my meetings against the Spanish-American war. The only disturbance came from the police and not the people; whereas in England, where patriotism in the present war is based upon nothing but commercialism, the brutality of the people is simply beyond any comprehension and rather discouraging. Yet the pleasure of an instructive association of comrades like Kropotkin, Tschaikoffsky, Tscherkesoff, and others, together with the study of the lights and shadows of the English Anarchistic movement, overbalance the disagreeable features one meets with on a tour hampered by obstacles of all kinds.

I cannot close my short review of my tour without mentioning the kind and energetic assistance rendered me by comrades H. M. Kelly and A. Davies, both known to the comrades in America through Solidarity, The Rebel, Free Society and Freedom. These two, themselves "foreigners" in England, like a faithful mate of a shipwrecked crew, are in a quiet and unassuming manner keeping the movement alive in London.

It is a rather singular feature that both in England and America the energetic workers are foreigners, yet such is the case. Not that our ideas have failed to gain ground among the natives of either country, nay, on the contrary: the number of English Anarchists in London, for instance, is very large: but it seems the Anglo-Saxon character lacks that power of devotion and enthusiasm which forces one on and on, almost against oneself, to break the chains and to fearlessly climb over all obstacles; because of that cue cannot but appreciate such workers as Kelly and Davies, and a few others, so much more.

Exceptional conditions produce exceptional characters, so I have not yet lost hopes that some day England and America may furnish us with a Kropotkin, Tschaikoffsky, Tscherkesoff, Perovskaya, Angelillo, Caserio and other such wonderful men and women; indeed the beginning has been made in America by the appearance of a Parsons.

The comrades in Paris and elsewhere are busily engaged in preparing for our congress, but why has so very little been heard from the comrades in America? Is it because the congress, when first proposed, was lightly treated by a few Anarchists, who either for personal reasons or because of lack of knowledge about the movement, have expressed themselves against the congress, and have denounced it as useless? If this be the case, I advise you to read Comrade Kropotkin's article carefully, and I am sure any prejudices you may have hitherto entertained on the subject, will vanish.

Of course, neither the organizers of the congress, Comrade Kropotkin, nor I believe that it will bring about a reconstruction in society, or a revolution in the methods of propaganda; but we do believe that there is not a better opportunity to let the world see that the Anarchists are very much alive, than the congress to be held during the congress to be held during the Exhibition in Paris, at a time when organized thieves, robbers, and legal and illegal prostitutes, will squander the sweat and blood-stained products of millions of workers. Or can you tell me of a more opportune occasion to send out a joint cry of protest against Church-sanctioned and State-legalised murder and exploitation? A protest against all forms of tyranny, not only in the ranks of the enemy, but even in those of so-called reformers, Socialists, nay, even Anarchists? I hardly think you can name one. And here I must not forget to mention the main object of importance of

NOTE AND COMMENT.

We cannot all agree as to every point in our doctrines; especially are we likely to disagree as to the best methods of propaganda. Honest differences of opinion should be respected, and when one comrade differs from others in regard to tactics, etc., it is not necessary, nor is it fair, to publicly question his integrity, or to intimate that he is a hypocrite or a coward. As I said before, I do not value newspaper controversy unless it is upon fundamental principles, and I shall not again reply to the personal reflections of Streit and other critics.

The reports that the pockets of Sipido were filled with Anarchist literature when he was arrested, have given to the capitalist press another excuse to rave about Anarchy and Anarchists. The tenor of all the articles which have come under my notice is that the teachings of Anarchy lead to murder. Not one of these well paid scribblers seems capable of tracing effects to causes, or of crediting the attempt on the life of the prince of Wales to the wholesale murders of the nation of which he is a leading representative. Anarchy teaches that war is murder, and this highly sensitive, emotional, ill-balanced boy, fired with this idea, did exactly what might have been expected he would do. The teachings of Anarchy do not always find lodgment in well balanced brains, but we shall not cease spreading them for that reason. In his ignorance (for which he was not responsible) Sipido probably imagined that the prince was directly to blame for the war in Africa, and knowing no better than to strike, he struck where he thought the blow would tell the surest. Taking all the circumstances into consideration this was the act of a revolutionist, not of a would-be common murderer.

A flowery, yet strong article by William J. Bryan, written for the San Francisco Examiner, on "The Man With the Hoe" has found its way to my desk. Bryan's condemnation of monopoly, of corruption and abuse of power is powerful; what a pity he cannot see the real source of these evils. But that he does not is evident from these words:

> Give justice to every creature—justice in the methods of government, justice in the distribution of the burdan of government, justice in the making of the laws, justice in the interpretation of the laws, justice in the execution of the laws—justice first and charity afterward.

This is not the language of the demagogue or the self-seeker, but of a man who truly wishes the betterment of his fellows, while but dimly conscious of the remedy for their ills. To have a "good" government, not to abolish government altogether, is Mr. Bryan's ideal. But as Burke declared: "The thing, the thing itself is the evil," and I fear that Bryan's ideal would prove but a will-o'-the-wisp even if it were possible for him to have his way.

I think I correctly gauge comrade Victor E. Southworth's sentiments and feelings when I say that he is not looking for and has not expected a call to enter the lecture field in behalf of the Anarchist propaganda. Comrade Southworth is independent enough to do his chosen work in the manner which best appeals to his idea of the fitness of things. When he feels that he can do more good by taking the lecture field than he is now doing by addressing his Sunday morning audience in this city, I have no doubt that "the Lord will provide" a way. Meantime those of us who are getting the benefit of his Sunday meetings are selfish enough to want to keep him where he is. As to his fitness to represent the Anarchist movement, those who think "Southworth is too young in the movement and not well enough grounded in the philosophy" would surely be better qualified to give an intelligent opinion if they would take the trouble to come and hear him. Merely reading an occasional lecture published in Free Society or Discontent gives but a very poor idea of Comrade Southworth's ability.

Here is a man who for many reasons is entitled to the respect and the earnest support of all radicals, and especially of those who live where they can hear and know him. He has left the church and voluntarily given up a fat position in the pulpit. He has become an Anarchist and taken an early opportunity of publicly declaring himself. Because he would not be untrue to his awakened convictions, he has suffered, both in himself and in his family, almost every kind of persecution and privation. He accepts with cheerfulness poverty and the ostracism of his former friends. Sunday after Sunday he eloquently pours forth his heartfelt convictions of right and duty. He unsparingly denounces every form of injustice. He holds up liberty as man's highest ideal. Surely for these reasons we should do for this man all that lies in our power. But Comrade Southworth is not only an agitator, a devoted propagandist, a consistent Anarchist. He is an individualist, and not the less so because he upholds free Communism as the ultimate highest form of society. He is an ardent lover (I had almost said worshiper) of Whitman, of Emerson, of Thoreau. He teaches the purest, the most enlightened individualism and egoism. His hatred of the State is only equaled by his confidence in the integrity of mankind. For these additional reasons our comrade is entitled to, and should receive, the highest consideration of every individualist, and especially of the individualists of this city. I am sorry to say that with one or two exceptions they have persistently absented themselves from his meetings. This, of course, they have a right to do, but they are hardly justified in sneering at him behind his back or publicly questioning his ability to represent our movement until they know him. Comrade Southworth may not thank me for this interference in his behalf, and I am sure the Denver "plumblines" will not, but under the circumstances I deemed it necessary.

W. HOLMES.

ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

IV.

PITTSBURG TO CHICAGO.

It is with good reason that Pittsburg is called "the smoky city." A dense pall of thick smoke, from a multitude of immense chimneys, hangs constantly over the city. Much of the time, the sun is completely eclipsed; and the city enveloped in gloom for days at a time. The soot, continually settling on hands and face, requires hourly washings, to secure even partial cleanliness. Whatever may be the effect on the inhabitants, the stranger is subject to a feeling of intense depression, which only disappears as he becomes thoroughly acclimated. It seems impossible to draw a free breath. The result in my case was to stretch me on a sickbed for a day or two, immediately after my arrival.

Nevertheless, Pittsburg contains much that is beautiful and desirable. Its natural scenery is attractive in the extreme, in spite of the monstrous disfigurements of commercialism. There are many splendid buildings in the city. Nowhere, however, is there a more startling and cruel contrast between the extremes of wealth and poverty. The parasites are housed in magnificent palaces; while the wretched hovels, that shelter thousands of the workers, in and near Pittsburg, are miserable and repulsive beyond the power of description. This is one of the cities in which the wrath of an aroused proletariat will some day be a terrible thing to face.

The Anarchist movement has had many ups and downs in Pittsburg. It is one of the storm centres from which much is heard in every time of crisis. The comrades are earnest and aggressive; though there is a general apathy at present among the public at large.

I spoke twice in Pittsburg, and once each in the mining towns of Roscoe and Buena Vista. The attendance was not large at any of the meetings; but I trust some good was done. The Pittsburg Leader, with a fairness unusual among daily newspapers, interviewed me, and printed the result without the slightest misrepresentation. It also gave a column report of my lectures, which was really remarkable in its justice and accuracy.

My headquarters in this city was the home of comrade Harry Gordon, whose address is 707 Wylie Ave. He is extremely enthusiastic for the propaganda. Among the friends I enjoyed meeting in Pittsburg, was Theresa Hughes, the author of "Hilda's Home." She is a true-hearted, whole-souled champion of liberty in every phase of life.

In Allegheny, just across the river from Pittsburg, is the Western Penitentiary, where our comrade, Alexander Berkman, is suffering an unjust and cruel imprisonment. Nothing cheers him so much as letters from comrades. All who can do so, are specially urged to send an occasional word of greeting to Comrade Berkman, addressing him simply as above. This is a real service that any comrade can perform with little trouble. I could not see our comrade, owing to tyrannical prison regulations, which are made to apply to him alone, to shut away from him every friendly face.

After leaving Pittsburg, I made a brief stop in Cincinnati, where I was booked for a lecture before the Ohio Liberal Society. This was well attended, and well received. Considerable lively discussion followed the address, showing that the members were doing some good thinking on social questions. Among the comrades I met in Cincinnati, was H. Wagner, 2283 Loth St., an active and effective worker. This was my second visit to Cincinnati, which does not impress me with an individuality different from that of many other cities.

But I must proceed to Chicago. I reached there December 1, being put down for a visit of four weeks. Comrade N. H. Barmin met me at the train, and welcomed me to the great city. And what a city! As everybody either lives in Chicago, has visited it, or intends to visit it, I shall try to limit my account of the city as much as possible. But I could fill pages with the description, if I expressed all that is in my mind. The first impression is one of immensity. More than any other city, it appears inconceivably gigantic. This impression is never lost, however long one may live in Chicago. Everything here is on a large scale. It is the scene of continual activity, combining all the energies of other cities. Stay in Chicago long enough, and the whole world will come to you. Natural scenery apart, Chicago can reproduce all the characteristics of all parts of the continent. It is the one place to see everything. Its supremacy as the unchallenged centre of American commercialism is rapidly becoming established. With equal certainty, it seems marked out as the great centre for radical propaganda, the principal storm centre in the day of revolution, and the foremost centre of reconstructive activities when the triumph of liberty shall have been secured. In all times of crisis, all eyes naturally turn to Chicago. There our martyrs lie; and there their avengers will arise. There labor has fought some of its greatest battles; and there educational propaganda will yet do its greatest work.

My stopping place in Chicago was with Albert H. Verrall, 2203 N. Robey Ave., a cordial friend of all libertarian work. Finding much that was sympathetic in our views and natures, I enjoyed my visit at his hospitable home most intensely. J. F. MORTON, JR.

the congress, namely, that the last tie of relations between parliamentarian Socialism was broken at the congress in London in 1896, and that from now on we must as much fight the narrowness, discipline and intolerance of parliamentarian Socialists as any other form of invasion and despotism, and show the workers that those who even without blushing rejoice over the success of one of their men as comrade of the murderer of 30,000 Communards,—Galliffet—have no claim to be the representatives of the workers' cause.

It is an undisputable fact that our movement in America and Europe is not what it ought to and could be, but for the lack of co-operation and solidarity, and our enemies, including the leaders of the Socialist parties, have ever made use of this fact in attempting to show that "Anarchy is dead," and those Anarchists who are alive "work in obscurity." While they have wilfully misrepresented us, it remains true that the majority of comrades in England, America and Germany seldom come to the front. I only refer you to a number of German groups, composed of Anarchists, wasting their time in singing and beer drinking, (I have no objection to either, if coupled with serious work), and discussing their next door neighbor; or some of our American parlor meetings, frequented by a number of middle-class people who have not the courage to be known as Anarchists; or some comrades who waste the precious space of our papers with the discussion of spooks and ghosts, Anarchist judges and jurors, or the consistency of prostituting oneself in politics, which only tends to harm the movement instead of helping to lift the veil of ignorance from the eyes of the worker.

You may contend that we can protest against existing evils through our papers and public meetings; so we can, and do, but of what importance is it compared with an opportunity like that offered us in Paris? In the first place, our papers are read mostly by the comrades themselves, and our lectures reach only those who happen to attend meetings, the daily press either reporting nothing, or misrepresenting our speakers in the most shameless manner. I do not undervalue such methods of propaganda; yet I claim that by these methods we reach but the few and not the many, whereas bodies of men and women assembled in a congress have always been recognized by the press. It will be so with the coming Anarchist congress. The very fact that this is to be the first Anarchist congress since 1872; that for the first time since then, men and women from different parts of the world bring tidings of international solidarity, deep love of liberty and hatred of tyranny, openly and fearlessly discuss the philosophy of Anarchy, and ways and means of a speedy spread of their ideas, and all this almost next door to the arena where international parasites celebrate one of their last orgies and dance a cancan upon the decayed pillars of a rotten society, would be of such grandeur, such importance that it could not pass unnoticed.

But there is still another reason why the comrades in America should take part in the congress. Since I have been in Europe, and especially in Paris, I have been dismayed to find how little is known of, or how little interest is shown here regarding the movement in America. This is due to the fact that very few French people know any language beside their own, and that very little is written about America in the French papers; unfortunately this is also the case in Italy, Austria, Germany and Holland. Now, in the face of the growth of imperialism, militarism and despotism, can we stand such lack of solidarity and unity? Can we hope to accomplish more in the future than we have in the past, unless we really become international, not only in theory, but also in practice? The congress is to serve as a medium of putting the comrades into communication with each other, and of suggesting ways and means of carrying on propaganda work co-operatively, and last but not least, to acquaint the comrades of all countries with the movements of each respective country.

The comrades in England and elsewhere have already formed groups for the purpose of raising funds to send delegates, and prepare reports and suggestions for the congress. What are the comrades in America about? Surely they are not going be silent and inactive in such a grave and important matter?

Permit me to make a few suggestions; first of all, a subscription should be opened to help make the congress a success, amounts temporarily to be sent to Free Society. I hereby contribute $5 to the same to make a start. With a little effort and the assistance of our Jewish comrades, we can raise enough to send an American delegate. The Bohemian and Italian comrades will also send delegates. We have a few able and competent Americans who could represent our cause, (I say cause and not comrades, because I wish to avoid misunderstanding). There is, for instance, Borland, who has not been heard of much of late, yet who understands the movement and Anarchist-Communism thoroughly. There is Comrade Edelman, known as an able worker for years, who may be well enough to go to Paris. There is Comrade Cooper, certainly one of our most intellectual writers, and there is Voltairine de Cleyre, a fearless and brilliant exponent of Anarchism. . Of course, Addis objects to her as a lecturer, claiming that she opposes Communism, yet that is a mistake; she does not oppose Communism "because she favors Individualism," but rather because she wants to be known as an Anarchist without a tag. That ought not to influence any one. She may not be so well posted on Communism as Addis, but she has the advantage of having a clean past—I mean in regard to her devotion and faithfulness to the cause, and her hatred for politics and politicians. I venture to say that she would rather do scrubbing than make common cause with politicians, a quality which Addis seems to value very little. She may not know as much of economics as some of our other workers, but, as she says herself, she is all right in the philosophy of Anarchy, and certainly perfectly competent to represent the Anarchistic movement of America.

Of course I have suggested these comrades merely because I think them the fittest as delegates. I have done so without their consent, leaving it for you to ascertain whether they would like to accept a delegation or not, or to suggest others, if you know. At any rate, I hope the congress will be discussed and reports prepared. Should it be absolutely impossible to raise enough money to send a delegate, Comrade Kelly and myself will gladly submit any of your suggestions or wishes to the congress, but the groups should send us credentials for that purpose. I should like to recommend Harry Kelly to your attention as he is an American. I shall be there at all events. But I beg you to leave nothing undone to raise the necessary means for a delegate directly to be sent from America, as Harry Kelley has been away for two years.

IMPRESSED BY BOER TACTICS.

I am impressed with the military tactics of the Boers. They have no organization, no drill-masters, no authoritarian officers, and their fighting abilities show conclusively the superiority of Anarchist methods over the commonly accepted governmental ideal of well drilled, disciplined troops who have no will of their own, but depend entirely on the whims and notions of their commanders; if they see fit to sacrifice their men, all the latter can do is to obey and be slaughtered like so many sheep. The Boers spontaneously resolved to defend their country and have thus kept at bay the numerous armies of British hirelings. The Revolutionists of all countries may do well to study these tactics a little for future use.

Here is greeting to you and your valient men, "Oom Paul." The sympathies of the liberty-loving men and women are with you in this fight against the international capitalistic bloodhounds. You have won fame eternal; you and Joubert, Cronje, Bothe and the host of unknown men and women will mark the few shining spots in the history of the mass of servile subjection. Miltiades, who fought on the plains of Marathon the Chersonese horde, Spartacus who headed the slave insurrection in the Roman empire, Arnold von Winkelried who gathered the Austrian spears in his breast to save independent Switzerland, and the numerous men and women who with Patrick Henry had only the choice between liberty and death, are your peers. We sorrow with you in the death of Joubert, in the defeat and surrender of Cronje, and we hope with you that you may drive your oppressors into the sea.

Oom Paul, the rebels salute you! C. DORAIKA.

IN FAVOR OF PURITANISM.

"Authoritarian! Puritanical!" This is the garb in which Henry Addis ventures forth in an attempt to slay the "bogy" of consistency. But the "bogy" is not to be scared out of the way by an apparition so transparent. Because some refuse to accept swindlers, rapists, brutes, brothel-keepers, tiger-mothers, soldiers, politicians, judges (hangmen), juries, lawyers, and other parasites in the movement generally, Addis has stamped them as "Puritans." The most fitting reply would be "You 're another." If it is Puritanism to oppose the vermin inside, surely it is Puritanism to oppose the vermin outside the movement; yet no one has come forward to defend the above named class of those who are not Anarchists. But if it is Puritanical to oppose parasites who label themselves Anarchists, as well as parasites generally, by all means let us have a revival of Puritanism. An odious name will not scare those who have had one so long already.

Henry Addis says: "Every one must decide for himself where one is to toe the mark." Precisely; but when he decides to toe it on my back, I am a party to the business, and have a voice. That he reverently folds his hands and says it is for my benefit, and he is sorry for the necessity, etc., does not lighten the burden, but tends to aggravate it. And William Holmes says: "The radical who follows such 'methods and practice' with a single view of strengthening the Anarchist movement is nevertheless consistent along this line, and is worthy of our highest regards." If such a radical exists (which is quite a large "if") under certain conditions this might apply, but I would like to see such an Anarchist. Comrade Holmes should remember that we do not enter wage slavery or the professions to strengthen the Anarchist movement, but to make a livelihood, and neither did Cohen claim he was doing more for liberty since he had become a lawyer, simply contenting himself with abusing our good-natured S. D. The question remains: Is a man justified in living on his fellow man, even though he calls himself an Anarchist? And I do not see how a brothel-keeper, a lawyer, a judge or politician can be made to be anything but a parasite by any stretch of logic. Working in itself is not against Anarchist principles, but it be the supporting of judges, juries, lawyers, politicians, brothelkeepers, etc., that makes it un-Anarchistic, because of the degrading condition this entails upon the worker. The worker must foot all the bills, whether Addis puts a "levy" (!) on the enemy or not.

Undoubtedly the gist of the inconsistency argument, as has been said, is that we cannot entirely live up to our ideal. The logic necessary to justify upon these grounds the "Anarchist" brothelkeepers, etc., is that if one is compelled to step ankle-deep into the filth of society he might as well go in up to his waist. If this is good logic, then why stop at the waist? Why not take it all in, just so whoever perpetrated any base deed declared that he was doing it for a noble object? What is the matter with shaking hands with William McKinley, who declares that his wanton course is in the cause of liberty and humanity? And with Judge Gary, who simply wanted "justice" done to the "people" of Illinois? Or with Grinnell and Bonfield, and the rest of the whole gang, who worked for "justice and peace"? If an Anarchist is justified in living on the toil of his fellow creatures, though professedly declaring against the present society, so are those who, being essentially parasites, hypocritically profess they are "working in the interests of humanity" or for the "glory of God"! And what is the use of Anarchism as a philosophy if those who profess to teach it have only words and not deeds with an adjective only to distinguish them from other parasites?

Henry Addis says martyrdom is a relic of the past, and has no part in the Anarchist philosophy. "One who dies or suffers for any object or cause" is a martyr, and to say that men no longer suffer for a cause now is one of the absurdest statements I have ever read. It has not yet passed out of the memory of man when five men died for our cause—the Anarchist cause. They were "religious fanatics," no doubt! "Relics of the past!" Does he know that now, while these words are being written, men are dying for liberty, martyrs to her cause? No doubt Wm. Holmes and Henry Addis look with disgust on the brave Boers and Filipinos for carrying on a "policy of open, deliberate warfare against the powers that be," because it entails what Addis would call "self-sacrifice." If the Boers had not "antagonized" the English there would have been no martyrdom, no "self-sacrifice," and Chamberlain, Rhodes, et al. would have been allowed to decide for themselves where to "toe the mark." Unfortunately the Boers were not cunning enough to see the advantage of such inconsistency, as it takes a politician to be able to serve two masters. And what about Peter Kropotkin? He also sacrificed his large estates, his position at the Russian court, and prefers to cast his lot with the toilers and to work for his living. Was he one of those "religious fanatics" who in "blind faith" hope to "gain a golden crown"? How much would Kropotkin have accomplished if he had prostituted his intellect and individuality by not antagonizing the Russian government?

The time has not yet come when men are at liberty to act according to their opinions without coming into conflict with the powers that be, nor is it likely to come if men are to uphold the State in deed, and fight it with words only. But I do not wish to impose a "self-sacrifice" on Addis at all; but we will not advance without it—that is all I claim. Do Addis and Holmes think we shall come into Anarchy on a rose-scattered road, meeting no opposition from the powers that be?

Henry Addis would do well to read "Anarchist Morality" again, also his own writings. Says Kropotkin: "To struggle, to look danger in the face, to jump into the water that we may save, not a human being only, but even a cat; to live on dry bread in order to put an end to iniquities that revolt us; to feel ourselves in harmony with such as are worthy of love; to feel ourselves loved by them; this for a weak philosopher perhaps means self-sacrifice. But for the man or woman filled with energy, force, vigor and youth it is the conscious joy of life."

On the jury question I could not do better than to quote Henry Addis: "If you really want Anarchy, refuse to uphold the State. Decline to run for or hold office. Refuse to do jury duty, and in every way practicable weaken the powers of the State." Again: "To support government is to aid tyranny. To become a part of it is to join hands with organized murder. Political action is for the ignorant, the deluded and the knave."

Wm. Holmes can now turn me over to the "tender mercies of Benj. R. Tucker," but I care nothing for the latter's mercies; even if I cared all the world for them, I should not fear the result. Tucker does not mince matters; he calls a spade a spade, and he also called one of his foremost comrades a prostitute.

GERMINAL.

GERMINAL! The Field of Mars is ploughing,
And hard the steel that cots, and hot the breath
Of the great Oxen, straining flanks and bowing
Beneath his goad who guides the share of Death.

GERMINAL! The dragon's teeth are sowing,
And stern and white the sower flings the seed;
He shall not gather tho' fall swift the growing,
Straight in Death's furrow treads and does not heed.

GERMINAL! The helmet heads are springing
For up the Field of Mars is gleaming files;
With wild war notes the bursting earth is ringing!
Within his grave the sowar sleeps and smiles.

CHURCHES DEGRADE WOMEN.

"Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church."—1 Corinthians 14: 34. (Italics mine.)

It is a mystery, as mysterious as ghosts—holy or otherwise—that intelligent women should submit to this "keep silence"—"not permitted"—"commanded"—under obedience"—"if they will learn anything"—"it is a shame," etc., of Paul, the woman hater, the incomplete man, probably not knowing woman, and yet daring to judge the sex. The very idea of a woman wishing to learn anything, was the grossest impudence according to Paul—"Saint Paul."

Freedom cannot possibly be attained so long as women, the mothers of the next generation, attend churches and listen to and accept such teachings as Paul's. Woman is the noblest and most important part of humanity; the most important because, altho' it is claimed that the "holy ghost" can accomplish the male part of propagation, it is not suggested even in the Bible that it or he can carry out the maternal work of race reproduction. Women must therefore be free before they can bear and rear free children. We are not sufficiently learned to give an opinion as to the freedom or compulsion of women who bear children to holy ghosts. The plural is used because about twenty similar births to that of Jesus are recorded before A. D. 1.

The illogical Paul, adored by the clergy, is also reported as saying:

"For I would that all men were even as I myself. But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that. I say therefore to the unmarried and widows It is good for them if they abide even as I. But if they cannot contain, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn."—I Corinthians 7: 7, 8, 9.

From this the conclusion might be drawn that Paul was impotent, for this God that Paul worshipped and preached is said to have "created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth." This command must have applied to Paul, if it did to any one. Was his impotency "the thorn in the flesh" about which he "besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me"? So this little man—the great saint—like all the parsons since his day, "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men" in direct opposition to the teachings of the ghost they sometimes call "holy," "God," "Father," "Son," "Love," "Jealousy," "the Lamb of God," "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," and some forty other absurd and contradictory aliases, who commanded men and women to be fruitful and multiply, was not content with his own disregard of this law of procreation, but he must take upon himself to instruct others to do anything short of burning rather than carry out this important and almost imperative function of nature.

This same Paul said at another time, "Let us not therefore judge one another," and "who art thou that judged another." (Romans 14 c.) This is rich, indeed, after his judgment of women. This judge and jury, complainant and defendant all in one—who is as great a mystery as the "Trinity"—in giving his command and law to the wives who dared to wish to "learn anything" to ask their husbands at home, failed to inform the virgins and widows how to "learn anything." Probably the priests of his day were to his knowledge ministering unto their wants whether their names were Mary or Ruth.

The best sign of the times is without doubt the ever increasing numbers who are freeing themselves from church domination. The women who cast off this yoke of superstition are powerful factors for freedom, the hope, the "unknown God" of the Athenians.

SOME MORE OBSERVATIONS.

I welcome the readiness of our comrades to raise a fund for the purpose of importing a speaker from England, for it is a sign of revived energy, although I am convinced that naught will come of it. I need not assure the comrades that my whole heart is in the American movement and that I would give much to see it prosper, yet I must take issue with the proposed importation of a speaker from England; and this not because of a lack of international feeling, but because of a preponderance of it. For that reason I would not like the movement of one country to grow at the expense of another; and that would certainly be the case should you succeed in getting Comrade Turner over. He is the only able speaker in England at the present time, and even he cannot do much straight Anarchist propaganda, because his whole time is taken up with the Trades-Union movement. Mark you, I do not undervalue the good he is doing in his present position, but I only wish to show that England is even more in need of speakers than America and that to take away John Turner would in my opinion be a very uncomradely act, to say the least. Besides, it is idle to talk about importing Comrade Turner: he cannot nor will he go to America, and if he ever does go, it will be in an independent way. This I can say with full authority. Since there are no other comrades in England capable of carrying on effective work in America (for we must not forget that to make a successful tour, one must not only be a good speaker, but also have a reputation as well, otherwise one may be an Antony and yet not draw a crowd in our "blessed land"), why not turn to domestic goods?

Comrade Morton is struggling hard to reach 'Frisco, and were it not for liberal assistance of a few individuals, and James' wonderful ability to feast on the "luxury" of a dish of Boston baked beans and two slices of bread a day, he might never have gotten as far as he did. Were our comrades so eager to have paid speakers in the field, why did they not help him? There is Voltairine de Cleyre who was ready to make a tour last spring, urged by Comrades Nold and Burmin who did there utmost to raise money for the purpose, and being unsuccessful in their efforts, the idea of her tour abandoned. Where were these comrades then? Comrade Southworth, a newly acquired power in our movement, an intellectual, highly cultured and brilliant speaker, who told me he would start out on the rout at once, if he could but have $5 per week. Why not invite him to tour? Are we Anarchists going to adopt the old and foolish notion that "prophets are seldom recognized in their own land," a notion that has driven many able men and women from the cradle of their birth to struggle and starve in the cold of strange lands, until they made a fame for themselves? Let me call your attention to Heine, Boerne, and scores of others who hated their people because of the cruel indifference they met with from their side. Let us Anarchists not be guilty of gross neglect of those in our own midst, because we can only appreciate the talents of comrades in other countries when we have helped to develop the abilities of those in our own ranks. In fact, how can those who are so anxious to import a speaker, expect that one would trust their promises, seeing how little they have done in aid of those who are right at their next door.

As to the idea of employing a speaker and paying him a fixed salary, I think this a thing for each one to decide for himself. I for one would never consent to make a business of lecturing. It seems to me that the work of a true propagandist cannot be paid; that the very thought of being paid for what one says, must rob one of the enthusiasm and devotion for our cause. I claim that one can only give the best of one's self when actuated by love to the thing one gives, out of one's innermost desire to be useful, to oppose that which one considers wrong, and such a product of one's thoughts, nerves, blood, and the whole make-up, is above any remuneration. I am aware that a propagandist cannot live on ideals, yet if the comrades would only extend more of the precious articles, so rarely found, hospitality and solidarity, and through voluntary contributions pay railway fares, one could easily tour from five to six months in the year, and that is more than any one ought to do, if he really is desirous to serve the cause.

And then, too, no comrade with individuality and sensitiveness would consent to become a wage slave of one's own kind. It is bad enough to have the enemy as a boss, tyrant and dictator, but I shudder when I think of having comrades as such; and I am sorry to say that we have already too many among us who perform the job of bosses and invaders to perfection.

What has happened to my friend Willie Holmes? He of all the people in the world to advocate Anarchistic judges and lawyers,—he whose whole nature would shrink from the thought of being employed as such himself to go so far as to cite a case of a man remaining an Anarchist, although he had become a proprietor of a house of prostitution! What is up? Has Willie's logic forsaken him? If, as an Anarchist, one may be a judge, juror and lawyer, why not a policeman, sheriff, hangman, spy, prostitute, politician, in fact, anything? And if so, why combat the capitalist regime, why oppose Vanderbilt, Spreckels, Rockefeller, Cecil Rhodes? What an absurd thing to say that if an Anarchist cannot consistently be a judge, he cannot be a wage slave! Holmes seems to forget that in one case no choice is left, in the other one can either remain true to himself or get a comfortable life at the expense of his fellow men and his real self, which is even worse.

I understand Anarchy to mean the negation of all forms of authority, invasion and robbery; an Anarchist, therefore, to be one who abhors all existing wrongs, because under no circumstances would he voluntarily consent to do the same. If I was mistaken, then I never knew the meaning of Anarchism. But I claim to understand Anarchy, and I am sure Holmes does, yet it seems his logic failed him and so leaped from the sublime to the ridiculous, which is but one step. Let us hope he will soon come back to the old heights. Really, I cannot understand the arguments of Holmes, unless he means the so-called Individualists when he speaks of Anarchist judges. If this is the case, I fully agree with him. Since they believe in private property, they must also believe in a force to protect their property; thus they are perfectly justified in becoming judges, lawyers and policemen. And outside of their opposition to compulsion, it must be borne in mind that the Individualists believe in a voluntary police. (Who laughs??) I for one could never see the logic of their claim to the term "Anarchists." I mean from a theoretical standpoint; for their practices differ as much from their theory as a blizzard from a warm summer breeze. Their actions are humane, warm blooded, kind, noble, very sympathetic and considerate, but no sooner do they leave the realm of life and wander into their theory than they become cold, calculating, bloodless, mere automatic machines. Such beings can be "Anarchistic judges," or anything you please, but never one whose heart throbs for mankind, and who is so full of the sentiment of solidarity that the very idea of pain or sorrow reflects upon his whole being.

A LETTER FROM EMMA GOLDMAN.

DEAR COMRADES.—I see that friend H. M. Kelly and A. D. (I have been "forbidden" to write the full name) have refuted my statement, in my report, that they are the leading spirits of the London movement, if one can speak of a movement in London at all, at the present time. Knowing how extremely modest both of our comrades are, I knew that they would object to my statement; although Kelly admits and has repeatedly told me that Miss D. was the worker, while Miss D. has admitted the same about Kelly. Now, I admit that modesty is a virtue; well it were if we had more of it; but there is certainly such a thing as being too virtuous, which is positively unhealthy; and friends D. and Kelly are just in that state, when they will not admit of a fact which is admitted by every one who knows what they are in the propaganda field. When I said that D. and K. are the leading spirits of the movement, I did not mean to undervalue either Comrade Cantwell, Marsh, Tcherkesoff or Legatte (by the way, I only saw the latter once; and while I was in London four months, never heard anything of his activity, by which I do not mean to say that he is necessarily inactive); I only meant by it, that D. and Kelly are pushing, proposing the plans, when anything is to be done, and that they are the ones who carry everything to the finish, from the organising of a social to a Commune demonstration, or the issuing of a manifesto. True, Miss D. is not a speaker; but what of that? I have long come to the conclusion that it is not through speaking we will ever change conditions; and that those who arrange things, who work quietly, who are ever ready to comfort, to cheer, to urge on, to dissuade, have done more for the cause than speeches or speech making. Both D. and K. have done all this toward me and others; and therefore I can only repeat, that if it were not for them, to urge the others on, very little indeed would be heard of Anarchy in London now.

Kelly refers to Comrade Kropotkin's work. Now, what Kropotkin has done is not what D. and K. are doing now; he is one whose work cannot be compared with the work of any one else; he has laid the cornerstone of modern Anarchistic ideas all over the world, and particularly in England; and yet with all his power and great genius, I venture to say that he has made more Anarchists among those who have had the pleasure to meet him, with his kindness and nobleness than with his books. This I do not say because of flattery for the man of letters; but because of admiration for the man with the big, pure heart and the simplicity of a child. In this, and not in talking lies the importance of one's work. (at least I think so) In this, too, lies the importance of the part both D. and K. play in London at the present time. Now, my dear Comrade D., and Harry—old chum, you can go on protesting all you like.

I shall soon be in a position to send in a report of our movement in Paris; but I can already tell you that the date of our Congress has been fixed for the 19th of September. The time is short, comrades; and if you wish to send suggestions or contributions, do it now.

Fraternally,

Paris, July 10. EMMA GOLDMAN.

Government is the cancer of society.

NEW MEXICO AND THE PHILIPPINES.

The Rutland Herald says:

We are not likely to have as much trouble with the native population of the Philippines as with our anti-expansionists, but the latter we certainly can take care of. They start out with a proposition which history does not warrant. They are wrong when they say that the United States did not acquire the Philippines because the people of those islands did not acquiesce in the cession, and that Spain alone could not convey the islands to us. It would be an exceedingly inconvenient theory for any nation to accept, and particularly so for the United States. The people of the great region we acquired from Mexico were not only not consulted, but they offered a strenuous resistance to annexation, particularly in New Mexico. In that territory the people made a determined effort to re-establish Mexican rule. One of the turned-down pages of American history relates to the summary way in which courtsmartial dealt with those who had broken their oath of allegiance to the United States. Logically if we are not in lawful possession of the Philippines through our not obtaining the acquiescence of their people to the cession, we are not in lawful possession of New Mexico, California and their dependencies, and must give them up.

All right, Mr. Herald. Put it on record; and let it be known—that's all we ask from any paper. It would be a good thing if some one could write up that secret history. The turned-down pages of history ought to be turned up again; nobody is suffering from too much light on the facts. What made them turn this one down, anyhow? Was it because those who wrote American history were proud of it? Is America now making a lot of history that future historians will want to turn down, in this Philippine business which you say is so like that turned-down page?

But I wonder whether this Philippine war will really be made more popular, by comparing it to the Mexican war. At the beginning of that war, Abraham Lincoln, then a member of Congress, introduced in Congress a resolution intimating that the war was intentionally provoked by the United States government. I wonder if there was then any Senator Spooner to say:

"Nobody but an 'anti-Imperialist,' who by his words and actions desired the dishonor of his country and the making of campaign material in a presidential year, could have so little of good faith as to make the brutal charge against the president of the United States that he had been responsible for the precipitation of hostilities."

During the Mexican war, James Russell Lowell wrote the original Bigelow Papers to satirise that war as both criminal and ridiculous. And General U. S. Grant, who fought in the Mexican war as a lieutenant, wrote of it in his old age, in his Personal Memoirs, that it was "one of the most unjust ever waged by a stronger against a weaker nation." So, if the Herald insists that Uncle Sam is acting as honestly now as he did then, there may be anti-Imperialists who will not care to deny it.

All the above facts are commended to the attention of those who hint that no man can be respectable, if he says that the government of his country is playing the part of a bully and a scoundrel, in some international affair.

CROWNS.

Ha! Ha! Emperor William III of Germany is an ingenuous humorist. To his troops departing for China: "Go forth! Spare none; take no prisoners; conduct yourselves so that no Chinaman will dare to insult a German for the next thousand years!" There were 4 000 of the German troops. There are 400,000,000 Chinese. It's simply horrible to punish a whole nation in such a bloodthirsty speech. Och! Meinselbst unt Gott!—Advance.

Senator Hoar has written another first class letter—for a statesman. But statesmen can't be real genuine men long at a time. They will call the government's action in the Philippines "a crime," and then turn right round and vote for the criminal. Such is life:—mixed with politics.—Rockland Independent.

We presume that if the stars and stripes happens to be carried ashore in China, while the "boys in blue are rescuing the missionaries," and looking after things in general, we will of necessity, claim the "slice" shadowed by the flag. It would be un-McKinley-like to take it away with the missionaries.—The People's Republic.

To insure McKinley's election, Hanna will not have the result declared till after the returns come in from London, Liverpool and other outlying republican precincts.—Pittsburg Kansan.

Mr. Astor, it is said, has taken offense at his exclusion from English society, and will return to the United States and become naturalized over here again. This is all right for Great Britain, but has Mr. Astor thought of what he is imposing on this country?—Freemen's Labor Journal.

besoin de mettre l'émancipation de la femme en ligne avec celle du prolétaire. Ce sera l'émancipation de l'être humain qu'il faudra dire. Dans ces termes la question est complète, et l'homme et la femme unis par la raison et fortifiés par l'amour, gravitant de révolution en révolution, iront sans cesse en se rapprochant vers l'idéal de l'Avenir.

C'est à cette œuvre d'éducation que syndicats et cercles d'études devraient avoir à cœur de s'attacher. En prenant les devants vis-à-vis des autres syndicats, nous espérons déterminer un mouvement que nous souhaitons voir progresser. Nous ne voudrions pas clore ce rapport sans dire un mot sur la co-éducation des sexes, qui constitue un des points essentiels de nos idées. Tout le monde se souvient de la tentative de M. Robin, il y a quelques années. Ayant compris que la réunion constante des deux sexes et l'équivalence de leurs fonctions sociales est, comme il le disait lui-même l'avenir heureusement inévitable vers lequel nous marchons à grands pas, il essaya d'appliquer ses idées.

Différents symptômes nous annoncent la prochaine réalisation de cette large manière de voir, malgré l'échec momentané dû aux jésuites et aux cléricaux. Et Robin avait raison et c'est précisément pour cela qu'il fut révoqué et dut même quitter la France.

Aujourd'hui le cléricalisme est tout puissant, et même dans les écoles laïques son influence perce. L'enfant grandit élevé loin des êtres et des influences normales qui plus tard se trouveront avec lui dans la vie. Ignorant la plupart des choses, son imagination torturée et hantée par des rêves malsains, font que plus tard, il sera la proie de ses cauchemars. Il vivra avec ses rêves, ignorant tout de la réalité. Les avantages de l'éducation en commun sont tellement incontestables, qu'en 1889, au Congrès de l'enseignement libre était adopté un vœu dans ce sens.

Cette méthode est d'ailleurs appliquée en Angleterre et en Amérique, et les résultats produits sont excellents. Elle prouve pertinemment que ce genre d'éducation n'a pas les inconvénients qu'on avait formulés, et qu'elle est au contraire un puissant stimulant pour le développement des intelligences, des études et de la moralité. C'est le meilleur moyen de mettre l'éducation des femmes en harmonie avec celle des hommes et, par là, constituer l'unité dans la famille.

Et au lieu de se contenter d'un enseignement officiel, propageons l'enseignement intégral et rationnel, ce sera le meilleur moyen de former plus tard des hommes et des femmes qui travailleront à leur émancipation. Et c'est ainsi que nous réaliserons une société composée d'individus conscients dont les rapports en bonne harmonie par le fait que la propriété n'existera plus.

Le problème social tient donc, dans la partie éducative, à ces deux questions primordiales, émancipation de la femme et co-éducation. Il importe à tous ceux qui veulent travailler dans le sens de la régénération sociale, de joindre leurs efforts aux nôtres et par là atteindre le but proposé.

AMÉRIQUE

J'ai appris que le concours apporté à notre Congrès par les camarades de l'Amérique et de l'Angleterre n'avait pas donné lieu à des conclusions très encourageantes, mais j'espère que cela ne vous a pas fait perdre foi dans le mouvement anarchiste américain ou anglais, et que vous n'en avez pas conclu à l'inaction ou à l'indifférence des camarades de ces pays. Je viens de terminer une tournée de propagande en Amérique qui a duré huit mois et pendant laquelle j'ai fait 240 conférences, visité 60 villes et parlé à 50, 60.000 personnes; de plus, j'ai fait une tournée de conférences en Angleterre et en Ecosse qui a duré quatre mois, et cette tournée, quoique moins fructueuse que la première, me permet néanmoins de vous assurer que les camarades, du moins les camarades de langue anglaise, d'Amérique et d'Angleterre, sont de tout cœur et de toute âme avec vous, dans votre projet d'organisation du futur Congrès, et qu'ils vont vous apporter leur concours, aussi bien matériel que moral. Le fait que vous avez reçu jusqu'à présent si peu de nouvelles d'eux tient aux différentes difficultés contre lesquelles nous avons à lutter aux Etats-Unis et en Grande-Bretagne.

Je tâcherai de vous donner une idée de notre situation actuelle, pour que vous puissiez mieux comprendre les difficultés de notre lutte. En ce qui concerne d'abord l'Amérique, je suis sûre que beaucoup d'entre vous connaissent plus ou moins le mouvement américain, j'entends le mouvement anarchiste parmi les Américains et non parmi les étrangers (en effet, quoique les anarchistes italiens, français, espagnols, tchèques et israélites soient plus nombreux et plus forts, ils n'ont pas d'intérêt pour nous, car pour pouvoir arriver à établir une société libre en Amérique, nous devons intéresser à nos idées les Américains mêmes). Mais vous ne connaissez ce mouvement que par les journaux, et vous pouvez ignorer ce fait, que le mouvement américain est encore dans son enfance — jeune par le nombre d'années et faible comme force, n'existant que depuis cinq ou six ans. Jusqu'alors le mouvement était entre des mains des étrangers qui, eux-mêmes, étaient ou bien des révolutionnaires tout court, ou bien des anarchistes par le nom et social-démocrates par les tendances. C'est depuis la première apparition du Firebrand (saisi par les autorités de l'Oregon et qui paraît maintenant sous le nom de Free Society) à San Francisco que nous avons commencé à nous frayer le chemin parmi la population américaine. Ce qui vient prouver ce que je dis, c'est le fait que les Trades Unions américains, les clubs sociaux et littéraires, les sociétés éthiques et philosophiques ne nous considèrent plus comme des jeteurs de bombes, des bêtes féroces, des ivrognes, des vagabonds non peignés et non lavés (idée qui a été créée par nos ennemis et leurs bouffons — organes de la presse quotidienne), mais nous invitent amicalement à faire nos conférences et écoutent avec intérêt l'exposé de la philosophie communiste-anarchiste. Cependant, comme les anarchistes américains ne sont pas nombreux et demeurent dans l'ouest, dans des pays comme le Colorado, le Texas et la Californie, il leur sera extrêmement difficile de réunir les 1500 francs nécessaires pour envoyer un délégué au Congrès (cela peut d'ailleurs coûter encore plus cher). Cependant nous n'avons pas abandonné l'espoir d'en envoyer un. Le camarade Pierre Kropotkine a récemment envoyé un article à Free Society pour expliquer l'importance du Congrès (ceci était absolument nécessaire parce que plusieurs anarchistes allemands ont entrepris une campagne contre l'envoi d'un délégué, et ont dénoncé le Congrès comme parlementaire) ; de mon côté, je ferai bientôt paraître un article dans le même journal, pour proposer les noms de quelques-uns de nos camarades comme délégués et pour ouvrir une souscription dans le but de recueillir la somme nécessaire. Avec le concours des camarades étrangers, surtout des anarchistes israélistes qui sont les plus forts et les plus actifs, nous espérons pouvoir envoyer un délégué américain au Congrès. Si toutefois nous n'y réussissons pas, nous sommes décidés à envoyer des rapports sur notre propagande et des considérations sur les idées en général. Les camarades W. Holmes. Morton, Nold et moi ont déjà commencé à travailler à nos rapports sur la Californie, Colorado, Texas, Missouri, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvanie, New-York et autres Etats de l'Amérique.

En Angleterre, les camarades ont formé ce que l'on a appelé le Groupe du Congrès, qui comprend les membres du Groupe de « Freedom », Kropotkine, Tcherkesof et autres. Ce groupe qui a pour secrétaire le camarade Charles, récemment libéré de neuf ans d'emprisonnement dans une prison anglaise, est en communication avec d'autres groupes semblables à Leeds, Glasgow et autres villes, dans le but de réunir les fonds pour le Congrès et de rédiger des rapports. Leeds a déjà réuni 300 fr. et le groupe espère en recueillir encore davantage. En tout, vous pouvez compter sur six délégués d'Angleterre.

En ce moment les camarades anglais doivent employer tous leurs efforts à tenir des meetings, à organiser des manifestations contre la guerre la plus cruelle, la plus brutale, la plus inhumaine, la plus injuste et la plus lâche conduite par une bande de grands voleurs et de boursiers, et sanctionnée par le monstre insatiable qu'est le gouvernement, contre une poignée de courageux fermiers qui luttent comme des lions pour leur indépendance et leur liberté.

Le premier grand meeting a eu lieu le 20 février, et je puis vous assurer que depuis longtemps on n'avait vu à un meeting de Londres autant d'enthousiasme et de juste indignation. Comme anarchistes, notre tâche principale est de lutter contre toutes les formes de l'injustice et de l'oppression. C'est pourquoi j'espère que vous allez vous joindre aux camarades anglais dans la plus vigoureuse protestation contre l'assassinat commis de sang-froid des admirables rebelles que sont les Boers, par l'armée anglaise, derrière laquelle se trouvent les voleurs Chamberlain, Cecil Rhode, Milner et les capitalistes anglais qui aspirent pour arriver aux mines d'or du Transvaal, à passer sur les corps sanglants, palpitants des Boers et de leurs familles.

A bas toutes les formes de l'injustice et vive notre amour pour l'indépendance et l'anarchie!

E. GOLDMAN.

ON THE FALL OF BONAPARTE.

I hated thee, fallen Tyrant! I did groan
To think that a most unambitious slave,
Like thou, should dance and revel on the grave
Of Liberty. Thou might'st have built thy throne
Where it had stood even now: thou didst prefer
A frail and bloody pomp, which Time has swept
In fragments toward oblivion. Massacre,
For this I prayed would on thy sleep have crept,
Treason and Slavery, Rapine, Fear, and Lust,
And stifled thee their minister. I know
Too late, since thou and France are in the dust,
That Virtue owns a more eternal foe
Than Force: Fraud, old Custom, Legal Crime,
And bloody Faith the foulest birth of Time.

THE PARIS CONGRESS.

Comrades and Friends:—The greatest enemies of improvement and progress will agree with me that the modern means of communication have done the world a lot of good; of course we must also take into the bargain the evil that some improvements carry with them. This is especially true of the cable system, which carries news as quick as lightning from one part of the globe to the other. It was already on the 14th inst. that the comrades of America were startled by the news of the suppression of our Congress; and only weeks later will they find out how and by whom it was done, as well as all other details. However, I hardly think that the suppression was much of a surprise to many people; rather would it have been surprising, if Congress were not interfered with. A German proverb says: "It is unwise to mention rope in the house of one just hanged." So we may well say about all in any way connected with the system of robbery and despotism. Just mention the word Anarchy, and terror seizes everyone, from the throne to the commonest policeman, from the multimillionaire down to the lowest shopkeeper living on the sweat of the people. Is it because they really think that every Anarchist is a bomb-thrower, or necessarily carries a dagger in his belt? Oh, no, they know better, they know too well that the majority of Anarchists by temperament detest bloodshed in every form. The real reason for the dread of all organized tyranny toward Anarchy, lies in the fact that Anarchism undermines the system of power maintained by each and every means, no matter at what cost; and therefore it must not be allowed to spread. "What fools these mortals be!" Here the champions of authority go on suppressing the growth of Anarchy, persecuting Anarchists, and in all their glorious idiocy failing to see that thereby they are doing more to provoke interest in the ideas they are so anxious to kill, than the ablest man in our movement.

That an Anarchist Congress was called at all, is really due to our naivete, to our child-like belief that some governments are better than others; that if our gatherings are suppressed in Germany, Italy, Spain, and Russia, they surely must be permitted in France, the country of which every wall reechoed with the cry "a la Bastille," "a bas le roi," "vive la Liberte, Egalite, Fraternite," "ni Dieu, ni Maitre," etc; that it would be allowed in Paris, the city of revolution, the history of which has been written with the blood of its people, the sons and daughters of which have stood on the barricades, days, nights, weeks, fighting and dying for Liberty; the city which holds out a warning to all crowned heads, in the Place de la Concorde, upon which Louis XVI and the beautiful Marie Antoinette were beheaded; the city which has built a monument on the site of the once hideous Bastille, to the memory of Camille Desmoulins, and the innumerable unknown who threw down the black walls in which France's grandest men lay buried for life; Paris, that can boast of a Montmartre, upon which the sons of the Commune bathed in the light of the setting sun, that is nowhere seen so beautiful as here, in all their grand and noble zeal, fought the last battle for Liberty; Paris, with its Pere la Chaise and the wall of the federals killed there by the whiskey and absinthe brutalized soldiers of Thiers and Galliffet, buried in one hole, and even now after thirty years kept alive by wreaths of flowers, ribbons and inscriptions of all those whose heart throb for Freedom; Paris, whose boys and girls from fifteen to sixteen years up to snowhaired men and women, vibrate with the memory of the past and the hope of the future; Paris, whose children have given the world all that human skill, dignity, and genius can produce, gathered in the Exhibition; and last but not least, Paris, the only city that is ruled by a "radical" government and a Socialistic minister.

Surely in this city, in which thousands of people from all over the world hold counsel with each other, we, the Anarchists, could come together and peacefully discuss. That must have been the thought of the comrades who signed the first call for the Congress, and all those who helped to organize and make it a success. Poor naive Touget, you who know, like no one else, how to reach the common people in their own tongue, and you Pelloutier, young genius that you are, with your success in organizing 300,000 men in a body to hold together and stand up for the principle of human independence, and you Domela Nieuwenhuis, with the Christ-like head, and the temperament of a child, loved and honored by all who know you, you who have raised your children as workingmen, although you have devoted your wealth to our cause, and all of you, who have worked for a year to make the Congress a success, you were wise enough to choose the Paris of the revolutionary spirit; but you were very unwise to forget the Socialistic ministry. Therefore you and I and all of us must stand the consequences.

The fact of the matter is, that no consequences of an unpleasant character have arisen. True, the Congress was prohibited; but what are prohibitions for, if not to be broken? And so the Congress took place, in spite of all and every order; on a smaller scale, that is true, but by no means less important. This will be seen by the results, of which some are already in print, and the others to follow.

The difference between a Socialistic and any other government is the hypocritical liberalism of the former, and the open despotism of the latter. Any other government would have suppressed our Congress in its embryo, or at least given some sign of its intent to suppress it; but the Socialistic ministry with "Comrade" Millerand at its head, who, to order to gain and keep his post, not only showed that he is just like his colleagues, but even worse than they, the same Millerand who has broken his promise as a Socialist by the very acceptance of the ministry, and who has proven a traitor to the cause of "class consciousness," at the shooting of the strikers at Martinique and Chalone sur Saone, and on many other occasions. Millerand and his ministry went the ordinary government one better. They let us go for a whole year; did not even watch over the arrangements carried on for seven months by the committee; waited until reports were sent from all parts of the world, all delegates were in Paris, and the last finishing touch given to the Congress, and the social arranged for the evening previous; and then came down with an order suppressing the Congress, and all meetings protesting against such infamy.

One must be blind not to see that the intention of Galliffet's partner was not so much to hurt Anarchism; for he is really too insignificant a figure to succeed in something in which the united despots have failed; but to prove to the French bourgeois, that they are really safer with a Socialistic ministry, than with one of their own.

As I have already said, no other government would have waited until the last moment, the more so, as it is absolutely against the French law to suppress a peaceful meeting openly held; but Millerand knew how to get over this difficulty. He simply searched out the "lois scelerates," issued in 1894, during the number of acts of violence committed; against all Anarchistic meetings and publications, setting them down as criminal. At that time, Jaures was deputy, and he was among the most vigorous opponents of such an infernal law. He since then helped Millerand to the ministry; and Millerand uses the same outrageous law his comrade and bosom friend opposed, as an excuse to suppress our Congress. Such are the ironies of life.

Tuesday morning the 18th inst. our secretary, Comrade Remy, was called to the prefecture de police, police headquarters; and there he was told, that neither the social nor the Congress could take place, by order of the ministry. (By the way, here it is not like in our own "free land," where every captain or policeman can stop a meeting; the police here do not enjoy such power, they only act upon the order of the ministry.)

Comrade Remy immediately notified all those comrades he could reach; and the others, unaware of the ukase, went to the social; and found the doors of the hall locked and the street blocked by police. We called a secret meeting for Wednesday afternoon, at which only a few could be present owing to the danger involved, and more to the lack of space, as we were to meet outside of Paris in a small room. There, than, huddled together in a stuffy room, in danger of being surprised by government hirelings, but with a zeal which knows no fear, were a few men and women, who have given the best years of their life for the cause, some having undergone years of privation, imprisonment, persecution and want, old in years and experience, but young in heart and spirit, ever ready to continue the fight for final human emancipation. Here we decided to hold several secret meetings, in order to discuss a few subjects of the many on the program for the Congress. But one of the first decisions was to protest most vigorously against the suppression of our Congress. In accordance with this, several French comrades arranged two meetings for Thursday afternoon and evening, in a hall called Maison du Peuple; but when we got there, the street was blocked by police, and one comrade, Libertas, arrested and brutally taken to the station. In the evening, the same spectacle of force and brutality, an increased force of police and detectives, with hidden cameras behind the windows of the hall, to photograph all those who came to protest.

Here I cannot help giving you a funny incident. M. Sully Prudhomme, a member of the Academy, the house of the forty immortals, into which a Zola is refused admission, a reactionary and hater of all progress, was driven to the Maison du Peuple by curiosity, and photographed. Now his glorious image hangs in the rogues' gallery at the prefecture de police, along with the pictures of the bravest and noblest men of France. Undoubtedly M. Sully Prudhomme never dreamed of such an honor; and in the future he will surely take care not to give way to curiosity, which is rather out of place for a man, especially a member of the Academy de France.

While we had our secret meeting outside of Paris, one of the trade unions of our Congress, the Bronze Workers, called a meeting of their own to protest against the suppression; but their meeting, too, was stopped, and the crowd dispersed by force. They have since manifested their protest through large posters posted all through Paris, denouncing the government, and declaring their intention of continuing the work of education and enlightenment, until the last vestige of tyranny is gone.

Another manifesto, of which I send you a copy for translation, and signed by the best known comrades of Paris, was issued on Friday, September 21, and spread all over town. As I already said, the public Congress of the International Revolutionary Workers was suppressed. Instead of that, four sessions were held secretly, to the peace of mind of all governmental cowards. However, be it said that no dynamite was fabricated, nor dagger sharpened at those meetings. The Revolutionists gathered from all over the world had really more important work to do, and higher aims to achieve than the removal of the heads of a few rotten kings.

to say, he has gone so far in his theory of non-resistance that the people in power do not fear him much, thinking his theories impossible of practice. But they have cause to fear the affect of his influence, because of the power he holds over the peasants of Russia. The poor look to him as their savior; and should he be imprisoned for standing up for justice, he would be more dangerous than now. An imprisoned or dead Tolstoi may exert more influence than a living one! We shall see.

To me Count Tolstoi is a prophet, and shows it by his life and words.

He is unique: born in a despotic government, he has become the most democratic man who ever lived; born where law is considered divine, he has renounced all governmental authority. Bred in the midst of luxury, and living with the nobility, he has disclaimed all titles and denied himself everything but the simplest food and clothing born to be waited upon by servents at every turn, and to tyrannize at will, he has become the brother and fellow laborer with the peasant: born with a great genius for literary labors, and able to win the applause of those in high places, he devotes much of his time to manual labor, and writes simply that "the people" may be helped: born with an eye for beauty, he abandons all ostentation, and shares his wealth—with his peasants.

Today we are living in a new epoch. This is a time when the great social questions are becoming a living power in the thoughtful world. When man's relation to his fellow-man is of paramount importance—when the struggle between capital and labor, exploiter and exploited is becoming better understood; when earnest thinkers on economics have written their message, and have thrown light upon the causes of the evils and abuses of society.

In this age, appear Tolstoi, Kropotkin, Marx, Whitman, Morris, Henry George, Edward Bellamy, and many others of less fame. They all saw the existing evils and inconsistencies of civilized life. No one man can detect all causes or give an infallible remedy but as all work together, the question is becoming simplified and plain.

The complex and inconsistent political economy of the conservative past, with its falsehoods and elaborate system, trying to prove black white, and selfishness the first law of society, is fast breaking away among those who investigate. Our theory of economics teaches that man is inherently a spiritual being, with noble impulses and unselfish propensities, that equity of opportunity is essential, in the name of justice, and private ownership of land or other property fatal to such equity, that men and women are brothers and sisters and not ravening wolves threatening to devour one another, that man can be saved by the hidden light of his God-given nature, if opportunities are such as to give him a chance to grow naturally, that freedom from restraint, other than the restraints of conscience, and labor, is necessary to perfect our individuality; that to have freedom, law becomes a hindrance to our highest expression of life; that education furnishes the means much more effectively, when not forced upon the individual, but when made an example and stimulus through right living and an appeal to the ideals and aspirations, that education is not to leave man or woman in ignorance concerning their natures, by keeping secret the uses and complexity of the sexual life—that education, freedom, and right ideals of love, can best remedy the awful sexual evils of society; and that cooperation, being the most economical way of regulating the material interests of society, does not necessarily mean a giving up our individuality, or trying to make of man a mere machine, forgetting that men are infinite in variety, and must not be moulded to suit the system of economics.

Tolstoi touches upon nearly all of these topics, and treats them in a thoroughly original way. He becomes an ascetic on the sex question; fails to see the train of events toward perfection, when he belittles art; and refuses to see the good coming out of some of our stumbling stones, such as machinery, monopoly and trusts, divorces, etc.

Nevertheless, he sees farther than any other man, and is the grandest and most unique character of modern times. He is living an upright and unselfish life, and working out the worst possible tangle of thought, brought about by the abuses of our so called Christian civilization.

He is using all of his mighty power to do away with selfishness, and legal tyranny and murder; and he is doing it by his life, and not alone by fine-spun theories. Every day, by every act, and by every word, he is making a protest against selfishness and injustice, such as will effect the world in a way we can little dream of. The seen forces alone are powerful; what of the vast mass of unseen power that no man can weigh or measure?

Let us learn of him, even though he is not correct in all of his theories. Surely in the essential things he is right; for he teaches that the golden rule is necessary between man and man, nation and nation. Evil begets evil: love begets love, example begets example. This is a law in the spiritual realm.

THE MISSIONARIES---AND OPIUM.

I shall be better able to appreciate Mr. Byington's criticism about Tien-te, (not "on missionaries,") when "specifications are forthcoming." He is at liberty to consider that the "demand" for them exists. But he has given in advance a few, to which I will reply now. I several times cited other authorities than Williams, and therefore can by no possibility have "given the impression that my statements about Chinese matters are all from the same source." I "repeatedly" said, as Byington remarks, that I would cite no other—meaning what? Obviously, each time I said so, that Williams was enough for the topic then in hand. I don't believe I have attributed "expressly" to Williams, any statement, important or unimportant, which Williams did not make, but I wait for "specifications."

The "rather important fact" I denied by saying it was "unstated," is that the Chinese Christians at Thistlemount did not tolerate idolatry. It is unstated in Williams' account of Thistlemount, vol. ii, ch. xxiv, p. 580. If any such statement can be incidentally found somewhere else, I shall still doubt it—not because such conduct would be at all unlike Christians generally; but because these particular Christians notoriously acted with idolatrous patriots, all through their heroic struggle for liberty, toleration, and a higher social state.

"The rather important matter I denied by saying I had looked carefully through Williams and not found it, is a list of Protestant martyrs in China, outside the Taeping movement. I have looked again, and cannot find it yet. But I do not deny it may be there. I found the Catholic martyrs easily enough.

That the early Protestant missionaries to China were not all in the employ of the opium trade, I will be happy to believe, when Mr. Byington, or somebody else, tells me about one who wasn't. Does Mr. Byington mean to deny that Morrison's employers were opium smugglers, or that Gutzlaff, probably the most famous propagandist of the bourgeois gospel in China, was an opium smuggler himself? (See Williams, vol ii, pp. 308 of 578; and see 339.

And why should Mr. Byington say I suppress all the creditable facts on one side, or all the discreditable on the other? Did I suppress the fact that Morrison's Chinese dictionary is a great and useful work? Is the fact that Tien-te was ignorant enough to think he could marry the Virgin Mary's sister? I give the Protestant missionaries full credit for being ashamed of their share in the opium trade, and acknowledged that their pet cannibal, "Chinese" Gordon,—whom I am glad to see Mr. Byington does not attempt defending—was angry with his native colleague about the Suchau massacre. I only added that they could scarcely feel otherwise.

The last paragraph in Mr. Byington's critique implies that I, an Anarchist, inconsistently praised Tien-te, a statesman and warrior. I reply that I praised him only so far as he deserved it. The best title I gave him was "a Christian martyr." If I had said "an Anarchist martyr," the case would have been different. I know he was not that. But statesmen and warriors have been too common among Christians to allow demur because one of the former is classed with the latter and surely the epithet of martyr is justly given to one who died for his religion, after being identified with its cause during many years.

The Trust or Water Lily Society, which Byington accuses me of confounding with the Taoists, is as much a part of Taoism as Anabaptism was a part of the Reformation. To prove this would require a good many words, but it is evident enough to one who knows the characteristics of the larger Chinese religions. See Douglas, "Confucianism and Taoism"; Rhys Davids, "Buddhism"; Williams, ch. xxviii.

THE PARIS CONGRESS.

At the meetings, we discussed and organized a Bureau of International Correspondance, or International Federation, based upon national federation, for the purpose of better acquainting each other with the economic, political and ethical state of the movement in each country, and the practice of the principle of solidarity. To accomplish the former, each country is to issue a quarterly bulletin, to be sent to all countries, and those to do the same. In this way, it is hoped, the comrades will keep in touch with each other, which has so far not been the case. As to the latter, it certainly has been sadly neglected so far. Comrades come to a strange land, the language of which they did not know, and without means or friends, they often have been near starvation. This is to be done away with through the International Bureau. So when a comrade comes to Paris, London, Madrid, or Constantinople, he will know where to find friends. I cannot dwell upon this matter elaborately in this report, but I can promise the comrades, they will learn more about it soon.

The second matter discussed and decided upon, was the publication of all the reports sent to the Congress in book form; but as we have not enough money to do it right now, the reports will be published in the supplement of Les Temps Nouveaux, the plates set aside and a book made out of all the plates when ready. For this, money is needed, and I herewith appeal to all the comrades in America, to put their hands into their pockets, and send on their mite to the secretary, whose name and address will be given in a week or so.

We have received ninety reports on all possible subjects, and although only twenty or twenty-five are in the form of an essay; yet the others are not less interesting, and will be published in a resume.

The third and last thing decided was to issue a manifesto, together with all the subjects on the program for the Congress, the names of all reports and the nationalities of those who have taken part, to be published in L'Aurore, a radical daily in Paris, Les Temps Nouveaux and Libertaire. These are to be sent to all the trades unions, that were to participate, with a request to send on the papers to the trades unions of the world, asking them to protest with us against the suppression of the Congress of the International Revolutionary Workers of the World.

To give you an idea of the vast amount of work done for the Congress, a list of subjects for discussion and reports sent in will be given next week.

CIVILIZATION AND BURGLARY.

The story that comes from Peking from the pen of Edward Wiltman, The Examiner's special commissioner to China, is one to cause the Christian nations to blush with shame. Their troops went into China as the representatives of Western civilization and Western morality to enforce the rights of ambassadors, and to punish the crimes of which the Chinese had been guilty. The troops turned aside from their high mission to become burglars and murderers. The accounts show that they broke into every house that promised to contain anything of value, stole what they wanted, destroyed what they did not want, and killed any of the Chinese who objected.

The justification alleged for this sort of work is the horrid crimes of the Chinese who attacked the legations and butchered Christian converts. But punishment that does not seek to distinguish innocent from guilty, and is inflicted through murder and robbery, does not inspire respect. If it is the best that Western civilization can do in that line, we cannot honestly say that it is far superior to the methods of the Boxers whose ferocity brought about the troubles in the Orient.—San Francisco Examiner.

Literature.

The Wedding Night. By Ida C. Craddock. Denver, Colo., Ida C. Craddock, 1563 California St. Price 50c.

This little book will startle many by its plainness of speech on the details of sex companionship. It is, however, written with an earnest purpose, and from the standpoint of what the author believes to be ideal purity. Not having the fear of Comstock before her eyes, she does not hamper her advice with the prudish reticence which renders many works of similar purport almost worthless. There is much that is admirable and instructive in the treatise, as well as the exposition of certain striking theories which will not be accepted by all readers.

laying out of a city on a smoydering volcano, and the allurement of victims into it. Human forethought was able to provide against this disaster, by placing the cotton shipping wharves in some spot safe from such storms. If you say no such spot exists on the Texas coast, I say ship the cotton to New Orleans. But commercial and speculative greed must ever find ways for rapid and enormous gains, regardless of the number of victims necessitated thereby.

"The unchained tiger is let loose; and who shall expect him to bear himself otherwise than as the beast society has made of him?" asks Comrade Morton. The ordinary editor says "the beast he is," and adds "unless held in check by the strong arm of the law;" and acting on that a soldier boasted that he only had fifteen cartridges when he went on night patrol; and each one got a man, because he like Comrade Morton, looked upon these men who were "pillaging the dead for private gain," as "ghouls" and "beasts," and yet, to me, that soldier was much more of a beast than any of his victims.

Let us look the facts in the face, and not be afraid of logical conclusions.

There was no reason for the founding of Galveston, but speculation. There was no reason for continuing it, after its waterfront had repeatedly been damaged by storms, but greed of private gain. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that many of the pillagers were men grown desperate from privation and only saw in it a hope of temporary relief from their sufferings.

HENRY ADDIS.

COMMENT.

Comrade Addis seems to be so anxious to find fault with something, that he must needs pick out a few sentences, apart from their context, and miss the entire trend of the article in question. His screed, therefore, demands little attention. Much of it, although in the form of an attack, is in substance a mere reiteration of the points I had already made. As to the remainder, a few lines will suffice, since I propose to propose to ignore the personalities, which do him little credit.

Anarchy is a well-grounded philosophy, based on social, economic, and historical facts. It does not need to play the part of a scolding old woman, on every conceivable occasion. We are not so deficient in evidence of the criminality of the capitalist system, that we need to hold it accountable for every great convulsion in nature. The people of Galveston might have taken greater precautions; but they could not have foreseen or prevented the tidal wave. It was an unsafe place on which to build, but it is in human nature to take risks, especially when the danger appears somewhat remote. Commercial greed accentuates, but does not create this tendency.

As to the "elemental passions," the misrepresentation is too gross to require refutation, except by quoting a few lines from the original article:

> In a regime which exalts private property as the main object of existence, why should not the dead yield up their treasures to the living, who alone have need of them? Why should we, whose whole civilization is based on the lust for gold, shudder at the ghoul who plunders the dead, to satisfy his greed? It is the law of commercialism that the weak shall give way to the strong, the simple to the clever, the straightforward to the crafty. With such principles instilled into them from childhood, taught to regard their fellowmen as rivals and enemies, what marvel that in such hours of great convulsions, when it is no longer necessary to keep up appearances, men throw the mask aside? The unchained tiger is let loose; and who shall expect him to bear himself otherwise than as the beast society has made of him?

The whole article must, however, be read, in order to perceive how grossly its meaning has been distorted. Let it be well understood that we can fight capitalism, and fight it to the death, without holding it responsible for the Charlestown earthquake, Vesuvius eruptions, or Kansas cyclones.

THE MONEY-MAKING MACHINE.

A superlatively bad man; a robber of labor, a wholesale murderer, a king, exclaimed many centuries ago, "O Lord our Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him?"

Nineteen centuries of superstition, called for a purpose Christianity, enables us to answer the question without a moment's hesitation. Man is nothing but a money-making machine; and David's Lord does not care a damson" about him. The land-lords, the money-lords, and the profit-lords are mindful of men as so many cogs in the wheel that grinds out dollars, just so much and nothing more. They teach Labor to to be content with the position in which god gold has been pleased to place him; and the fools accept their doctrines; so the "lords" proceed to take away the dollar from him that hath but one and give it to him that hath ten million, in accordance with Biblical ethics. "Take therefore the dollar from him, and give it unto him that hath ten million. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not much shall be taken away even that which he hath." Thus we see that trusts are the Lord's own appointing

There is but one question before the world today—money, and the sole purpose of Churchianity and superstition is to maintain a governing class, and by chicanery and cajolery compel the only useful class—Labor—to submit to be robbed, so that the worse than useless class may live in idle luxury.

If Debs, Bryan and McKinley are unable to govern themselves, they are certainly not to presume to govern others; the fact of their being church-members proves their inability to govern themselves; for they thus place themselves under the direction or government of some parasite, who makes a pretence of being a guide to heaven or a protector from hell fire. Parsons carry on this business by the combination scheme of credit and cash, but we notice when the cash part falls off, they are apt to leave the spiritual business for that of real estate agent or insurance solicitor, both of which are also parasitical and pharisaical, thus retaining the old association of earth, heaven, and fire, so that the break is not abrupt or sudden, or extreme as at first sight appears; and of course the ultimate aim is the same, the only question of the age—money.

The glorious system of stars for the police and stripes for, and robbery of the workers has made such progress that ninety-seven per cent of the men of the United States, who have reached the age of sixty, are reduced to the grade of paupers, dependent on their families, friends, or the kind public who are taxed for their maintenance. O Devil our Devil, deliver us from such Christian civilisation.

THE PARIS CONGRESS.

The subjects for discussion were as follows: Communism and Anarchism —Communism and Individualism.—Organization Between the Anarchist Communistic Groups of the Same Country, and Foreign Countries, for the Purpose of Organization, an International Bureau of Correspondence, Each Group Retaining its Absolute Autonomy —The General Strike.—The Attitude of Communist-Anarchists towards anti-Semitism, Zionism, Tolstoism, Co-operation and Neo-co-operation.—The Sex Question —Woman Suffrage.—Different Means of Propaganda.—The Position of Anarchist-Communists towards War, Riots, and Insurrections.—Formation of Groups for Mutual Aid and the Practice of Solidarity.—The Publication of an International Magazine.—The Land Question —The Tactics of Social Democrats, Including all Factions of the Parliamentary Parties, towards Anarchists,

All these subjects were discussed among the Anarchists the world over, and opinions and reports sent in by groups and individuals who could not attend the Congress.

The following reports were sent in. The present State of Our Movement in Different Countries.—A Short History of the Movement in America, by Wm. Holmes. —The History of the Jewish Movement in America, by Dr. M. Cohn.—The State of the Movement at Present, by James F. Morton, Jr.—The Movement in Philadelphia, by Voltairine de Cleyre —The Movement in Denver, by Lizzie M. Holmes.—The Movement in Providence, by J. H. Cook —An Essay on the Effects on the Movement of the Judicial Murder of Our Comrades in Chicago, by Lizzie M. Holmes.—A Report from St. Louis, by the International Association of Machinists. —A Report on the Ways and Means to Arrange Successful Propaganda-tours through the States, by E. G. —Report of the Movement in Argentine and Uruguay.—Report on the French Workingmen's Party, by Gustave Lefrancais.—Report of the Group Social, from Epinal, France.—Report on the Movement in Italy.—Report on the Movement in Switzerland, by the Revolutionists of Lausanne.—Reports on the Movement in Norway, Holland, Greece, etc.—Anarchism and the Church, by Elisee Reclus.—The Revenge of Society, So-called Justice.—Essay on Organization, by the Students of the University De la Nature.—Evolution of Socialist Parties, by the Group Freedom, London.—Essay on small Industries in England by Peter Kropotkin.—Essays on Communism and Anarchism, by Peter Kropotkin, and others.—Essay on Communism and Individualism.—Different Ways of Propaganda in Trade Unions, by different authors.—The Propaganda through Literature and the Stage.—Propaganda by throwing Protest Ballots, a Report expressing hostile Views towards It, by Italian Comrades.—Report on the Formation of Funds for the Liberation of Imprisoned Comrades, and International Resistance in Case of Lockouts, by E. V.—Essay on the Unemployed and their Part in the Social Movement, and the Means of the Struggle, by the Group Equals of Jura, Switzerland.—Essays on Anarchistic Education, by different authors.—Essay on Responsibility and Solidarity, by M. Nettlau.—The Woman Question and Woman's Co-Education, by the Students E. S. R. I. and the Bronze Worker's Union.—Essays on the Sex Question, by Kate Austin, Viroqua Daniels, S. H., H. Addis, James F. Morton, Jr., E. G., Paul Rohen, and others.—Reports on the Anti-Militarist Propaganda.

Nationalities were present: Bohemia 2, Germany 1, Switzerland 1, Italy 1 (more were to come, but were not permitted to enter France), Russia 1, England 6, Spain 2, Holland 4, Belgium 1, America 5, and a large number of delegates from all parts of France. Letters were received from Sweden, Norway, Bulgaria, Greece, Argentine Republic, and other parts of the world.

"Anarchy is dead," we are continually told; but it does not seem so from the above reports and persons attending the Congress, does it? And when we take into consideration that those who were in favor of the Congress taking place at all, were but a few in comparison with the large number who were against it, then we can say that Anarchism lives indeed, in spite of all persecutions, imprisonments, and laws against us. Yes, the Congress was suppressed; and a few comrades had to suffer on account of it: Libertad, the one I already mentioned, and Nino Samaja expelled, maybe others to follow; but the work for the Congress lives, and will bear fruit.

In conclusion, I must not forget to mention the contemptible part the Socialist papers, La Petite Republique, the journal of Millerand, and the Petit Sou, the journal of the Marxists, have played. The Petite Republique at first ignored the suppression entirely; and when it took notice, it was only to throw slurs upon the organizers, in saying that the Congress was not suppressed at all, but that the story was invented by ourselves; and when the worthy editors were asked how they dared to act like that, they answered: "Do you think we are going to give the Marxists a weapon against us, by defending the Anarchists?" No comment necessary to such detestable behavior, is there? The Petit Sou at first also said that the Congress was not suppressed. Some of our comrades telephoned to the ministry to inquire, and were told the order stands. When they were asked why the order was issued, they replied, "It is our pleasure." Enough reason for a Socialistic ministry, think you? The Petit Sou has since denounced the suppression, not because its editors are in favor of the Anarchists, but because they are having a fight with the Millerand-Jaures gang, and anything that is likely to serve the purpose of politicians is employed, even defending Anarchists, although only a short time ago, these politicians, timesdes at their head, caused the arrest and sentence to hard labor of comrade G. Morton, who died in prison. Morton having fled from Paris, happened to be at a meeting in which Guesdes denounced him as a police spy; and although he knew that he must not come forward, risked arrest, and defended himself publicly. So you see that our Socialist "friends" are ready to help the police against us one moment, and defend us the next, if it is beneficial to their own petty game. However, I hardly think we need their defence. We shall carry on our work ceaselessly and tirelessly; for we are working in a beautiful cause.

Isn't it ridiculous to express sympathy for the Boers, Filipinos, or Chinese, when we know that the masses are not fighting for liberty, but for Oom Paul Kruger, Aguinaldo or Li Hung Chang on one side and Queen Vic and a host of parasites on the other; and of a kind both stood for the present unjust system? 5

Accordingly the Chicago martyrs were also hypocrites; for they wanted to reform society politically, to reach just economic conditions. 6) I admit that there are inconsistent members in the Socialist ranks; but we Anarchists must not claim to monopolize the virtue of consistency and justice. 7)

The disaster of Galveston would occur only once under Socialism; for there, like in a state claimed by Anarchists, the human abode would be built in safe places, as far as human minds could select; there would be no need for commercial centers, but only for centers of industries; and there would be no need for the workers to crowd their houses around the places where they work as at present, for they would have the time and means to go to and from their work.

Yes, comrades, Anarchy and Socialism are twins, born from the same mother, to bring them to maturity. Toleration must be the nurse. It don't help the cause to split hairs and hunt flaws. Meet the enemies where we can; and when we do, we shall combine our strength to teach them a lesson.

When we unite for action, we command respect, and are sure of an early success.

Practice what you preach—toleration.

COMMENT.

1. Here is where Comrade Boteheck mistakes the Anarchist position. We in no by any means class all political Socialists as hypocrites. In fact we respect and esteem many sincere workers among them. But we surely have a right to criticize methods which we believe to be unsound. Authoritarian acts can never form "the threshhold" of liberty. We oppose political action, because it is based on false principles and ineffective in its results. But we do not denounce as "hypocrites" those honest Socialists who are following their own sincere convictions. We merely point out the fact that Anarchists cannot consistently join hands in methods which are so clearly opposed to the aims of our propaganda.

2. It is this "true Socialism" "without any position in it," for which Anarchism stands, and which political Socialists are going the wrong way to secure.

3. We do not dispute the sincerity of our Socialist friends—we simply question their judgment.

4. We expose certain facts as showing the corrupting influence of politics. We do not condemn the rank and file, but explain how they are misled.

5. It is not "ridiculous" to express sympathy with all who are resisting invasion, whatever may be their own shortcomings.

6. The Chicago martyrs had found the uselessness of political action and neither taught nor practiced it.

7. By no means, but if we are convinced of the correctness of our principles, we should show ourselves "inconsistent" in deserting the plain path to attack they point.

8. "Toleration" by all means, but not compromise. It is not intolerant to defend our principles. Free Society gives more space to opponents, in proportion to its size, than any Socialist paper in the country. We are always ready to "hear the other side." How many Socialist papers can say the same?

FROM THE PARIS CONGRESS.

The secret Conference held in Paris by the revolutionary Socialists and Anarchists of different countries of the world declares itself in favor of federation among the revolutionary groups. The Conference invites the groups of Paris, who have taken the initiative in organizing the Workers' Revolutionary International Congress, to remain united, in the hope that in all centres of population, revolutionary groups, libraries, studying clubs, etc., will come to an understanding on the basis of Communism and the Social Revolution, and on the principles of the liberty and autonomy of the groups. The Conference invites the revolutionary groups of all countries to establish by provincial or national congresses, or by other means, provincial, national and international bureaus of correspondence. These bureaus of correspondence will have for their aim the binding together and the consolidation of the relations between the comrades, to make their understanding more effective, not omitting the necessary precautions.

The English groups are invited by the International Conference to prepare on a date to be fixed later, the convocation of an international revolutionary workingmen's congress to be held in England, as the country where there is more liberty than in France (the same farce I think I do) in spite of the absence of a ministry for the defence of the republic, with Social Democratic or radical Socialist ministers. The Conference regrets greatly not to be able to reach all the foreign delegates, and to have been unable to put itself in communication with all the groups in Paris, and the many delegates from the many French provinces. It has already been very difficult to unite, in spite of the French government, and to blind the Paris police.

CHORDS.

It is often urged, in extenuation of the existence of wealth, that it enables men work harder and longer hours. (Let these also be granted.) But does the character of work have nothing to do with the matter. The most skilful, deep-rooted hate I have ever met lodgers work hard. Is it well that justly they have plenty? They take from others without producing or giving an equivalent. So do all those who possess great fortunes. The working people support the wealthy—the wealthy do not support the working people.—Appeal to Reason.

The workmen spoke the language of slaves. They had got the habit of their enslavement. The workingman perhaps has been, grown old, and died a hopeless grave. The rich lived on the wealth he created.—Social Democratic Herald.

"Is marriage a failure?" "I reckon I say not," remarked an Oregon farmer. "Why there's Hannah gits up in the mornin, milks six cows, gits breakfast, starts four children to skewl, looks after three more, feeds the hens, likewise the hogs, likewise the motherless sheep, skims 20 pans of milk, washes clothes, gits dinner, et cetery, et cetery! I could hire anybody to do it for what she gits much! Marriage, sir, is a success—a great success." Woman's Journal.

The Letter-Box.

J. A., Philadelphia, Pa.—To do as you suggest, would entail a great amount of extra labor each week applied to all subscribers. The numbering system is simple that any subscriber can see where he stands at a glance.

S. F. B., Shelburne, Vt.—Nothing was as intentionally omitted from your article. On looking up the matter I find one unimportant phrase left out by accident.

L. L. L., Cincinnati, O.—Free Communism involves no discrimination against mental workers, and condemns nobody to starvation. It assumes well-being to all, and only asks that each assist in the perpetuation of the common prosperity, by contributing according to his ability. In the absence of parasitism and exportation, the amount of manual labor which each would perform would be merely enough for healthful exercise, leaving abundant time and strength for intellectual exertion. Moreover, the right of secession from the Commune would always be open to the dissatisfied individual. There is no room for tyranny here. Under Anarchism, the Communistic method could only exist, while it secured the liberty and prosperity of all. If any better method could be devised, the individuals would make haste to adopt it.

J. D., Newark, N. Y.—I congratulate you on your keen sense of humor, which enables you to see a "joke" in the exposure of your own inconsistency. Your own book is so keen a refutation of your present attitude, that no other is required. You are not called on to choose either Bryan or McKinley. If others are foolish enough to do so, you need not share the responsibility. If you read your Bible more carefully, you would find that the correct translation of the passage you cite is: "Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness," which would hardly sustain your deduction. Without admitting any divine authority on the part of the Bible, I submit to your careful if not prayerful consideration the passage, "He that is not for me is against me", in the light of which a re-reading of "Life Without a Master" is to be recommended.

W. F., Los Angeles, Cal.—How can the truth be brought out, except by a free interchange of ideas? No one of us is infallible, and only a searching criticism can bring many a plausible fallacy to light. Free speech for all sides is the surest road to a progressive propaganda. The alternative is a pope, who is incapable of error.

An interesting book on an interesting subject. As to its accuracy and reliability those who have investigated the subject most thoroughly must judge for themselves. At 1,000 miles Elkes led; 40 hours and 50 minutes.

Still the bicycles continue their fast, incessant whirl around the sloppy ten-lap track in Madison Square Garden, and still the enthusiasm by day and night continues with unabated ardor.

The galleries contained more persons last night than at any other time since the start of the race, and event the top tier had its fringe of rooters hanging half way over the balcony with eyes glued upon the backs of the whirling racers below. The more expensive seats and most of the boxes presented an unbroken sea of faces, and every spurt of the racers was promptly acknowledged by encouraging cheers from the crowd.

The features yesterday were the loss of first position by one of the former triumvirate of leaders and some sensational spurts in the evening, in which the German team, Kaser and Ryser, picked up a lap and Aronson soon after did the same thing.

Neither of these teams are among the leaders; in fact, the Germans are next to the end but less than a mile separates them from the head men, and the fact that a lap could be picked up, with the others holding to their stiff pace of nearly twenty miles an hour, is significant in showing that possibly the last may be first.

It demonstrates that the riders who have endured forty-eight hours of hard riding are in excellent condition, notwithstanding the appearance of weariness on some faces, and it opens possibilities of future surprises.

Gougoltz, the plucky Frenchman, was dropped from his leading place with Elkes and Pierce, which he, with his partner, Simar, have held since the first hour, shortly after 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He had the misfortune to break his tire, and, as Simar was in his training quarters at the time, several valuable seconds were lost before Gougoltz could be placed on another wheel.

Elkes and McEachern, who were riding for their lives, dashed ahead like mad in

DR. STANTON COIT'S LECTURE.

The Speaker Undertakes to Give Reasons for "the Failure of Democracy."

Dr. Stanton Coit was the principal speaker last evening at the regular meeting of the Social Reform Club, at University Place. The subject of the address was "King Demos—the Failure of Democracy."

Dr. Coit stated at the outset that he had been incorrectly reported as saying in Philadelphia that "our workingmen should have no voice in government," and that "Democracy is a synonyme for corruption." Neither of these statements, he declared, had been made by him.

A better title for the lecture," said Dr. Coit, might be "Is Democracy a Failure?" Great changes had taken place during the last ten years among the Western nations, and the greatest, the speaker considered, was the growing distrust of government by the people. Anarchy was feared if the people should come to power. Even the Liberal Party in England has ceased to believe in the principles of democracy.

Democracy is now a failure because it is based on false principles. The ideal democracy must be an enlightened democracy. It was only the old aristocracies that sought to keep the people in ignorance for selfish motives. The American workingman to-day is the leader in the true democracy of the future, but he is not now in condition to vote. He is not a freeman at the polls; he must vote the way his employer votes. He is illiterate. He has not the leisure nor the education to study economic questions. Present conditions, therefore, are anti-democratic, anti-human, and must be improved before the true democracy can exist.

Dr. Coit believes in expansion and imperialism, if done in the cause of the propaganda of a socialistic democracy and if efforts are made to elevate the Filipino to the equal of American manhood. The only remedy for political evils, he said, is the teaching of a new democracy and the educating and elevating of the workingman.

RENTED BY EMMA GOLDMAN.

Proprietor of Everett Hall Warned Social Science Meeting Against Anarchy.

At the Social Science mass meeting in Everett Hall, 31 East Fourth Street, last night, the proprietor of the hall, Harry Bimberg, threatened to turn out the lights should the meeting develop into one of Anarchistic tendencies. He said that Emma Goldman had rented the hall from him by concealing her identity. The hall was crowded and the announcement of the proprietor was received with a howl of protest.

Emma Goldman said Bimberg was influenced by fear of the police. She stated that this only went to prove her contention that there was no liberty, personal or otherwise, in America, and that under "your Platts, your Crokers, and your Hannas there can be no such thing as liberty, any more than there is in the Republic of France to-day."

"King Humbert," she said, "was justly put to death by a brave man, who dared to act for the good of his fellow-men, among whom he considered himself but a unit in a universe." She said she should hate to be in the shoes of a monarch or of President McKinley, owing to the "fickleness of the masses."

THE ANTI-TAMMANY FIGHT

Big Meeting in Cooper Union by the Vigilance League.

LETTER FROM DR. PARKHURST

Efforts Should Be Concentrated Against One Boss This Year—Police Corruption Exposed.

A mass meeting at Cooper Union under the auspices of the City Vigilance League last night was the occasion for a gathering that nearly filled the large hall. There was considerable enthusiasm at times, the demonstration reaching its height at the conclusion of a speech by Dr. Adolph M. Radin of the Society for the Aid of Jewish Prisoners, who maintained that the immigrants had not corrupted New York, but that New York had corrupted the immigrants.

An unusual feature of the meeting was the reading of the platform by several thousand persons. It was Frank Moss who, in the course of his speech, said:

"I'll help you to make a speech and you help me. We will read the platform together." Then the audience read the following:

Our city is our home, and on it we will concentrate our patriotism. We love it and will work for it, fight for it, and live for it.

We will attack as traitors to the Commonwealth those officials who prostitute their offices for partisan or personal gain, and those politicians who manipulate them "for their own pocket's sake."

We will help to deliver it from the selfish and corrupt rule that now oppresses, injures, and disgraces it, and to install a pure, efficient, and non-partisan administration.

We will endeavor to bring all honest citizens into closer relation and deeper sympathy with each other, so that religious, racial, and social differences shall melt away in the warm brotherhood of good citizenship struggling to redeem its home from vicious misrule.

"Are we all brothers on that?" asked Mr. Moss.

"Yes, yes!" was the answer from all parts of the hall.

Charles Stewart Smith, Chairman of the meeting, said in part: "We, as citizens of New York, must look upon our citizenship with some degree of shame. It will be no child's play to redeem the city. The forces of bad government in this city are largely responsible for the falling off of our commerce. This is the most expensive city in the world to do business in. The extravagance in government increases rents and makes the wage-earner pay more for all that he buys. We must change those conditions."

Thomas L. McClintock was made Secretary of the meeting, and read letters from the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, George Gunton, the Rev. Hutchins C. Bishop, Gen. George Moore Smith, the Rev. Dr. Malthie D. Babcock, John Harsen Rhoades, the Rev. Dr. F. J. Belcher, Henry H. Dreyer, the Rev. Dr. Robert L. Paddock, Constant A. Andrews, the Rev. Dr. W. H. Brooks, and H. W. Donald.

A communication from the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst was then read, in which he said:

First—That every other enemy to our municipal well-being should be forgotten in the concentration of our onset upon Tammany Hall. Croker is the only "boss" to be thought about this year. The experiment was tried three years ago of killing off both

SEASON'S FIRST SNOWFALL

Thin White Coating Covered Streets and Bothered Horses.

Shipping Decked with Icicles—One Sleigh Turns Out in Central Park and Wins the Champagne Prize.

With the imperceptible rise in the temperature yesterday came the first snow of the year. There have been flurries on one or two occasions; but they were of such brief duration and the snow was so insignificant in quantity that they were hardly noticed. Yesterday, while the fall was not heavy, there was sufficient to cover the housetops and streets with an apparently substantial yet in reality very thin coating.

It was 2 o'clock in the afternoon when the fall began. It lasted for about two hours, and made the thoroughfares, especially those of asphalt, very difficult to travel. Numerous vehicles were put out of gear, owing to the horses, not shod in accordance with the rules of wintry weather, being unable to keep their feet.

Nobody thought the snow would come down hard enough for a sleigh and horse to trot around in, but John J. Quinn, a Harlem liveryman, thought of the bottle of champagne Mr. Case offers to the first man who reaches McGowan's Pass Tavern

NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE. WEDNESDAY. DECEMBER 12. 1900.

DURYEA'S CHARACTER ATTACKED.

TESTIMONY INTRODUCED IN EFFORT TO SHOW THAT HE WAS NOT FIT TO MAKE A WILL.

Mineola, Long Island, Dec. 11.—Testimony was taken in Surrogate Seabury's Court to-day in the reopening of the contest of Edgar E. Duryea's will. J. Campbell Thompson, counsel for the three daughters, who are the contestants, said Mr. Duryea, enraged because his wife had bequeathed everything to her children, had led a dissipated life, and had, in making his will, discriminated against his daughters.

Willard S. Klein, of No. 943 Belmont-ave., Brooklyn, testified that as an employe of the Grant Brothers' brokerage firm he had become well acquainted with Mr. Duryea, as the latter had often spent the greater part of the day in the firm's office. The two had often visited saloons together. They used to visit Steve Brodie's and McGurk's. The witness had often taken Mr. Duryea to Long Island City and put him in charge of a brakeman for Glen Cove. Witness had known him to drink about forty glasses of whiskey on such a trip. Klein was cross-examined by Robert A. Honeyman.

Charles Curtis, of No. 322 Eighth-st., Brooklyn, testified that he had been a clerk in the employ of Grant Brothers, and was also a private secretary to Edgar E. Duryea. He had gone out a number of times with Mr. Duryea, and they had visited different saloons in this borough and Brooklyn. Mr. Duryea had drunk freely.

Mr. Thompson explained that his object in presenting this testimony was to prove that Mr. Duryea was an unfit person to make a will.

Julius Weintraugh, of No. 118 East Third-st., Manhattan, testified that he had been a clerk for Grant Brothers, and had in that way become acquainted with Mr. Duryea. He had frequently seen Mr. Duryea under the influence of liquor.

At the request of Mr. Thompson adjournment was taken to Friday. He said it would take two or three days next week for him to get all his evidence in. None of the Duryea family were in the court to-day.

DENIES PURCHASE OF ROSECLIFF.

LOUIS STERN REPORTED TO HAVE BECOME THE OWNER OF MRS. HERMANN OELRICH'S NEWPORT VILLA.

It was reported yesterday that Louis Stern had bought the villa of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, at Newport, R. I. This villa is known as Rosecliff, and it built on the site of the home of Bancroft, the historian. It was finished but a year ago, and was occupied for the first time last summer. It resembles in some details the palace of Grand Trianon, and is built of stucco and tiles.

When Mr. Stern was seen last night at his home by a Tribune reporter he denied that he had pur-

PROSPECT HALL BURNED.

FLAMES LEAVE THE WALLS UNSAFE AND THEIR REMOVAL IS BEGUN AT ONCE.

Prospect Hall, in Prospect-ave. between Fifth and Sixth aves., Brooklyn, was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning, at a loss of about $300,000. It was the largest assembly hall in South Brooklyn, and seated about three thousand people. The fire is supposed to have been started by a lighted cigar or cigarette, which may have been thrown on the floor of a dressing room at the "smoker" of the Knights of Columbus, held there on Monday night.

Three thousand members of the order were at the meeting, and it is said that it was after 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning before they had all gone. Soon afterward the fire was discovered by Mr. Quinn, the watchman, who hurried to the house next door and informed William Kolle, the manager of the place. The latter dressed himself hastily, and, running to the hall, tried in vain to stop the blaze with the fire extinguishers. Roundsman McNulty, of the Forty-fourth precinct smelled smoke in Fifth-ave. and turned in an alarm. A second alarm was sent in while the firemen were on the way, and Battalion Chief Murray, on his arrival, sent in a third and fourth alarm. Fire Chief Dale took charge of the two hundred firemen.

The hydrant in front of Prospect Hall was out of order, and engines were sent along Fifth and Sixth aves., and Sixteenth and Seventeenth sts. for water. The entire west side of the building was then burning. Water froze on the rubber coats and helmets of the firemen, and soon the street was covered with a sheeting of ice. In Sixteenth-st., in the rear of Prospect Hall, the inmates of a number of wooden tenement and frame houses were aroused by the police, and hurried into the street, some of them scantily clad. A dozen horses in a stable in Fifth-ave. were blindfolded and led out to a place of safety.

The firemen had hard work on account of the light water pressure, and even when two engines had been put on each line of hose it was difficult to force the water up to the level of the second floor. The fire blazed so fiercely that the building was soon burned out. This is said to have been due to the fact that all the woodwork was of Georgia pine. St. John's German Lutheran Church, in Sixteenth-st., three doors away, was in great danger, but was saved.

Prospect Hall, a four story brick structure, was built in 1891 at a cost, it is said, of $320,000, including the fixtures and all the interior fittings. It was 155 feet in depth, extending back to Sixteenth-st., and had a frontage in Prospect-ave. of 75 feet. Besides four large bowling alleys, there were a shooting gallery, a theatre hall and several lodge rooms. The barroom, on the first floor front, was [illegible] in Brooklyn. There was also

ANARCHISTS MADE FURIOUS.

EMMA GOLDMAN SAYS OTHER BRESCIS MAY ARISE AGAINST CROKER.

Emma Goldman, the Anarchist, was the principal speaker at a Social Science mass meeting in Everett Hall, No 31 East Fourth-st., last evening. Captain Thompson, of the Mercer-st. station, was present to preserve order, with seven detectives in plain clothes.

Harry Bimberg, the proprietor of the hall, aroused the meeting to a high state of excitement by threatening to turn out the lights if any Anarchistic utterances were heard. He said Miss Goldman had rented the place from him by concealing her identity. He could not afford to have the good name of his hall ruined by any untoward proceedings.

Emma Goldman followed Bimberg. Her arraignment of the proprietor of the hall was severe in the extreme. The police system of the city and of the country in general was subjected to scathing sarcasm by the speakers, who openly declared that they were Anarchists, and as such were prepared to suffer any unjust treatment the police might see fit to impose.

"If the police are as foolish as they usually are, let them invade this hall," said she. "They will do it at their peril. The King of Italy was justly sent to his account by a brave man. We have other brave men left for a New-York tyrant. Let the minions of this Czar enforce his threats and a thousand Brescis will arise against him. I personally feel very sorry for a crowned head, whether he be crowned by a monarchy or a city full of asses. King, Czar or Boss is to be pitied rather than hated."

Pietro Esteve addressed the meeting in Spanish, and was followed by William Hasselmann, formerly a representative in the German Reichstag, in German. After listening to an Italian speaker the meeting adjourned.

MIXED CROWD ROBS ITALIAN

KNIVES, RAZORS AND REVOLVERS FRIGHTEN HIM INTO SUBMISSION —LOSES $1,248.

Because Nicolo Liberetta, an Italian bootblack, of No. 238 Fourth-st., Brooklyn, was afraid to risk placing his hard earned money in savings banks, he lost $1,248 early yesterday. The money was taken from the waistband of his trousers, where he had it concealed, by colored people and a white man, who stripped off his clothing and frightened him almost to death by a display of revolvers, knives and razors. The robbery was committed in a fathouse at No. 251 Gold-st., Brooklyn. The po-

CAPITAL STOCK REDUCED.

NATIONAL RICE MILLING COMPANY'S INDEBTEDNESS TO BE LIQUIDATED.

The capital stock of the National Rice Milling Company was reduced from $3,000,000 to $1,500,000 by a two-thirds vote of the stockholders, at a meeting of the company, in Newark, yesterday.

The company was chartered under the laws of New-Jersey in 1892. A plan of reorganization was decided upon several weeks ago, to establish a fund through the creation of salable treasury stock, and so provide for needed capital for betterments, as well as to liquidate the bulk of the indebtedness. There had been accumulated an arrearage of $52,680 of unpaid dividends. Under the plan adopted yesterday the preferred stock is reduced from $2,000,000 to $1,000,000 and the common stock from $3,000,000 to $500,000. The officers are Henry Kahn, president, Ainert Baldwin, jr., vice-president, and P. F. Lynch, secretary and treasurer.

JUSTICE DEPUE ON EMBEZZLEMENT.

THE CRIME OUGHT TO BE REPRESSED WITH A FIRM HAND.

At the opening of the Essex County Court in Newark for the December Term, yesterday, Chief Justice Depue addressed the Grand Jury. He commended the police for their recent activity in suppressing disorderly resorts, and expressed pleasure at the course the Police Board had taken in the matter.

In regard to thirteen charges of embezzlement to come before the Grand Jury, Justice Depue said the crime was one that ought to be repressed with a firm hand in a community where so much property and so much money used in the transaction of business were necessarily intrusted to employes. He thought that the modern method of dealing with cases of this sort has rather fostered, than discouraged, the crime. It was a bad example to young men to indicate to them that they may deal dishonestly with employers' property with safety provided they make some compromise when detected.

POLICE CHARGED WITH EXTORTION.

Roundsmen Michael Lynam, of the Sixty-fifth Precinct, and Patrolman Bigge, of the Sixty-sixth Precinct, on Friday morning will have to meet charges of extortion before Police Commissioner York. The complainant is Frederick Hineman, proprietor of a saloon at East New-York-ave. and Sackman-st., Brooklyn, who says that Lynam entered the place recently and called attention to a slot machine there. Lynam, according to Hineman, said it was a violation of the law even to have the article exposed to view, and some one remarked that the case could be adjusted for $50. Heineman says he produced the money under threat of arrest, placed it on a billiard table and left the two men alone.

SEEM TO BE IN A TIGHT PLACE

THREE OR FOUR STATES MAY WANT MAN AND WOMAN FOR SWINDLING.

Hackensack, Dec. 11 (Special).—Evidence is accumulating against the man and woman arrested at Coytesville last Friday night as Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Richards, of Bridgeport, Conn. They were apprehended on a charge of swindling Peck & Ling, of Bridgeport, Conn., in the purchase of horses, carriages and harness. Some of the property was in their possession at Bramlesen's stable in Coytesville; some has been located at Nyack, N. Y., and a team is at Pearl River. To-day Officer Charles F. Hummel, of Bloomfield, N. J., came to Hackensack with an employe of Dr. Wilhur F. Harrison's livery stable, in that place. Mrs. Richards was identified as the woman who, on October 29, hired a new buggy and a sorrel mare from him to bring her mother from Newark. The rig was subsequently seen with the woman and a man in it, but was lost sight of in Jersey City. It is not among the many rigs now under attachment. There are a black bodied runabout and a large chestnut horse, with white hind feet, which are thought to have been stolen from Long Island.

Mr. Peck and his counsel, of Bridgeport, are here. They say that the woman's maiden name was Emma S. Sturtevant, her home being in Thomaston, Conn. She was a niece, it is said, of Henry Sturtevant, of Bridgeport, who died about four years ago, leaving a large estate. She employed Senator Samuel Fessenden to fight the will and secured a part of the property. Mr. Peck says she lived for a time with John A. Farley, a hotel keeper in Thomaston, whom she left, and afterward married Thomas Mullins, another hotel keeper who died, leaving considerable property. His heirs tried to break the will, but failed. Since then she has lived with Charles T. Richards, who was in the employ of Mullins.

It was learned to-day that the couple tried to rent the old Ranga Hotel, at Lyndhurst, a secluded place, made notorious by "Mike" Ryan and other greengoods men a few years ago.

State Detective Ripley, who lives near Lyndhurst, had his suspicions aroused by the actions of the couple and their outfit, and he kept them in view until they reached Coytesville. They are held under $5,000 bail each, and there may be a race between the authorities of three or four States to secure them.

COLONEL CHARLES W. FULLER ELECTED.

IMPORTANCE OF RAISING THE STANDARD OF THE NEW JERSEY BAR

The annual meeting of the Hudson County Bar Association was held yesterday, and for the first time in years there was a contest for the office of president. The candidates were Colonel Charles W. Fuller and Judge Charles W. Parker. The former was elected by a vote of 13 to 10. William H. Speer was elected vice-president, Howard C. Griffiths, secretary, and Randolph Perkins, treasurer.

Revolt.

I

Hail, spirit of revolt, thou spirit of life,
Child of the ideal, daughter of the far-away truth!
Without thee the nations drag on in a living death;
Without thee is stagnation and arrested growth;
Without thee Europe and America would be sunk in China's lethargy, Smothered in the past, having no horizon but the actual.

II

Hail, spirit of revolt, thou spirit of life,
Child of eternal love,—
Love rebelling against lovelessness, life rebelling against death!
Rise at last to the full measure of thy birthright;
Spurn the puny weapons of hate and oppression;
Fix rather thy calm, burning, protesting eyes on all the myriad shams of man, and they will fade away in thinnest air;
Gaze upon thy gainsayers until they see and feel the truth and love that begat and bore thee.
Thus and thus only give form and body to thy noblest aspirations,
And we shall see done on earth as it is in heaven
God's ever living, growing, ripening will.

Free Speech Strangled.

On Sunday, April 7, Comrade Emma Goldman was engaged to speak before the Social Science Club, of Philadelphia. On her arrival at the meeting, she found the hall locked by order of the police, and about forty policemen on hand to prevent the meeting at all costs. Again on April 9, she was invited to speak before the Shirtmakers' Union, where the police prevented her from entering the hall. The police declared that she would not be permitted to speak in Philadelphia, but the following report from the Philadelphia North American, will show that the police were unable to carry out this boast:

Despite the orders, threats and warnings of Director English, Emma Goldman, Anarchist, made a public address last night, in the very shadow of the City Hall, and the police authorities knew nothing about it until an hour or more after the meeting had ended.

She spoke to the Single Tax Society of Philadelphia, in Mercantile Library Hall, Tenth street, above Chestnut.

"Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen," she said, when a second outburst of applause had subsided, "I thank you for this kind reception. I did not at first intend to come here tonight—not that I doubted that you would receive me as you have, but because I hesitated to take advantage of your hospitality in the face of the action of the law and order people of your city, who say they will not let me speak.

"I can think of no other word than absurd to characterize that action. It is enough to set not only people like yourselves thinking, but every half-intelligent man or woman even the 'dummies,' as we call them, for these two gentlemen, your Mayor Ashbridge and your Director English, are attempting in these free United States such a wilful act as, even if free speech were tolerated in Russia, the czar would be ashamed of.

"These authorities of your government say that I shall not speak. As I do not believe in government, I shall ignore them. I have decided to take up the fight here and to fight it out to the end. I do not want to go to prison. I want to walk under the sky, under the stars—but not the stars and stripes—but prison or no prison, I will not be silenced.

"If you are willing to stand quietly by and permit the freedom of speech to be taken from you, then you might as well go back forty years and restore slavery, for what good can be accomplished for society if expression is denied, and if a man like English is to dictate what you shall say and what not?

"He has gone further than that, though. He has taken to himself the potency of the pope of Rome to decide what is going to be said before it is spoken. This is not, as I first thought, vanity. It is insanity! I certainly shall oppose it on every occasion and find out how far they will go. It is Emma Goldman today, but it may be you tomorrow and somebody else the next day.

"I notice that all America is aroused and indignant over the outrages now being perpetrated in Russia; but when it happens in America, in your free America, you are all quiet. If on last Tuesday night I had dared, not to use a bomb or a dagger, as they do in Russia, but if I had dared to touch with the tip of my finger, a button on the precious person of this Lieutenant Woods, he would have lashed me as the serfs are lashed by the Cossacks, because I could see that he is a brute, although he was drunk beyond his capacity, and perhaps did not know what he was doing.

"The trouble is that these men, Ashbridge, English and Woods, know that we are telling the truth. Nothing is more dangerous than the truth; and that's why they want to silence us. But their action has done more for Anarchism than I and my comrades have done in ten years. I am thankful to them, and I think I'll take up a collection and send them flowers, or cigars, or whisky, which they would rather have, perhaps.

"The authorities have seized upon this as a pretext. I know that your mayor is a man with a past, and he is trying to get the admiration of the so-called respectable people of the community by saying that he and English are always looking after their safety, and that they know better what these people need than they know themselves.

"But what does it mean to be one of the 'respectable' people today? It means to be one who never objects to anything, who pays his taxes, who submits to fraud and oppression, who goes to church on Sunday and during the sermon thinks up a way to beat somebody on Monday. To be a 'respectable' person nowadays is to place men in positions to guard your safety who are least fitted to do so—it is to be an idiot. I am glad to say that I do not belong to that 'respectable' community.

"In these times in America, as soon as a man commits a crime, no matter how black or treacherous, if he is backed by the government, everybody falls on his knees, and they erect arches to him or smother him with kisses. I am sure that English has received hundreds of letters of congratulations from these old maids.

"That is the root of it all. Ashbridge and English are only the tools in the hands of those behind them. It is the community that keeps such men in office that is guilty of the outrage.

"These men have made a mistake, and they have not the courage to admit it. In face of the fact that a paper like the North American and all thinking people are opposing their action, they say they will go right on and continue to stop free speech.

"To me it is a settled question that free speech does not exist in America unless it suits the government. If the people of Philadelphia do not take immediate action to oppose the outrages committed in their city this week, they will sacrifice their freedom on the altar of greed, robbery, fraud and all that represents government.

"I repeat that I shall speak in Philadelphia. If I cannot get a hall I will speak nevertheless, if I have to do so from the City Hall tower. If this is to be a fight for my principles, the mayor will find that I am more courageous than he, and that I can die for them if need be."

Miss Goldman having finished, the floor was again "open." An old, grimy workingman took advantage of this. He walked up to the platform, and said: "I am reminded of what one of the poets once said:

He is a fool who tries by force or skill
To stem the torrent of a woman's will;
For when she will, she will, you may depend on't,
And when she won't, she won't, and there's an end on't.

"The mayor said that Miss Goldman wouldn't speak. Miss Goldman said she would, and she has; and we hope to hear her oftener."

Anarchist Brown denounced the police interference as an outrage, and said that if the coming social revolution—he is satisfied that it is inevitable—is to be peaceable, the people must have the right to free speech in its fullest expression. "In European countries," he said, "Anarchism is forced to keep secret until some blood-curdling event shocks the whole world. If we are denied free speech here, we, too, may be driven to secret propaganda, and then who will be to blame?"

"It has come to the point where some link-headed policeman on the corner is to be a judge of what we say; but government is a final appeal to the policeman's club, any way."

"The mayor and the director could have done nothing to furnish the Anarchists with a stronger argument than their action in the matter," said Mr. Pleydell. "It is the fundamental position of Anarchy," he continued, "that all government is necessarily tyrannical, no matter how free and beneficent it may have been in its inception. The fact that a few men are given power over all other men makes it essentially tyrannical. So, every time a man in power makes himself a petty tyrant or a despot, he gives the Anarchists one more proof of the truth of their reasoning.

"I could almost believe," he added, "that Ashbridge and English are Anarchists themselves, and are using this method to convince the people of the evils of government. I don't know of a writer or painter who could adequately tell the story of the last two years of fraud, robbery and tyranny prevailing in the City Hall.

"It has been pointed out by the one newspaper of Philadelphia—it is scarcely necessary to say that I mean the North American—that the authorities have seized upon this occasion to make capital out of the popular misunderstanding of Anarchism, but we must remember that if Emma Goldman is suppressed as the most radical, they will go on with the second most radical, and so on.

"Do not let us start the fighting, but if they force it let us do it right here and now. There will never be a better chance, and every time we make an organized resistance the next assault on the liberties of the people will be weaker.

"Ashbridge and English will find that it is just as impossible for them to put down Anarchistic ideas by force as it is for the Anarchists to put down governmental ideas by force. The Anarchists have sense enough to see that they can't do that, but the Ashbridges and the Englishes haven't."

Anger and chagrin were expressed by the officials of the police department last night when they learned that Miss Goldman had made good her threat of delivering a lecture in Philadelphia. . . . . .

After Miss Goldman had boarded a car to go to the home of friends, Lazelle was asked:

"Do you know that Emma Goldman has just addressed a meeting in Mercantile Hall?"

"It is impossible," he replied. "I have been on the beat all night." . . . . .

G. Frank Stephens, the Single Tax advocate, visited Director English yesterday and elicited the fact that the ban will not only be kept upon Miss Goldman, but that it will be extended to all other exponents of Anarchistic theories, and that all meetings where the discussion of such subjects might take place will be promptly suppressed. . . . . .

"In my opinion," says Mr. Stephens, "in taking the stand he did in the interview, Director English has constituted himself supreme censor of speech in this city. He has arrogated to himself the right to permit or restrict at will. Consequently the issue becomes one of burning importance. Miss Goldman is now only an incident. It is now a question of whether the head of the police department, frustrated in his attempt to gag the press, can stifle the freedom of the arena of public debate."

Under the heading of "Official Lawlessness," the North American says editorially:

The interference of the police of Philadelphia with the rights of peaceable assembly and free speech is wholly without legal warrant, and is a direct incitement to resistance and breaches of the peace.

Let us hope that the Anarchists and workingmen who are being subjected to this indefensible tyranny will continue to exhibit the creditable self-restraint which has marked their conduct under provocation to which American citizens are not accustomed.

The example of lawlessness being given by the police authorities is at once dangerous and disgraceful. Should force be met with force the moral responsibility would rest upon the stupid despots of the City Hall. Under pretense of "suppressing Anarchy" they are behaving like the worst kind of Anarchists—the sort who trample law under foot and rejoice in violence.

Multitudes of citizens who know nothing about the gospel of Anarchy, and care less, are being roused by the brutal folly of Philadelphia's police department. This is especially true of the workingmen, who see in the Ashbridge-English imitation of Russian methods a very serious threat against their own liberty to meet and discuss their grievances in the future at times which may not be so prosperous as at present. Every American who believes in freedom of speech is indignant.

The law should be brought to bear upon the lawless mayor and director of public safety.

Power Is Degrading.

Great power degrades all men, and almighty power degrades a God. History is crowded with examples of men and women, normally good, changed by power into brutes and fiends. All kings and queens are most degraded, otherwise they would not live in luxurious pomp, which they know is maintained with the life-blood of their overworked and underpaid subjects—the poor who produce all wealth.

The fulsome eulogies on "the most loving and gracious Christian ruler," as the sycophants of royalty say, "ever sat on a throne," with which the papers and magazines have recently been flooded, can only disgust those who think of the millions starving in India, because of the enormous drain on that unfortunate dependency, seized and held in the name of the late Christian empress (what a conjunction!). The Boer war too, too brutal to think of calmly—77,180 Englishmen already sacrificed to the lust of power. There is one consolation, however. The loss of every soldier is the loss of one menace to freedom, and every reasoning man knows that if the two South African republics are stolen from the noble Boers, the British fighting tools will not be one penny the better off, but worse; because after the war the taxes still run on to pay the usury on money borrowed and bonds issued, as well as the original money borrowed. And the volunteers who, unfortunately for them, survive the war, will immediately go to work to pay back the money which they received from the government for their services as human butchers.

The corpse of such a ruler was most appropriately borne to its resting place on a gun-carriage—part of a brutal murder machine, used for blowing starving Indians to heaven or elsewhere, and other such like brutalities. Ten miles of warships and detachments of forty regiments of soldiers being a naturally fitting accompaniment for the funeral of such a powerful being. The "spirit" of this most beneficent ruler, it is said by the superstitious, winged her way to the "God of Love and Prince of Peace." Superstition makes fools, for no others would serve as soldiers. The chief work of all governments is to prepare to murder.

Four years ago the United States was satisfied with an army of 25,000; but the lust for power is such that 25,000 soldiers were thought necessary in Washington at the late inaugural imperialistic exhibition. Verily, power is degrading, and the power to raise 150,000 soldiers will still more degrade the United States.

There was not a scintilla of humanitarianism in the undertaking to free the Cubans from the Spanish yoke. The sole motive was the greed of the money power, and the whole plan was schemed from beginning to end by the men of greed who placed McKinley in power. Twenty-five thousand soldiers—equal to the whole army at the time of McKinley's first accession to power—to make a display of brute force—was the striking feature of the second inauguration of one who has trodden down love, truth, justice, and—Labor, in his scramble for power.

Such is the power of gold that Hawaii has been—Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines will be—stolen by men who have the almighty gold behind them, and have planned to exploit these islands of their wealth.

Lycurgus divided the land of Sparta into equal parts, abolished gold and silver money, and allowed only money made of iron, so bulky that if any one accumulated twenty or thirty pounds' worth ($100 to $150), a yoke of oxen was required to remove it. This immediately stopped a number of vices; all lawsuits ceased, for no one in Lacedæmon would rob another of such cumbrous coin, or unjustly detain, or accept as a bribe, a thing which was so difficult to hide, nor of any use for manufacturing purposes, because when the iron was red hot it was quenched in vinegar, thus making it unfit for use as a metal.

In war the Spartans after they had routed the enemy, only pursued them till well assured of victory, and then sounded a retreat, thinking it base and unworthy of a Grecian people to kill men who had given up resistance.

The city of Lacedæmon continued to be the chief city of all Greece for five hundred years, no manner of alteration in the laws of Lycurgus being made during the reign of fourteen kings. There was neither avarice nor poverty, every one's wants being sup-

The committee of citizens is in possession of a drawing of a proposed market house that was submitted to the legislature some years ago, when an issue of $250,000 worth of bonds was authorized for the building. Since then the plans have been gathering dust. With a few alterations, they will probably be carried out.

SCHUMANN-HEINK'S FAD.

The Great Singer Has a Particular Fondness for Children—Many Kind Acts.

The public at large is greatly interested in the fads and fancies of women who are continually before the public eye. The attachment proceedings against Mme. Schumann-Heink in this city, however, was a kind of notoriety which musicians do not relish. Mme. Heink has a number of fads the particular one being children.

She is the mother of eight herself, the eldest of whom is an officer in the German navy, and the youngest has just been presented with his first pair of knickerbockers. These children of Mme. Schumann-Heink have been written about and talked of in every part of this country until they run a close second to the children of Vice President Roosevelt for popularity.

One of Mme. Schumann-Heink's kindly acts toward poor children has just come to light. It was after a rehearsal at the Metropolitan in New York. When she was leaving the theater she was accosted by a small dirty faced boy, with an armful of papers, who asked her to buy. Struck with the pitiful expression of his face and his begging tone, she questioned him, and he told her how he was trying to assist his older sister to keep and support their two younger sisters and keep them at school. She called at the house where the boy said he lived and found that his story was true. In addition she learned that the sister was a clerk in a dry goods store earning barely enough to support herself, but good hearted, motherly feeling got the best of her, after what she saw, and she arranged with the older sister to send the two youngest children to a convent where they would be educated and looked after at her own expense, and then left a nice little present with the two oldest that will take care of them for some time to come.

Another pretty little incident happened to Mme. Schumann-Heink when she was on her way to the Maine festival in October last. She was traveling with some of the other artists when she was suddenly missed from the party. Search was immediately made for her, and she was found by Mme. Lillian Blauvelt, in a rear car, cuddling a little baby at her breast and cooing it to sleep.

NEW PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Builders' Exchange to Discuss City Hall and Court House Project—Other Important Matters.

The new city hall and the new court house will be discussed at the quarterly meeting of the Builders' exchange, which is to be held tomorrow evening. Other important matters will also come up for consideration. Some importance attaches to the consideration of the advisability of forming a state association of builders. This matter will be thoroughly discussed at the meeting tomorrow evening. The question of the renewal of the lease on the present rooms in the Chamber of Commerce building and the refitting and improvement of the present exhibition rooms will also come up for consideration.

After the transaction of business a social session will be held. Entertainment will be furnished and refreshments served.

A great deal of importance attaches to the meeting to consider the forming of a state association of builders. The meeting, which representatives of all the exchanges in the state have been invited to attend, will be held on May 15. In a letter regarding a similar association in New York state, Secretary Carter of Buffalo ...

The New York association is composed of different exchanges or kindred builders' organizations located in New York, Rochester, Syracuse, Little Falls and Buffalo. The special work of the state association is watching legislation. We have a paid attorney who has charge of its interests at Albany during the legislative session scrutinizing all the bills that may affect building interests. These are at once forwarded to the different exchanges, and most of those exchanges have their legislative committees. These committees communicate to the state senators and assemblymen their views in reference to the bills. We keep a list of all such bills on the exchange table.

DEFENDS ACTS OF BOMB THROWERS.

Woman Praises Motives Leading Up to Many Terrible Crimes.

Speaker Arraigns Police Who Attend an Anarchist Meeting.

Emma Goldman, the famous anarchist orator and propagandist, addressed a meeting at Memorial hall yesterday afternoon. While the hall was not crowded, a good sized audience was in attendance and evidenced its approval of the speaker's sentiments by frequent and vigorous applause.

Officers Bernhart and Thorpe of the citizens' squad formed a portion of the audience, while Patrolman Gibbons lingered around on the sidewalk in front of the hall, just to be handy in case of emergency. Nothing at all exciting happened, however, and the plain clothes men upstairs never turned a hair as the orator entered upon a scathing arraignment of policemen, and especially detectives. "Soldiers are bad enough," she said, "but policemen are worse, and a detective is the meanest and most despicable creature in the universe." It is said that Miss Goldman had been informed that the "plain clothes" men were to be among her auditors, and she considerately intended to include them in the class of "detectives."

Miss Goldman is of small stature, but is a woman of wonderful vigor. She has a strong and resonant voice, and her command of English is excellent, although she has a slight German accent. She spoke entirely without reference to notes, and never for a moment hesitated or stumbled in her delivery. She has a fine vocabulary and also shows evidence of careful and systematic reading.

Miss Goldman outlined the principles of anarchism and detailed the methods by which she hoped for their accomplishment. Her talk was full of forceful passages in some cases more notable for their strength than for their elegance.

"Men under the present state of society are mere products of circumstances," she said. "Under the galling yoke of government, ecclesiasticism and the bonds of custom and prejudice it is impossible for the individual to work out his own career as he could wish. Anarchism aims at a new and complete freedom. It strives to bring about a freedom which is not only a freedom from within but also a freedom from without, which will prevent any man having the desire to interfere in any way with the liberty of his neighbor. Vanderbilt says, 'I am a free man within myself, but the others be damned.' This is not the freedom that we are striving for. We merely desire complete individual liberty, and this can never be obtained so long as there is an existing government.

"We do not favor the Socialist idea of converting men and women into mere producing machines under the eye of a paternal government. We go to the opposite extreme, and demand the fullest and most complete liberty for each and every person to work out his own salvation upon any line that he pleases so long as he does not interfere with the happiness of others. The degrading notion of men and women as breeding machines is far from our ideals of life.

"Anarchism has nothing to do with future governments or economic arrangements. We do not favor any particular settlement in this line, but merely seek to do away with the present evils. The future will provide for these arrangements after our work has been done. Anarchism deals merely with social relations and not with economic arrangements."

The speaker deprecated the idea that all Anarchists were in favor of violence and bomb throwing. She declared that nothing was further from the principles which they support. She then went on, however, into a detailed explanation of the different crimes committed by Anarchists lately, declaring that the motive was good in each case, and that these acts were merely a matter of temperament. Some men were so constituted she said, that they were unable to stand idly by and see the wrongs that were being endured by their fellow mortals. She herself did not believe in these methods, but she did not think that they should be too severely condemned in view of the high and noble motives which prompted their perpetration. We must have ...

CAN'T BUILD A PIANO TRUST.

"Down With" of the Concerns Forms a Stumbling Block.

The recent announcement from Chicago that a trust or combination had been formed among piano manufacturers caused some comment among local dealers.

The report was based on an interview with Mark Blumenberg, the well known editor of one of the musical papers of New York city. He was credited with being the promoter of the combine.

With few exceptions local piano men are frankly incredulous and even scornful of the idea that a trust has been formed or an agreement even reached. They say that every attempt ever made along this line has been a total failure and they base their statements on a rather curious condition of the trade which, if it is as represented makes the piano business unique as the one enterprise in which a trust is impossible.

"The point is this," said one of the leaders yesterday, "every manufacturer believes his instrument is the best in the world and that no other compares with it. He does not believe this merely for advertising purposes either. It is a serious conviction that is necessary to his business. If he isn't making the best piano in the world, why, he has no ambition to make any. The result is that when someone tries to talk combination the actual value of the plant may be easily reached but there can be no agreement on the good will."

CHURCH HOME TOO SMALL.

Fidelity Free Baptist Congregation Will Put Up a New Building—To Cost $7,000.

The members of the Fidelity Free Baptist church are having plans drawn for a new church building to occupy their lot at the corner of Wade Park and Van Ness avenues. The present structure will be moved back to be used for Sunday school purposes and the new church will be built out from it. The plans are for a frame building to cost about $7,000.

The church is at work raising money to meet the cost of building. They have applied to the common pleas court for permission to place a $4,000 mortgage on their lot for money to be used in commencing work as soon as possible. The loan will be furnished by friends of the church at a nominal rate of interest. Three thousand dollars worth of pledges have already been made by the congregation. One member, Mrs. Lucy M. Grim has given $1,000 for the work.

Fidelity church is ten years old and Rev. Thomas C. Lawrence, the first pastor, is still in charge. Under his energetic leadership the church has grown and the new building is a necessity, the increasing needs of the growing Sunday school especially having created a demand for more room.

The plans now drawn up provide for an auditorium seating 400, which can be thrown into the Sunday school auditorium to increase the seating capacity to 700. Three other rooms will provide for a library, pastor's study and primary room. There will be no attempt at institutional work, as the policy of the church does not include it.

FRIENDS GET $6.000.

Money Raised to Build an Addition to the Bible School in Cleveland.

The Salem quarterly conference held its sessions in Cleveland at the First Friends church yesterday with the raising of $6,000 for the building of an addition to the Bible school in connection with the Cleveland church.

Rev. George A. Watson of Pittsburg was to have preached at the morning session, but the time was entirely devoted to the pledging of the money for the addition.

The fund was raised as a twentieth century offering. Those in charge of the Bible school work intended to ask the conference for $5,000 to help the work along, but the leading men of the conference took the entire amount.

The result was a surprise to the committee, for the friends of the school rallied to its support and pledged more than was asked for. Encouraged by the success, the school authorities announced that they would raise more money to make the total $7,000. This money will all be devoted to the betterment of the school which is crowded at the present time.

Dr. Watson preached at the afternoon and evening sessions to large audiences. The convention has broken records in attendance as well as in the raising of money, the leaders having had the ...

SYNDICATE HAS PEOPLE GUESSING

Railway Men at Sea Over Plans of Morris-Garfield Combine.

Work on the Proposed New Road to Commence This Month.

Before the end of the month work will be begun on the new road intended to tap the eastern Ohio coal field which is projected by Calvary Morris, the Garfields and other capitalists of this city.

Bids for doing the work having been submitted, it is announced that very shortly the contract will be let for the construction of the Wheeling Alliance & Lake Erie, which is the name of the new road projected by the Morris-Garfield syndicate in connection with its purchase of the Alliance & Northern.

For the present, it is stated, the line will be built only from Bergholz south into the coal fields of Jefferson county, but later it will go to Fairport, and the road will then have a lake outlet.

The road was incorporated some months ago with a large capitalization. At the same time a coal company bearing the same name, the same capitalization and the same incorporators, was formed. The two concerns were practically one and the object was to develop the immense coal fields in eastern Ohio.

The syndicate has everybody guessing as to the status of this enterprise, and there has been more or less gossip as to its identification secretly with the Baltimore & Ohio. It is argued that this is substantiated by the fact that it was the original intention of the promoters to use the Pittsburg & Western track into Fairport, and it has now been decided that the road shall be built to that point.

Those who thought they were acquainted with the situation have claimed that the object of the building of the new road was the opening of a line from a Lake Erie port through Ohio, and thence to Wheeling, W. Va., in the interest of the Baltimore & Ohio, in order that that road could get the traffic of a large steel industry.

Some Cleveland railroad men, however, say that this is ridiculous on the face of it. The Baltimore & Ohio, in the control of the new road, would have an elephant on its hands. The B. & O. already has three adequate outlets along the lake. It has means of communication from Sandusky to Wheeling by way of Newark and another outlet at Fairport in the P. & W. road. The recent purchase of the C. L. & W. provides the third lake terminus. What the B. & O. would do with a fourth lake terminus, especially at Fairport local railroad men say that they do not know. Consequently they brand the story of B. & O. control of the new road as a fake.

Meeting in Interest of Holy Name Society at Cathedral.

In response to an appeal by Rev. This is a ...result of a wish of the missionary priests who conducted the mission here ...weeks ago. They desired that this society be formed as a memorial of their ...work.

This is ...not the freedom that we are striving for. ...We merely desire complete individual liberty, and this can never be obtained as ...long as there is an existing government.

"We do not favor the Socialist idea of ...converting men and women into mere producing machines under the eye of a paternal government. We go to the opposite ...extreme, and demand the fullest and most ...complete liberty for each and every person ...to work out his own salvation upon any ...line that he pleases so long as he does not ...interfere with the happiness of others. ...The degrading notion of men and women ...as breeding machines is far from our ...ideals of life.

"Anarchism has nothing to do with future governments or economic arrangements. We do not favor any particular ...settlement in this line, but merely seek to ...do away with the present evils. The future will provide for these arrangements ...after our work has been done. Anarchism ...deals merely with social relations and not ...with economic arrangements."

The speaker deprecated the idea that all ...Anarchists were in favor of violence and ...bomb throwing. She declared that nothing was further from the principles which ...they support. She then went on, however, ...into a detailed explanation of the different ...crimes committed by Anarchists lately, ...declaring that the motive was good in ...each case, and that these acts were merely ...a matter of temperament. Some men were ...so constituted, she said, that they were ...unable to stand idly by and see the ...wrongs that were being endured by ...their fellow mortals. She herself did not believe in these methods, but she did not think that they should ...be too severely condemned in view of the ...high and noble motives which prompted ...their perpetration. "We must have education before we can have power," declared Miss Goldman. "Some believe that ...we should first obtain the force and let ...the intelligence and education come afterwards. Nothing could be more fallacious. ...If we get the education and intelligence ...first among the people the power will come ...to us without a struggle."

In the evening Miss Goldman spoke on ..."The Cause and Effect of Vice." She ...dwelt in detail upon the most revolting ...forms of social evil, and assigned to each ...their cause. Some of the vices which are ...most abhorent to the sense of modern ...civilization were upheld by Miss Goldman.

She bitterly attacked the churches and ...the modern system of education as responsible for most of the social evil. She ...did not hesitate to put forward a number ...of sentiments far more radical and sensational than anything ever before publicly advanced in Cleveland.

She was warmly applauded throughout ...her remarks by a crowd fully twice as big ...as that of the afternoon. Patrolmen Willmore, Mariner and Smith of the citizens' ...dress squad were present during the address, but did not deem it necessary to interfere.

CHURCH HOME TOO SMALL.

Fidelity Free Baptist Congregation Will Put Up a New Building To Cost $7,000.

The members of the Fidelity Free Baptist church are having plans drawn for a new church building to occupy their lot at the corner of Wade Park and Van Rensselaer. The present structure will be moved back to be used for Sunday school purposes and the new church will be built out from it. The plans are for a frame building to cost about $7,000.

The church is at work raising money to meet the cost of building. They have applied to the common pleas court for permission to place a $4,000 mortgage on their lot for money to be used in commencing work as soon as possible. The loan will be furnished by friends of the church at a nominal rate of interest. Three thousand dollars worth of pledges have already been made by the congregation. One member, Mrs. Lucy M. Crum has given $1,000 for the work.

Fidelity church is ten years old and Rev. Thomas C. Lawrence, the first pastor, is still in charge. Under his energetic leadership the church has grown until the new building is a necessity. The increasing needs of the growing Sunday school recently having created a demand for more room.

The plans now drawn up provide for an auditorium seating 400, which can be thrown into the Sunday school audience room to increase the seating capacity to 700. Three other rooms will provide for a library, pastor's study and primary rooms. There will be no attempt at mystic thy work, as the policy of the church does not include it.

FRIENDS GET $6,000.

Money Raised to Build an Addition to the Bible School in Cleveland.

The Salem quarterly conference held its sessions in Cleveland at the First Presbyterian church yesterday with the raising of $6,000 for the building of an addition to the Bible school in connection with the Cleveland church.

Rev. George A. Watson of Pittsburg was to have preached at the morning service, but the time was entirely devoted to the pledging of the money for the addition.

The fund was raised as a twentieth century offering. Those in charge of the Bible school work intended to ask the conference for $5,000 to help the work of the school, but hardly with the expectation of receiving the entire amount.

The result was a surprise to the most confident, for the friends of the school rallied to its support and pledged more than was asked for. Encouraged by this success, the school authorities have announced that they will try to raise enough more money to make the total $7,000. This money will all be devoted to the enlargement of the school which is crowded at the present time.

Dr. Watson preached at the afternoon and evening sessions to large audiences. The convention has broken records for attendance as well as in the raising of money, the leaders saying that the support of the whole three days' conference has been the best that any quarterly meeting has had for a long time.

Suit Grows Out of the Ex-Judge's Bankruptcy Case.

A suit for $200,000 damages was filed in common pleas court by Judge Walter F. Ong Saturday against H. R. Hatch & Co., naming individually H. R. Hatch, George L. Schryer, Arthur E. Hatch, Edward F. Aldrich, James T. Rhatoff and Charles Schwab. The suit grows out of alleged charges made against Judge Ong during his proceedings in bankruptcy. H. R. Hatch & Co. had a claim against Judge Ong for $60.

The petition sets up that the defendants' company, through its lawyers and agents, filed in the United States court and with the referee in bankruptcy before whom Judge Ong's case was pending, specifications and charges to the effect that he had concealed his assets, had transferred and incumbered property, and had purposely failed to keep a set of books before filing a petition in bankruptcy all for the purpose of defrauding his creditors.

Buchi, who is a Swiss, said that the primary object of his mission to Canada was to solicit subscriptions for FREE SOCIETY, the organ of the revolutionary labor movement of America, published at 515 Carroll avenue, Chicago. He also carried a stock of books.

"I am an Anarchist," he said, "and I am proud to be a follower of the movement which believes in equality of opportunity. The power of capital is tyrannical and ere long the social revolution, bringing the dawn of better times to the laboring classes, will come with great suddenness, perhaps with violence."—Rossland Miner.

Recently Comrade Emma Goldman lectured in Lynn, Mass., where the people had not seen an Anarchist lecturer before. On the same day she also lectured in Boston. The following report is taken from the Boston she said, "who rather went [illegible] duties as soldier, did more [illegible] Mr. Simmon and myself [illegible] now in ninety-nine cases [illegible] Anarchist could not only preach but act in compliance with his ideas. And the best thing to do, she thought, was just to ignore the government, to ignore the conventions, customs and traditions, to defy the laws of the laws. Even so she acted at Philadelphia recently. The authorities would not let her speak, but she ignored them. She said that if they would not allow her to speak in a hall she would speak from the steps of City Hall. The result was that she had her own way.

Russia, she argued, had produced greater literary artists than Tolstoy is, but the fact that he lives his ideas, that he resists all oppression, that he is a living impersonation of freedom, has made him such a power and influence.

Gaetano Bresci.

Gaetano Bresci, the Italian rebel and Anarchist, whose overflowing sympathy with human suffering prompted him to strike down one of the world's tyrants, is dead (at least such is the report circulated in the daily press). All tyrants, despots, rulers, parasites, Pharisees, and hypocrites, can now breath freely once more. What does it matter to them that they have added another tear and blood-stained page to the history of crime and misery; that they have tortured a man into insanity; that they have bought their safety through the agony and despair of a man whose only sin consisted in rebelling against wrong? He is dead; and tyranny reigns supreme.

"After all the man was only an Anarchist, an enemy to law and order, an outcast; who care about him?" echoes the thoughtless multitude.

Fortunately the world is not inhabited by tyrants and slaves only; there are a vast number of men and women whose hearts, even as Bresci's, throb with love for those whom power and greed has condemned to everlasting ignorance and despair. Men and women, in all stations of life, who see the injustice and cruelty around them; and who feel that Bresci's awful death is but another indictment against those institutions in society that are being maintained at the cost of human lives.

A society which destroys myriads of its members, must give birth to men like Bresci. It is violence and force upon which the whole system is based, and that begets force. How could it be otherwise?

Bresci is the child of Italy, where the masses of the people toil and sweat, yet never enjoy the beauties that mother nature has so abundantly bestowed upon that country; Italy, whose strong, healthy, and stalwart men must leave their native soil to wander in strange lands in search of bread; Italy, where women are wrecks at the age of twenty, and whose children, dirty, filthy, ragged, and starved, are degraded to beggars. The few have robbed the country to gain their accumulated wealth, and are now suppressing every sound of protest, celebrating orgies to drown the voices of agony coming from the prisons, where the daring spirits are confined to a life of hell. It was here where he first imbibed the spirit of discontent and hatred against a society which endures such awful conditions; it was here where he learned to understand and to love the idea that is to bring the dawn of the day, and establish human happiness.

Since man has dictated terms to his brother, the spirit of righteous indignation has been afloat; and it is well that it should be so. Were it not for the spirit of discontent, of indignation and protest against wrong, the spirit that feels every blow, pain, and sorrow that suffering and starving humanity has to endure, progress would be impossible. It was this spirit that moved man to become helpful, good, and generous; to tear down the old institutions of darkness and ignorance, and build new ones. It was this spirit that has given to past generations the power of endurance, determination, and enthusiasm in their fight for man's highest treasure—liberty.

Each age has had its John Browns, its Perovskayas, its Parsons, Spies, Angiolillos, and its Breseis, who were misunderstood, persecuted, mobbed, tortured, and killed, by those who could not reach the sublime heights attained by these men. Yet they have not lived in vain, for it is to them that we owe all that is good and noble, grand and useful in the world.

It is therefore useless to assert that the science of life, the philosophy of liberty and human independence, are responsible for the acts of violence. This may satisfy sensational minds; but earnest men and women are beginning to understand that the philosophy of Anarchism, which occupies the most intellectual minds of our time, which has given to the world a Tolstoy, a Kropotkin, and many others, which permeates the literature, art, science, and every branch of human knowledge, which aims at the deliverance of mankind from a life of tragedy and despair, which is based upon harmony, and the recognition of the equal rights of every individual to all that his intelligence, skill, and ingenuity can produce, certainly can have nothing to do with violence, nor have the representatives of this idea ever advocated it.

Bresci has paid the penalty of his crime. And a crime indeed it was to have loved one's kind, to have felt the existing wrongs in the world, and to have dared to strike a blow at organized authority. He has lived and died true to himself; and the world will have to learn that while one Bresci is killed, hundreds are born ready to lay down their lives to free mankind from tyranny, power, ignorance, and poverty. EMMA GOLDMAN.

Torture and Torturers.

The last two works of the writer, "Life Without a Master," and "The New Dispensation," discuss a great number of social problems. Of all these none would seem to be so vital and momentous, when we come to consider the real interests of mankind, as the question of punishment; and yet it is the one particular point in these books that seems to attract no attention on the part of the reading public. If the subject is brought up in private conversation, the listener opens his eyes with a sort of blank stare, as much as to say, "What is this man talking about?" The listener seems to say to himself: "Why, we have always had punishments; the Bible tells us to punish, and it says we must have an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. How could society exist without punishments?" . . .

Why do we punish people? Simply to cause them pain and suffering. But what good does that do? Absolutely none at all, either to the one that suffers or to the one who causes the suffering. Sometimes it is said that we punish to prevent crime. But we know as a matter of fact that punishment does not prevent crime, certainly not the crime that has been committed, and the evidence all goes to show that punishment does not even lessen crime. No, we punish people because they deserve it, because our Bible says so, because we have always done that way, and because we are exasperated and want revenge. That is reason enough the people think.

Notice that we do not punish all people, but only those who have done wrong? Who

The commandant urged Bresci to give us his version of the murder, but the prisoner refused to go into details.

"That revolver shot, what did it amount to? One man dies, another takes his place, that's the way in monarchies. But the revolution will abolish that like many other dangerous and ridiculous customs."

"No politics. Tell us what you felt after the murder," said the commandant.

"What I felt? Will I ever forget it? The evening that immortalized my name, also gave me most painful proofs of the stupidity of men, and of the political backwardness of the masses. Everybody and everything was against me. Every mother's son, every woman and child present, seemed bound to kill me, or, at least, hurt me as much as was in their power. And the soldiers, instead of protecting me, acted not much better than the ill-halanced rabble. The worst offender was a lieutenant of carabinieri. He tore my good clothes, kicked and cuffed me, and allowed the mob to do the same. It's due to him that my watch got lost in the crowd. It was a good watch, I was very proud of it. (After reflection.) If I regret one thing connected with this affair more than the other, it's that I had no occasion to use my weapon on that rascally lieutenant."

"Confound you," said the commandant, "you proved an excellent shot."

Report from Chicago.

Comrade Emma Goldman delivered her first lecture before the Scandinavian Painter's Union, 406 Milwaukee Ave., on Tuesday, May 21. The meeting was fairly well attended. She spoke here on "Cooperation an Important Factor in the Industrial Struggle." She dwelt on the importance of the worker as a consumer as well as a producer. Why is it that so many strikes of the workers for better conditions fail? The main cause is that hitherto the trade unionists have entered the industrial arena as producers only; and the resources of the worker being limited, his needs compelled him to yield much more quickly than the capitalist. If the worker recognizes his importance as a consumer, he can greatly benefit himself by largely eliminating the profits of the middleman through cooperative consumption. She then traced the growth of the cooperative movement in England, and especially the Rochdale system. She believed in trade unionism, because they are a standiug protest against the present industrial slavery of the producers; but she placed her hope more on the trade unionism of the future, when it would outgrow its present narrow limits. The lecture was well received. In reply to a question, she stated that the workers had nothing to expect from the ballot; that it was children's stocking placed periodically by the workers to be filled by Santa Claus. The result was that they had received only toys; they must depend upon themselves to improve their conditions.

Wednesday she spoke at the Free Society Club, the subject being changed to "Vice," instead of on Anarchism, as at first announced. The speaker said that at frequent intervals the vice crusaders were heard from, and not gradually extended, until now it is a philosophy of life, to be applied to our daily lives. Too much importance has been laid on conditions, and not enough on the individuality of each member of society. Although the economic conditions are an important factor in the social struggle, still the power of individuality is the greatest force to be considered. It is to the individual that we must look for the progress of society. An interesting discussion followed the lecture, in which it seemes to me the governmentalists but weakly maintained their position even from their owu standpoint.

On Friday, May 31, the same lecture was delivered to a large and new audience in the Ghetto district, at Ruhl's Hall. The speech was excellent on this occasion, and one of the best that I have ever heard "our Emma" deliver.

Sunday morning she went to Spring Valley, where she makes a stay of a few days, and then she will return to Chicago.

I here wish to reiterate the wish, already expressed in FREE SOCIETY, that Comrade Goldman's lectures be published. I think that the lecture on "Modern Phases of Anarchism," if elaborated and published, would do much good, owing to the new departure in the line of propaganda. We must recognize that the old method of hammering away at economic conditions has proven to a great extent a failure. Although modern thought is running more and more on the lines of Anarchism, the direct Anarchist propaganda has remained almost stationary aud weak, in this country at least. A departure to new methods may bring better results.

"Enough," said the commandant, motioning us officers to leave the cell.

The assassin seized another opportunity for playing the actor when we arrived on the island. A great many people from Genoa had assembled there to see him, and a crowd was at the landing place.

This seemed to please Bresci immensely. Stepping ashore, he stretched his emaciated figure to its full length, threw out his chest, and elevated his head. Then he moved proudly forward, tingling his fetters as he went. That he was the observed of all observers, seemed to give him great satisfaction.

This was probably the last time that Bresci saw free men, for it is extremely improbable that he will leave the island alive. One reason why he was removed from the galleys was the necessity of giving him work. Bresci seemed to enjoy leisure even under the most tantalizing circumstances, reason enough why he should be forced to work. He will undergo the hardest work that ever broke a prisoner's spirit.

The discipline will be the same as formerly: absolute silence. He will never hear a human voice.

Wednesday she spoke at the Free Society Club, the subject being changed to "Vice," instead of on Anarchism, as at first announced. The speaker said that at frequent intervals the vice crusaders were heard from, and not only were conservative hypocrites engaged in them, but even many radicals. The ignorance on the subject is dense. She contended that any act entered into by two individuals voluntarily was not vice. What is usually hastily condemned as vice by thoughtless individuals, such as homo-sexuality, masturbation, etc., should be considered from a scientific standpoint, and not in a moralizing way. Indeed, those most active in the moral crusades are often the "black sheep." But I cannot do justice to this lecture in a brief report. Some of the conclusions were extremely interesting, even if not accepted in their entirety ; however, as FREE SOCIETY need not fear the loss of four million subscribers, its readers being more or less tolerant, I hope that space will soon be found for an extended report of this important lecture.

Sunday afternoon she spoke to the Anthropological Society at the Masonic Temple. Here the subject was "Modern Phases of Anarchism." She traced the development in the idea of Anarchism. Formerly Anarchism was considered as an economic arrangement for the future society ; the idea has at economic conditions has proven to a great extent a failure. Although modern thought is running more and more on the lines of Anarchism, the direct Anarchist propaganda has remained almost stationary and weak, in this country at least. A departure to new methods may bring better results.

Waldheim.

There will come a time when our silence will be more powerful than the voices you strangle today. —August Spies.

These prophetic words must involuntarily have come not only to those who on Decoration Day gathered around the monument of our murdered comrades at the Waldheim cemetery, but more menacingly to those passing by in costly carriages.

As their vehicles went slowly through the crowd, their side-glances were not scornful, but their conscience-smitten faces were grim and severe as they looked upon the mass of sympathizers around the monument, and the wreaths with which the statue was decorated. They were vividly reminded of the futility of suppressing humanitarian ideals by murder and brute force—the only arguments that governments have ever been able to bring forth against ideals which aim at the abolition of master and slave, starvation and misery, war and bloodshed.

At 3 o'clock, after the wreath from Comrade Peter Kropotkin arrived, two songs were given, drawing a large crowd, after which Comrade Emma Goldman and Lucy E. Parsons spoke on the occasion, urging those present to carry on the work for freedom and human happiness—the ideal for which our comrades were strangled.

EMMA GOLDMAN, HIGH PRIESTESS OF ANARCHY, WHOSE SPEECHES INSPIRED CZOLGOSZ TO HIS CRIME.

SPEECH THAT PROMPTED MURDEROUS ASSAULT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 7.—[Special.]—An address delivered in this city on May 6 by Emma Goldman, the Anarchist, is largely responsible for the attempt on the life of President McKinley.

Miss Goldman spoke here twice on that date, and a copy of her address was found in the pocket of Leon Czolgosz when searched by the Buffalo police. At the audience on that occasion was the man who tried to kill the President, and his associates now recall that he was one of the most enthusiastic in his applause of the utterances of Miss Goldman.

The hall in which the lecture was delivered is at 119 Superior street, the same hall in which the Anarchists now meet in this city.

In the course of her address of May 6 Miss Goldman first outlined the principles of anarchy and detailed the methods whereby she hoped to accomplish the ends of anarchy. Her talk was full of forceful passages, and some cases more notable for their strength than for their elegance.

"Men under the present state of society," she said, "are mere products of circumstances. Under the galling yoke of government, ecclesiasticism, and a bond of custom and prejudice, it is impossible for the individual to work out his own career as he could wish. Anarchism aims at a new and complete freedom. It strives to raise [illegible] the freedom which is not only the freedom [illegible] but a freedom to prevent any man from having a desire to interfere in any way with the liberty of his neighbor.

"Vanderbilt says, 'I am a free man within myself, but the others be damned.' This is not the freedom we are striving for. We merely desire complete individual liberty, and this can never be obtained so long as there is an existing government.

"We do not favor the socialistic idea of converting men and women into mere producing machines under the eye of a paternal government. We go to the opposite extreme and demand the fullest and most complete liberty for each and every person to work out his own salvation upon any line that he pleases. The degrading notions of men and women as machines is far from our ideals of life.

"Anarchism has nothing to do with future governments or economic arrangements. We do not favor any particular settlement in this line, but merely ask to do away with the present evils. The future will provide these arrangements after our work has been done. Anarchism deals merely with social relations, and not with economic arrangement."

The speaker then deprecated the idea that Anarchists were in favor of violence or bomb throwing. She declared that nothing was further from the principles they support. She went on, however, into a detailed explanation of the different crimes committed by Anarchists lately, declaring that the motive was good in each case, and that these acts were merely a matter of temperament.

Some men were so constituted, she said, that they were unable to stand idly by and see the wrong that was being endured by their fellow-mortals. She herself did not believe in these methods, but she did not think they should be condemned in view of the high and noble motives which prompted their perpetration. She continued: "Some [illegible] the intelligence and education come afterwards."

Miss Goldman did not hesitate to put forward a number of sentiments far more radical and sensational than any ever publicly advanced here. During Miss Goldman's lecture a strong detail of police was in the hall to keep her from uttering sentiments which were regarded as too radical. This accounts for the fact that the speaker did not give free rein to her thoughts on this occasion. By reason of anarchistic uprisings elsewhere it was thought best by the city officials to curb the utterances of the woman.

CHICAGO, Sept. 10.—Emma Goldman was arrested at 11 o'clock this morning in a flat at No. 203 Sheffield avenue. When confronted by the police she denied her identity, but when her name was discovered on a fountain pen she laughed and said, "I was just contemplating giving myself up."

After she had been taken to Police Headquarters Capt. Colleran, Chief of Detectives, served a warrant on Miss Goldman, charging her with conspiracy to murder the President. The warrant was sworn to by Capt. Colleran.

It gives as her co-conspirators Abraham Isaaks, Maurice Isaaks, Clemence Pfeutzer, Hippolite Havel, Henry Travaglio, Alfred Schindler, Julia Mechems, Marie Isaaks and Marie Isaaks jr. All except Miss Goldman were arrested several days ago. The women were allowed to go, but the men were held without bail and are now in jail.

"Whether Emma Goldman is guilty of conspiracy or not is still undetermined," said Chief of Police O'Neill to-night. "She answered all questions voluntarily, and volunteered much information, but disclosed nothing to indicate that she was an accessory before the fact. These arrests show that Anarchists have been active here, much more so than has been suspected. Miss Goldman's baggage, a suit case and a small satchel, contained nothing incriminating. We have broken up a band of Anarchists, and are still working on the conspiracy theory."

At a conference in the office of Chief of Police O'Neill bail was refused to the nine Anarchists who are held by the police in the belief that they have knowledge of a plot. Those present at the meeting besides Chief O'Neill were Dr. H. S. Taylor, City Prosecutor, Assistant City Prosecutor Owens, Capt. Colleran and Attorney Leonard Baltzel, who represented the Anarchists.

Attorney Baltzel represented that he did not believe there was sufficient ground for keeping his clients in custody and asked for their release on bail. Chief O'Neill explained that he had received an imperative request from the authorities at Buffalo to hold the Anarchists in custody, and that he could not agree to a request for bail under any circumstances. Baltzel offered to furnish bonds in almost any sum, but Chief O'Neill was firm.

Attorney Baltzel stated that he would commence proceedings to obtain the release of his clients by writs of habeas corpus.

C. O. Norris, who occupies the flat where Miss Goldmen was caught, also will be indicted for conspiracy, Chief O'Neill declares. The Chief believes the man was aiding Miss Goldman to escape.

Nowak, the Buffalo hotel keeper, whose house sheltered Czolgosz, is now in this city. It is said he was brought here by the police to identify, if possible, Emma Goldman as a woman who stopped at his hotel with Czolgosz a few days before the attempted murder of the President.

STORY OF THE ARREST OF ANARCHIST QUEEN.

(Special to The World.)

CHICAGO, Sept. 10.—Miss Goldmen arrived in Chicago Sunday morning, registered in a downtown hotel under an assumed name, and yesterday engaged a room in the Sheffield avenue flat.

O. O. Norris, who owns the flat, was later taken into custody. An hour before the woman's arrest the Chief of Police received from a source outside the department news regarding her whereabouts. Capt. O'Neill, a former Anarchist-hunter of the Haymarket days, was put on the case, and Detective Herrmann was ordered to go to the flat and locate all persons found there.

The building is situated at the corner of the Sheffield Avenue [illegible] contains three flats. [illegible] ran the information that Anarchy was in hiding.

"Who are you and what do you want?" she asked.

"We are policemen and we want Miss Goldman," replied [illegible].

"I am not Miss Goldman," replied the woman. "My name is Thorsen and I am Swedish," she said.

the department, picked up a fountain pen and began reading "Emma Goldman."

"You are a smart policeman," she laughed. "Yes, I am Emma Goldman, and I was just thinking of going down to police headquarters and give myself up. If you had come an hour later I would have been gone. If you will excuse me while I change my waist I will go with you."

The suspicious policeman balked at Miss Goldmen's desire to close the door of her bedroom during the toilet proceedings. A compromise was reached by leaving the door half open. Finally she emerged carrying a book, "Toward Democracy," and announced herself ready to go.

"While this is all nonsense and I am innocent so far as the charge implies, still the President of the United States is here to visit, she said to Schantz.

To Headquarters in Street Car.

The trip to headquarters was made in a street car. Miss Goldman read her book, and once looked up to the two men sitting beside her and said:

"Do I look like the women they paint me?"

In a jaunty white sailor hat, white waist, blue skirt, belt and necktie she looked anything but bloodthirsty. She was calm and good humored when the City Hall was reached. Ushered into the chief's office she sat down and began reading her book. Chief O'Neill summoned Mayor Harrison and an inquisition began, which lasted an hour. Although she maintained her self control she could not refrain at times from weeping.

Miss Goldman told her story as follows:

ROME, Sept. 10.—Prof. G. Mazzoni, the Pope's surgeon, has replied to The World's hypothetical question supplemented by late bulletins on President McKinley's case, as follows:

"The last bulletin shows two specially favorable symptoms—moderate respiration and gradual diminution of the pulsations, proving that things are progressing well in the abdominal cavity.

"I think the bullet will produce inflammation of the muscular tissues near the spine, which will necessitate surgical intervention.

DIFFICULT TO REACH ANARCHIST LEADERS.

The deeper the lawyers go into the matter of punishing the Anarchist leaders who, by teaching and urging acts subtle suggestion, bring about such crimes as that of Czolgosz the more puzzled they are and the more regretful at the inadequacy of existing statutes.

In spite of the assaults upon President Jackson and the assassination of President Garfield Lincoln's assassination was covered by the laws against political conspiracies to murder—nothing was done to secure the adequate punishment of assailants of high officials. Neither State nor Federal laws recognize any difference between attacks upon the citizen as a citizen and attacks upon the citizen as a representative of the Government.

NO SPECIAL LAWS AGAINST ANARCHY.

As for anarchy, the Federal and State laws against incitements to violence have been relied upon heretofore. There is no special legislation directed against the special offense. And the problem is how to word a law so that the authorities will be vigilant and at the same time discreet in its enforcement, not only for a few months after such an awakening as the present, but at all times.

Vice-President Roosevelt has definitely declared himself against the abandonment of public receptions by high officials. Nothing could have been more forcible than his remarks to the two laborers who stopped him in the street to shake hands with him yesterday.

MUST RELY ON THE PUBLIC FOR PROTECTION

"The public officials must rely upon you men to guard them. No isolated, unreasonable and unpracticable acts of violence should interfere with the democratic custom of free interviews between the people and public servants."

He takes the position which Augustus Cæsar took when he became Consul that to go about carefully attended to be secluded and full of suspicion, is to make life an intolerable burden. He thinks that any elaborate hedging in would not protect, but would do harm.

One of the letters sent to President McKinley's party told a World reporter to-night that there were many reasons for the belief that no Anarchist society planned the attempt to take the President's life.

"One reason alone," he declared, "is sufficient to show that the crime was not prepared in advance by any considerable number of persons. That is the fact that Czolgosz bought the revolver in Buffalo. If this scheme had been worked out in another city and he had been sent here to commit the deed he would have come armed. He would have been supplied with a true and reliable weapon in advance. On the contrary, he arrived without a weapon and bought a 'bull dog' one here."

BEANS FOR ANARCHIST SOAKED BY THE POLICE.

Package Was at First Thought to Contain a Bomb and Was Given a Thorough Ducking—Now Poison is Being Searched For.

BUFFALO, Sept. 10. The Buffalo police made little progress to-day in their efforts to unravel the alleged plot to assassinate President McKinley. Alfonso Stutz, who has been detained by the police for several days because he called a room mate Czolgosz in an east side hotel, was set free. The police are convinced that Stutz had nothing to do with the matter and that he knows nothing about Czolgosz.

Supt. Bull and Assistant District Attorney Penney expressed indignant at the arrest of Emma Goldman in Chicago. They declined, however, to give any talking of their plans in regard to her.

"I don't know yet what will be done with her," Supt. Bull said. "Her arrest was made on the Buffalo request we want out that all people known or suspected of having anything to do with Anarchist society be taken into custody."

Supt. Bull said it had not yet been decided to bring Emma Goldman here, but what such a decision was he reached later.

ALL MAY BE TRIED IN BUFFALO.

Local authorities say that all Anarchists who may be exterminated by Czolgosz will be indicted and tried here.

Buffalo police have found practically every clue they had and they do not expect to learn anything more than what they know about Czolgosz's accomplices here.

Secret Service men with the Buffalo police discredit a story that the attempt on President McKinley was a free society plot. They declare that if Czolgosz had accomplices they were probably foolish ones rather than organized conspirators.

Leon Czolgosz was taken from his cell in the basement at Police Headquarters to-day and was in the fresh air once since his arrest he saw no sky or sun.

IMPRISONMENT BEGINS TO WEAR.

Confinement is beginning to tell on the young Anarchist, though his appearance is not abnormal. He ate but little meals to-day with great zest and ate his other days nothing but the bits remaining on his plate when he had finished.

The police are maintaining a strict reserve, and Mrs. Riley, the janitress and guardian of the prisoner's food, will give no information regarding the kind of food Czolgosz has had.

All the newspaper representatives have been warned to give no information as to the President's assailant, and the police are obeying instructions strictly.

A package addressed to Czolgosz was received when a package to Czolgosz was received by the police, and was carefully opened, as it was feared some Anarchist friend had sent a bomb of some kind.

THOROUGHLY SOAKED THE BEANS.

The package was thrown into a pail of water and later was opened. It was found to contain baked beans. The police think the beans may contain poison and are taking steps to that end.

Supt. Bull, when asked for a statement to a New York paper that Mrs. Czolgosz, the mother of the assassin, was in this city, said: "Mrs. Czolgosz is in Detroit. She left here on Saturday and has not returned to see her son. No one has asked to see the prisoner but those authorized to have no knowledge of the fact."

Denounced by Italian Republicans.

The Committee of the Italian Republican party at a meeting at No. 28 Jones street yesterday passed resolutions deploring the attempt on President McKinley's life and protesting against attacks on the Republic by the Anarchist enemies within it.

True Laws Against Anarchy.

At a meeting of the Executive committee of the City Democracy last evening at No. 18 West Forty-second street a resolution was adopted denouncing the attack on the President and urging New York Congressmen to vote for measures to stamp out anarchy.

EMMA GOLDMAN'S OWN SCHEDULE OF HER MOVEMENTS FOR TWO MONTHS.

(Special to The World.)

CHICAGO, Sept. 10—Emma Goldman's schedule of her recent movements is as follows:

I arrived in Buffalo June 12, accompanied by Marie Isaak, and left Buffalo July 13 for Rochester and remained in Rochester over the month.

On Aug. 13 I went to the Buffalo Exposition, accompanied by Marie Isaak, and left for home. Aug. 15 I went to Pittsburg to become travelling saleswoman for a New York house.

I left Pittsburg Sept. 1 and went to Cincinnati, where I remained one day.

I arrived in St. Louis Sept. 2, Labor Day, and remained there until last Saturday, when I came to Chicago. I arrived here Sunday morning.

EMMA GOLDMAN IN JAIL, ACCUSED OF CONSPIRACY.

[illegible] the name of which I do not care to mention, as it is private, so I do not like to try to find the place.

Sunday I walked about town and Monday went shopping at Fields. Monday evening I went to No. 38 Sheffield avenue, where I had known Mr. Norris in a business way. I did not know his mother or sister. I called him the above address and asked him to take me in. This he did and said he was glad to have the chance. I do not know even if he is a believer in my faith. I never talked to him about it. I simply met him when he was a travelling salesman, and I have known him about a year. I could think of no place else to go, so went there, quite at a venture.

If the police had been half an hour later I would have given them a surprise. I decided as soon as I saw that the women arrested at Isaak's were after me that I came to give myself up. I knew the police wanted me. It was only a question of a short time when they would get me.

Wanted to Kidnap Her.

I was dressing when Capt. Schaettler and his aide there came. I was dressed in a loose wrapper and it occurred to me to have a tea fight with them. I wanted to see how smart they were. "We are looking for Miss Goldman," said the burly captain.

"I do not know her," I replied in a sweet voice. "I am sure there is no such woman here."

"And who are you?" he asked.

"My name is Thurman," I answered. "I am a domestic here."

Then he began a search in the closets and under the beds, and all over the premises. When nothing had been found except a pamphlet with me the captain said he would have those of the detectives with me until I could make a further search. I kept a look at the detectives and told the captain that he could go, but that I was Miss Goldman. He all-wise me to remain, and I came to the station with them."

Mayor Harrison here said:

"Miss Goldman, are you aware that you have asked for talk plots and assassinations to you?"

I answered that I did not, but the imperious reply was that I heard he talked plots and dinner circles to Mr. Isaak and for that reason was denounced as a spy.

"Did any person write to you about this matter?" asked the Mayor.

Miss Goldman answered in the negative.

"I AM A DISCIPLE OF EMMA GOLDMAN," CZOLGOSZ SAID IN HIS CONFESSION.

"I meant to kill the President. I am a disciple of Emma Goldman.

"I have heard Emma Goldman lecture and have read her writings. I have done my duty."—From statement made by Czolgosz to the Buffalo police.

President's [illegible] Miss Goldman suddenly burst forth: "I would not arrest every Democrat in the land. Why not arrest children in prison as you have done with me?"

When did you come back here?" she was asked.

Sought to Help the Imaaks.

"I came to get the Isaaks out. I was at the house at No. 38 [illegible] since yesterday. I wanted to know if bail would be allowed to get them out of prison."

"Where would you get the money to bail them out?"

"I have seen certain people."

"Who were they?"

"You would not expect me to tell that," she replied with a smile.

"I have nothing to fear from your officers and your law," Miss Goldman continued. "I did not go to the house more than called my own convenience. I went about the neighborhood when I was staying and yesterday I came down town. I also walked around the city hall and I saw your policemen, but they did not see me. It grieves it comes for the freedom of this country to see the way myself and my friends are deprived of liberty simply because we exercise the right of free speech."

Miss Goldman almost burst into tears at this point.

Was Hungry, She Said.

Then she smiled on all about her and said: "Mr. Mayor, if the State can afford it I would like to have something to eat. I am awfully hungry. I have had nothing since 7 o'clock this morning."

"You shall have a good dinner because you are an obliging little woman," said Chief O'Neill.

But first," continued the Chief, "you are such a good-looking woman I really must have a picture of you."

The woman smiled and said: "You shall have it."

Then she burst into tears, but controlled herself in a moment. A carriage was called and Detective Schaettler escorted his prisoner to a restaurant, where she ate a hearty dinner. From there she was taken to the Harrison Street Police Station, where she sat for two hours. Then she was turned over to the matron and given the best room in the cells. Once in the matron's room she again gave way to tears but soon composed herself and received all callers.

Obstacles confront the Federal and State authorities in Chicago in the public prosecution of Emma Goldman. It is the opinion of several lawyers that she cannot be taken for trial in New York unless she and Czolgosz are charged with an offense under the Federal statutes.

Question of Extradition.

The suggestion that the assassin must be tried under the State laws of New York for assault with intent to kill would be a dead pre-under the preamble of Miss Goldman's being extradited on a county indictment and a $5,000 bail for two or more persons who conspire to injure any citizen in the exercise of any right secured to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States. The enforcement of [illegible] and a progress would. It is said, permit of the former's extradition from any State.

"Tip" Came from a Woman.

The tip that caused the arrest of Emma Goldman came from a woman who came to the Erie flat in Sheffield avenue and asked where Miss Goldman was. She was informed that she was not there. Yesterday, and also to-day, the woman came and asked repeatedly if Miss Goldman had returned. This morning she saw the Goldman woman and [illegible] hastened to Police Headquarters with the information.

Detectives Dilworth Norris, with his mother and sister, Stella Thorne, occupy the flat. They have lived at Adams and have been prominent in their congregation. Norris is an insurance broker, twenty-nine years old, a bachelor and a Democrat.

When Emma Goldman arrived in Chicago she went to the Erie flat in Sheffield avenue and was received with open arms. She saw Emma Goldman entertain her friends, and also took part in the meeting. She remained there until 2 o'clock this morning. She saw Emma Goldman enter a hack, and [illegible] followed

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY:—

President McKinley was decided to be on the road to complete recovery from the injuries inflicted by the would-be assassin on last Friday, and his condition was so encouraging that Dr. McBurney, Vice President Roosevelt, Senator Hanna, and others close to the President felt they could safely leave Buffalo.

The President asked for the daily papers and expressed a desire to know the current news, but accepted the advice of his doctors, who urged that absolute rest was necessary.

High Priestess of Anarchy, Who, Czolgosz Says, Was His Inspiration, Found in Hiding in Chicago.

FACES OFFICERS CALMLY.

Admits She Met the Would-Be Assassin Here on July 12, but Denies She Has Seen Him Since.

IS TRAPPED BY A TELEGRAM

Reiterates That Violence Is Not Her Creed and Declares "McKinley Is Too Insignificant a Man" to Kill.

SHE WILL FIGHT EXTRADITION.

Emma Goldman, the apostle of aggressive anarchy, whose words are said to have inspired Leon Czolgosz to attack President McKinley, is waiting in the hands of the Chicago police to face the charge of conspiring to kill the Chief Magistrate of the United States.

Having been in Chicago since Sunday morning last, practically in hiding, the woman was arrested yesterday at noon in the third floor flat of the building at 3[illegible] Sheffield avenue, the apartment occupied by Charles G. Norris. With a smile, she met Detective Charles K. Herts, who had clambered in through a window, and Police Captain Herman Schuettler, and to them at first denied her identity. Then she acknowledged that she was anarchy's high priestess and accompanied them to the office of Chief of Police O'Neill in the City Hall.

Again and again during the day she was subjected to a rapid fire of questions. She admitted that she met Czolgosz in Chicago on July 12. An acquaintance of thirty-five minutes, she asserts, is all that she ever had with the assailant now cowering in a cell at Buffalo. She admits that he may have heard her lecture in Cleveland last May. But she contends that she preached against violence, asserting that violence and the principles of her cult had nothing in common.

She struck at President McKinley with stinging words.

"I consider him too insignificant a man for the purpose of assassination," she said, her voice betraying no [illegible]

tion with Sheffield avenue. Where this telegram was sent from is not yet discovered, but it is said to have come from St. Louis or possibly from "a point near Buffalo," perhaps Buffalo itself.

It is known that the woman heard of the arrest in Chicago of Isaak and his comrades in an almost miraculously short time after they were taken. On Saturday night she sent a message to the Oakdale avenue man, asking if it were true that Isaak and [illegible] had been arrested.

The Oakdale avenue man replied that it was true.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 10.—[Special.]—From a surgical standpoint President McKinley's wound from the bullet fired by Leon Czolgosz last Friday is now a closed incident. His recovery is as much assured as anything can be where a man is carrying about a leaden bullet.

All of the President's physicians unite in saying not only that he will recover but that his convalescence will be extremely rapid.

Considerable uneasiness was felt at the length of the night consultation of the President's physicians, who were in conference nearly two hours, but the doctors declared there was no need for anxiety. Dr. McBurney, who was to leave for home this evening, decided to remain over another day, but this was explained by the statement that he had missed the train.

Outer Wound Is Reopened.

The statement in the 10:30 o'clock bulletin that it had been found necessary to open in part the President's outside wound to remove some foreign substance was offset by the announcement that the operation had caused no harm.

It developed that a portion of the President's clothing had been carried into the wound by the bullet and this had not been cleared away at the first operation. As slight

"GENTLEMAN HORSE THIEF" SENT TO A STATE PRISON.

George R. Downs of Chicago Pleads Guilty at Kenosha, Wis., and Is Given a Three-Year Term at Waupun.

George R. Downs of Chicago, known as the "gentleman horse thief" was tried for horse stealing yesterday in the Circuit Court at Kenosha, Wis., and was sentenced to three years in the State prison at Waupun. It was one boast of Downs that he "affect gentleman—even when stealing horses."

He led one part of his existence on the South Side in Chicago, where he represented himself as a traveling salesman. He left the city to "work" in Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin. The case which proved disastrous to him was the taking of a team owned by H. A. Kupfer, a Kenosha liveryman. When taken he protested his innocence and he had prepared an elaborate defense.

When his trial began he saw that the evidence against him was overwhelming and he threw his notes into the waste paper basket, entering a plea of guilty. He declared that he had a number of influential friends, who he expected would get a pardon for him before he could be removed to the prison. The information which led to his conviction is said to have been supplied by men with whom he had worked.

IN HIDING IN CHICAGO

FACES OFFICERS CALMLY.

Admits She Met the Would-Be Assassin Here on July 12, but Denies She Has Seen Him Since.

IS TRAPPED BY A TELEGRAM

Reiterates That Violence Is Not Her Creed and Declares "McKinley Is Too Insignificant a Man" to Kill.

SHE WILL FIGHT EXTRADITION.

Emma Goldman, the apostle of aggressive anarchy, whose words are said to have inspired Leon Czolgosz to attack President McKinley, is waiting in the hands of the Chicago police to face the charge of conspiring to kill the Chief Magistrate of the United States.

Having been in Chicago since Sunday morning last, practically in hiding, the woman was arrested yesterday at noon in the third floor flat of the building at 3 Sheffield avenue, the apartment occupied by Charles G. Norris. With a smile, she met Detective Charles K. Herts, who had clambered in through a window, and Police Captain Hermann Schuettler, and to them at first denied her identity. Then she acknowledged that she was anarchy's high priestess and accompanied them to the office of Chief of Police O'Neill in the City Hall.

Again and again during the day she was subjected to a rapid fire of questions. She admitted that she met Czolgosz in Chicago on July 12. An acquaintance of thirty-five minutes, she asserts, is all that she ever had with the assailant now cowering in a cell at Buffalo. She admits that he may have heard her lecture in Cleveland last May. But she contends that she preached against violence, asserting that violence and the principles of her cult had nothing in common.

She struck at President McKinley with stinging words.

"I consider him too insignificant a man for the purpose of assassination," she said, her voice betraying no malice.

Faces Law's Officers Coolly.

Shortly after the noon hour she faced Chief O'Neill, Mayor Harrison, Chief of Detectives Colleran, and a dozen detectives in the Chief's office. She met every question coolly, without the least display of temper to shake her composure.

She sought to clear herself of the charge that she had met Czolgosz since July 12. She presented her itinerary since that date. It follows:

Left Chicago 8:30 p. m., July 12.
Arrived Buffalo on July 13.
July 15 to Aug. 15 at her sister's home in Rochester.
Left St. Louis for Chicago on Sept. 7.
Arrived in Chicago on Sept. 8, registering at a hotel under an assumed name.
Went to home of Charles O. Harris, 203 Sheffield avenue, on Sept. 9.

Suspect Recent Buffalo Visit.

In spite of the Goldman "itinerary" the police here hope to be able to prove that the woman was in Buffalo last week. Though they do not openly admit it, they expect to establish this fact through the testimony of John Nowak with whom Czolgosz boarded in Buffalo. Nowak was brought here and was called in to assist in the identification of Miss Goldman when she was arrested.

That Nowak will be used as a witness should an attempt be made to release the woman on a writ of habeas corpus before the arrival of the Buffalo authorities with requisition papers is indicated by the movement of the police. They declare, however, that "he is only on a visit and will return home in a few days."

Nowak who formerly lived in Chicago, arrived direct from Buffalo on Monday morning. On his arrival here he communicated with Chief O'Neill and his presence was made known also to Mayor Harrison, who has personally interested himself in the case. When Captain Schuettler and the detectives surrounded the apartment at 203 Sheffield avenue, Nowak, owing to his knowing Emma Goldman, accompanied the party. After her arrest he accompanied her to the office of Chief O'Neill and was present when she was interviewed by Mayor Harrison and the Chief.

When asked what Nowak's presence in the city had to do with the arrest of the woman, Mayor Harrison said the man was on hand merely to identify her in case of her denial of her real identity, and beyond that he had nothing to do with the arrest.

Seen in Rochester on Thursday.

Another suggestion that Miss Goldman's account of her own movements is incorrect comes from Rochester, where it is said she was seen last Thursday night. According to Rochester advices she was at the New York Central station and was seen by Mrs. Bernard Heiberg whose husband is one of the Supreme Court officers. It is said that Mrs. [illegible] Anarchists. She adds:

"Miss Goldman was accompanied by a man who didn't take much interest in the conversation. He was a wild-eyed looking fellow, with heavy black mustache, shifty eyes, and the look of one who did not care to be seen. Miss Goldman had a ticket for Buffalo in her hand. She said she was going there. The only remark I remember was one about the odors in Rochester."

Mrs. Kraig, who lives in Joseph avenue, Rochester, is said also to have seen Miss Goldman on Thursday prior to her departure for Buffalo.

Arrest Clew from Telegram.

Miss Goldman was located and arrested in Chicago because she sent a telegram on Saturday night last to a certain man who lives in Oakdale avenue, not far from the intersection with Sheffield avenue. Where this telegram was sent from is not yet discovered, but it is said to have come from St. Louis or possibly from "a point near Buffalo," perhaps Buffalo itself.

It is known that the woman heard of the arrest in Chicago of Isaak and his comrades in an almost miraculously short time after they were taken. On Saturday night she sent a message to the Oakdale avenue flat, asking if it were true that Isaak and [illegible] had been arrested.

The Oakdale avenue man replied that it was true.

Then Miss Goldman wired that she would be at his house on Saturday night.

The detectives learned of these telegrams and watched the Oakdale avenue house all Sunday night. The place was dark. Apparently no one was inside. No one approached during the night. However, a continuous watch was kept during Monday.

Long Watch Is Rewarded.

On Monday night the long vigil was rewarded. A lone woman approached the house. She rang the front door bell. No answer. She knocked at the door. No response. Then she walked cautiously around the house and knocked at the back door. No one opened it.

After a few moments' hesitation the woman left the house and walked in Oakdale avenue to Sheffield avenue. She went straight to Norris' home, No. 203. Here she was admitted. One of the detectives who had followed her staid to watch the house. The other—for there were two—reported the discovery to his superiors.

No persons entered or left the Sheffield avenue house from the time the woman was admitted until Captain Schuettler visited the place and arrested Emma Goldman.

Complaint Against Miss Goldman.

The warrant for the woman's arrest was issued by Justice Prindiville on the following complaint:

"The complaint and information of Luke P. Colleran of Chicago, in said county, made before J. K. Prindiville, one justice of the peace in aforesaid county, on this 10th day of September, 1901.

"Said complainant, being duly sworn upon his oath says that on, to-wit, the day and year and in the county aforesaid Emma Goldman, Areham Isaak Sr., Abrahem Isaak Jr., Marie Isaak Sr. Marie Isaak Jr., Clemance Pfuetzer, Julia Mechanic, Hippolyte Havel, and Alfred Schneider did unlawfully conspire and agree together feloniously and willfully, with malice aforethought, to kill and murder William McKinley, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and this complainant has just and reasonable grounds for believing that the aforesaid Emma Goldman, Abraham Isaak Sr., Abraham Isaak Jr., Marie Isaak Sr., Marie Isaak Jr. ClemencePfuetzer, Julia Mechanic are guilty of the offense aforesaid, and therefore prays that the said Emma Goldman may be arrested and deal with according to the law.

"LUKE P. COLLERAN.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me on this 10th day of September, 1901.

"JOHN K. RINDIVILLE,
"Justice of the Peace."

Text of Conspiracy Warrant.

The warrant itself, on which she is held and on which she will be arraigned this morning before Justice Prindiville, reads as follows:

"The People of the State of Illinois, to all Sheriffs, Coroners, Constables, and Police Officers within said State, Greeting:

"Whereas, complaint in writing under oath has been this day entered before the undersigned, a justice of the peace within and for said county, by Luke P. Colleran that the [illegible] committed in said county and State, and that said complainant has just and reasonable grounds to believe that Emma Goldman, Clemence Pfeutsner, Abraham Isaak Sr., Abraham Isaak Jr., Marie Isaak Sr. Marie Isaak Jr., Julia Mechanic, Hippolyte Havel, Henry Travaglio, and Alfred Schneider committed said offense,

"We, therefore, hereby command you further to arrest said Emma Goldman, Clemence Pfeutsner, Abraham Isaak Sr. Abraham Isaak Jr., Marie Isaak Sr., Marie Isaak Jr., Julia Mechanic, Hippolyte Havel, Henry Travaglio, and Alfred Schneider and bring them before me at my office in the First district police court room in said city, or in case of my absence or inability to act, before any other Judge or justice of the peace of said county, to answer to the people of the State of Illinois on said charge and abide by such further orders as may be made concerning said charge.

"And make due service and return thereof, as the law directs.

"Given under my hand and seal at said office this 10th day of September, 1901.

"JOHN K. PRINDIVILLE,
"Justice of the Peace."

Telegraphs to Her Family.

Immediately after her arrest Miss Goldman sent one telegram. It was addressed to her brother-in-law, H. Hochstein, at 212 Joseph avenue, Rochester, N. Y. It read as follows:

"Arrested. Do not worry. Will be out soon. Comfort mother. EMMA."

The woman will fight the request from the Buffalo authorities received by Chief O'Neill last night, that she go to that city without requisition papers.

"I shall not give the police that pleasure," she said. "I shall make them produce requisition papers. If I go there they will have to fight to get me there!"

Attorney Leopold Saltiel may make a fight this morning for her release on a habeas corpus writ.

"We shall hold this woman," said Captain Colleran, "until this alleged conspiracy is cleared away."

What Chief O'Neill Thinks.

As a result of the day's work Chief O'Neill said last night:

"I have a belief that there was an understanding among the Anarchists regarding the attack on the President. From information in our hands all the persons now under arrest have at one time or another betrayed an undue knowledge of the affair. Further developments are necessary to make a clear case, but we have been warranted in taking the steps we have."

Obstacles to Extraditing Her.

It was suggested by lawyers during the day that obstacles may lie in the way of Miss Goldman's extradition for trial in New York, unless she and Czolgosz are charged with an offense under the federal statutes. The suggestion that the would-be assassin must be tried under the State laws of New York for assault with intent to kill would, it is said, preclude the possibility of Miss Goldman's being extradited as an accessory before the fact, as her alleged incendiary statements were not made in New York and she is not a fugitive from justice from that State. It is stated, however, that she and Czolgosz might be charged with an offense under section 5508 of the federal statutes, which fixes a ten-year term of imprisonment and a $5,000 fine for two or more persons who conspire to injure any citizen in the exercise of any right secured to him by the constitution and laws of the United States. The enforcement of this statute against Miss Goldman and Czolgosz would, it is said, permit of the former's extradition from any State.

Details of Her Statement.

There was little of the accepted marks of the Anarchist about Miss Goldman when she was led into Chief O'Neill's office from the flat at 203 Sheffield avenue. Her short walking skirt of blue cloth had been carefully brushed, her white waist was spotlessly clean, the band of blue silk ribbon knotted about her neck was held in place by a jeweled pin. Her hair, light and parted, was brushed back and gave her the appearance of a student—an appearance further heightened by the heavy, gold bowed eyeglasses which she wore.

Not 5 feet in height, her determination is shown in her chin. It is square though rather retreating. Paleness marked her cheeks at times, but there was never any evidence of fear. Her slight [illegible] accent [illegible] birthplace Russia. It lends however, a fascination to her speech.

"If the police want to keep this up why let them," she asserted. "They are making Anarchists by the dozen. They will save me much work."

How She Met Czolgosz.

"Did you meet Leon Czolgosz in Chicago about July 12?" she was asked.

"I did," came the unhesitating answer. "I saw him for the space of probably thirty five minutes. He walked with me to the station when I left for the East."

"Did you not see Czolgosz in Buffalo two days before the crime was committed?"

"No, sir. I was then in Cincinnati and about to leave there for St. Louis."

10:30 p. m.—The condition of the President is unchanged in all important particulars. His temperature is 100.6; pulse, 114; respiration, 28.

When the operation was done on Friday last it was noted that the bullet had carried with it a short distance beneath the skin a fragment of the President's coat. This foreign material was, of course, removed, but a slight irritation of the tissues was produced, the evidences of which has appeared early tonight. It has been necessary on account of this slight disturbance to remove a few stitches and partially open the skin wound.

This incident cannot give rise to other complications, but it is communicated to the public, as the surgeons in attendance wish to make their bulletins entirely frank.

In consequence of this separation of the edges of the serious wound the healing of the same will be somewhat delayed. The President is now well enough to begin to take nourishment by the mouth in the form of pure beef juice.

EMMA GOLDMAN IN LAW'S GRASP.

High Priestess of Anarchy, Who Czolgosz Says Inspired Him, Found in Hiding.

FACES OFFICERS CALMLY.

Admits She Met Would-Be Assassin Here July 12, but Denies Later Meeting.

ENTRAPPED BY A TELEGRAM.

Says Violence Is Not Her Creed and Calls "McKinley Too Insignificant" to Kill.

SHE WILL FIGHT EXTRADITION.

"But you have seen this man Czolgosz since July 12 last?'

"I have not seen him since that time I know nothing about him."

When Czolgosz Called at Isaak's.

Then she detailed her meeting with the would-be assassin in Chicago.

"I was at the house of Abraham Isaak. Yes, the house at 515 Carroll street. I was preparing to take the Nickel Plate train for the East with Miss Isaak. A ring came at the door. I answered the bell and found a young man there. He asked for Mr. Isaak. The latter had left the house, promising to meet us at the station and say good-by. I so told the young man and I further told him that he might go to the station with us and meet Mr. Isaak there. So you see," she asserted, "he would not even have been with me for thirty-five minutes had I not asked him to go so the train.

"The young man—yes, it was Czolgosz, who shot the President—said that he had met me before. He said he had heard me lecture in Cleveland. I had delivered a lecture there on May 6, but I can't remember all the people who shake hands with me, can I? I had no remembrance of him. We went to the station on the elevated train and this man accompanied us. I asked him where he had heard of Mr. Isaak. He said he had read the latter's paper, Free Society. He did not talk to me about a plot. I never heard of him from that time until McKinley was shot."

"But did you not hear from him in some way?"

"I went from Chicago to Rochester by way of Buffalo," came the answer. "I left Chicago on July 12, reached Buffalo the following day, and left there on the 13th. I did not see anybody in Buffalo—well by anybody, I mean any one who knew Czolgosz."

"You met Hattie Lang?"

Hattie Lang was the Buffalo "agent" of the Free Society which Isaak published.

"Yes, met Hattie Lang."

"But didn't you see Czolgosz in Buffalo?"

"No, I didn't see him."

"Did you talk to anybody who knew him?"

"No."

had been arrested. I didn't believe that the Isaaks could have been arrested, though the paper stated that the Chicago police had done this."

"And you did not meet the police?"

Denies She Was Hiding.

"The fact that I came to Chicago," came the reply, with just a show of impatience, "shows that I had no intention of hiding myself. If I had wanted to hide I would have been able to go from St. Louis right across to Canada and then they would have looked for me for a long time. I came here especially to be on the spot when I saw the necessity of announcing myself to the police. If the police were able to connect me with the attack on the President I was ready to give myself up."

"But you sought to get bail for the Isaaks, didn't you?"

"I saw some people who could get bail," came the tentative reply.

"Did you see Miss Jane Addams in this endeavor?"

"I haven't seen Miss Addams since 1897 when I met her at the trades' carnival."

"Have you been to 515 Carroll avenue to meet any one?"

"I haven't been there since I came to the city. I knew I should walk into the hands of the detectives if I went there. I took a cab when I got off the Wabash train on Sunday morning, had a porter carry my grip for me, and drove at once to a hotel. Which hotel? I won't tell you that. No, I made no attempt to get my mail. There is nothing of importance coming to me, anyhow."

What She Says of the Attack.

"But do you think Czolgosz's act was praiseworthy?" was finally insisted on.

"I am not in a position to say whether it was good or bad," she answered, squaring herself in her chair. "It is for the man who did it to decide. I am not in his boots and know nothing about it. I don't see why they should make any more fuss about the President than over any other man. All men are born equal, I believe," she concluded with an ironical emphasis.

"But some man rise above the equality of birth," was suggested. "We are all interested in the man whom we have made our chief."

"I think money put this man in office, not you," returned anarchy's priestess hotly.

"But Czolgosz asserts that you inspired him to commit this crime?"

"If I see him and he tells me that he said that, then I will believe," she said. "Not before."

Walter Nowak Questions Her.

"Don't you believe you are responsible for Czolgosz's deed?" demanded Walter Nowak, the man who identified the assassin in Buffalo. "Don't you believe that your speeches aroused him so that he had to do it?"

"Certainly not," came the calm answer.

"He said they did. He said it in my presence," insisted the interrogator.

"I don't believe the man said that. It is foolish to think that this man would claim that he did that deed alone and unaided and at the same time to claim that I inspired him. If he had accomplices, but still claims that he was acting alone, do you think he would have singled me out as the only friend he would not protect by assuming entire responsibility?"

"But he heard you lecture?"

That Lecture in Cleveland.

"He may have heard me lecture in Cleveland, for I lectured there twice on May 6. I said absolutely nothing that could inspire anybody to commit murder, however. I advocate education, not violence. The lecture that I delivered could never have stirred him to violence. I talked of the 'Modern Phases of Anarchy.' My lecture was entirely philosophical and scientific. I dealt a great deal with the question of violence, showing that violence and anarchy have nothing to do with each other."

"He says your words inspired him to shoot the President."

"I don't believe it. If he wanted to shield me why would he mention my name? The trouble is that the newspaper men and the police have fixed that up. He never said that. He would never say that I inspired him if he had any one to help him—which probability is to my mind wholly untrue."

Ridiculus Hanna's Plot Story.

Then the woman turned her anger on the President and Senator Hanna.

"It's strange," she asserted, "that Mark Hanna, the real ruler of this country, for McKinley has been only a tool, should at once claim that there was a plot to kill. Why, McKinley has been nothing but this man's tool. He has been the most insignificant and ignorant President this country ever had. He has no ability nor intelligence that I was Emma Goldman; that I was ready to go with him."

She closed this recital with a hearty laugh. She continued to assert that she had never preached the doctrine of violence.

"Violence is the product of governmentalism, not anarchy," she insisted. "Since government is based on force and wholesale murder, there can be no other outcome. Yes, we believe in no government. In each individual governing himself; in equal opportunity for all."

"But your followers have given themselves over to violence in many instances."

Her Explanation of Violence.

"The majority has nothing to do with violence," she challenged. "But violence is dependent not only on the understanding, but on the character of persons. Of two men, one may be calm and opposing any semblence of violence, though despising it. The other may be impatient, observe the misery and inequality about him, be carried away by despair arising from this force, and commit violence. Of such, Czolgosz may have been."

"But during the building trades' strike in Chicago did you not urge the pickets to attack workmen?"

"That's as true as these stories of the present," she replied, quietly. "I was in Paris at that time. I never said anything of the kind. I was not here."

"While there did you see Bresci, the murderer of King Humbert?"

"I did not. I never knew him."

"Did you know any of the men who have sought to take the lives of rulers?"

"I knew one man, Alexander Bergman, the man who tried to kill H. C. Frick during the Homestead strikes. No other."

Then she discussed her arrest again.

"These arrests," said she, "smack a great deal of the Haymarket riot. The police have found themselves discredited in the eyes of the people. Scandals are upon them. They must do something to show that they are really of some value to have around. They are trying to cleanse themselves by making latest. The police must have secured those letters on Saturday.

"Now do you suppose," she continued, "that if there had been anything wrong—plots, conspiracy, anything of that kind—that they would have allowed me to come to Chicago of all places? Why, they would have arrested me. Of course I understand that your police are in the habit of arresting guiltless persons. If you want to make another affair such as that of the Haymarket in 1887 they can do it. But they cannot find a scintilla of evidence against me."

"Do you mean that if the police do not desist there will be more bomb throwing?" she was asked.

"You misunderstand me," came the quick reply. "I mean that the police are intending—if they do not succeed it will not be their fault—to bring about another judicial murder. To get up a plot and to kill out the shadows they stand under."

"Will this attempted murder of the President have the result of stamping out anarchy?"

"My friend," she began, "you will never stamp out anarchy any more than you can keep down the waves of the sea with a broom. You may kill an Anarchist, but you cannot kill an idea. You killed the Haymarket Anarchists. But did you stamp out anarchy? No, it has grown stronger and stronger in Chicago. You cannot kill out this idea. It will grow stronger and stronger everywhere. Anarchism will never be stamped out."

Captain Schuettler Plays the Host.

It was long after 2 o'clock before Miss Goldman had her dinner.

"I'm sorry to keep you waiting so long," said Captain Schuettler.

"O, don't bother yourself," replied the woman. "I shall have a good dinner, though. The State will pay for it. I shall have a splendid dinner today."

As she left the Chief's office with Captain Schuettler the former extended his hand.

"I can't shake hands with you," she said.

of Detectives Smith and Beumer of the Sheffield Avenue Station.

Norris Also Arrested.

Shortly before 2 o'clock Norris turned into Sheffield avenue from Webster avenue and started toward the building on the opposite side of the street. He passed the house and was hurrying out of the vicinity when Detective Smith followed and overtook him.

"Is your name Norris?" Smith asked.

"Yes, it is. What do you want?"

"Well, you're under arrest," said the detective.

Norris made no comment and has since months he had been ill and had not been associated with any firm.

"I do not place any credence in the assertions of the man," said Chief O'Neill at the termination of the examination. "All arrangements had been made for the escape of the woman this morning and this man must have been aware of it. I shall ask that Norris be indicted with the others for conspiracy and on the specific charge of aiding and abetting the escape of a fugitive from justice."

EMMA GOLDMAN'S OWN STORY.

more, there wouldn't be anything wrong with them. The standard of morals in the student class is phenomenally high, and the average intelligent Russian woman's mind is as pure as it is broad.

"The relation between the sexes in Russia is the most ideal of any I know about. That is why young Russian women learn to think. And because they think they become Anarchists.

Proud of Her Anarchy.

"I was an Anarchist when I left Russia to come to America, but I had hardly formulated my belief. The final influence that crystallized my views was the hanging of the Chicago Anarchists in 1887. I followed that case carefully and it made me an active Anarchist. I was living with my family in Rochester then, and the nearest thing to a radical society the town had was a Social Democratic society, same as a house cat. I came away to New York and went to work in a factory. That showed me a new side of life. My family had been well-to-do, and I hadn't come in actual contact with the want and suffering of the world until I joined the wage-earners.

"Of course the experience strengthened my revolutionary ideas. When the Waist and Shirtmaker Girls' union went out in 1858 I led the strike. That is, in a way I led it. I have never been an Anarchist leader. I cannot afford it. A leader must be a diplomat. I am not a diplomat. A leader of a party makes concessions to his party, for the sake of holding his power. He must give way to his followers in order to be sure they will sustain him. I can't do all that. I am an Anarchist because I love individual freedom and I will not surrender that freedom.

"I soon saw that the safest and wisest way to keep myself free was not to be a leader. That is why I am connected with no party. I am a member of no group. I stand outside. I take no pay. I accept no favors. What I do I do individually, for love of the cause. There is no party to back me, but there is no party to say: 'You must do this and you must not do that. You are paid. You owe it to us. You must bow to the majority.' I bow to nothing except my idea of right. I am free and I will stay free. Individual freedom and responsibility—there is the basis for true anarchy.

Emma Goldman, the Woman.

"You know I am a professional nurse. It has always been the dream of my life to be a doctor, but I never could manage it—could not get means for the study. My factory work undermined my health, so I thought that if I couldn't be a doctor I could at least be a little part of the profession. I went through the training for a nurse, did the hospital work, and now nurse private cases.

"When I came out of prison on Blackwell's Island I was nervous. I decided to try a change and go to Europe for a year. I could lecture for the cause and take a course in massage and in midwifery in Vienna. There is no good training for either here, though we have the best training schools for nurses in the world.

"Well, I went and did my studying and then went to Paris to study and wait for the Anarchists' congress. You know the government prohibited the congress. We had it all the same, but the meetings were secret. I received the honor or dishonor of especially strict surveillance. I was to give a series of lectures, but after the third the authorities warned me that if I gave any more I must leave France, and so I wanted to attend the congress I kept quiet.

"Finally, detectives escorted me to the station and saw my luggage checked to the steamer and then notified the government that the dangerous woman was on her way out of France."

"You met Hattie Lang."

Hattie Lang was the Buffalo "agent" of the Free Society which Isaak published.

"Yes, met Hattie Lang."

"But didn't you see Czolgosz in Buffalo?"

"No. I didn't see him."

"Did you talk to anybody who knew him?"

"No."

"Didn't you meet a number of Anarchists in Buffalo?"

"I may have met some friends. Czolgosz was not known. His name was never mentioned. No, I didn't do anything in connection with the 'work' in Rochester."

"I left Buffalo with Marie Isaak on July 15, and went to my sister's home in Rochester—the home of Mrs. Hochstein. I staid there until Aug. 16 or 17—I'm not sure as to the exact time."

"But while in Rochester you sent several letters to Hippolyte Havel, the Chicago Anarchist now under arrest?"

Those Letters to Havel.

"I did," admitted the little woman, whirling her glasses on her finger. "But they were private letters. They had nothing to do with the 'cause.'"

"And from Rochester?"

"I started on a business trip. I travel for a New York firm, you know, to make my expenses. We first went to Buffalo—Marie Isaak, a number of friends, and I. They went to see the exposition. I did not meet any one who knew Czolgosz. His name was never mentioned. Then I went to Pittsburg, then to Cincinnati, and then to St. Louis. I reached St. Louis last Thursday. I remained there until Saturday evening."

"But the police wanted you."

"I know it. I saw the police, but they didn't see me," she smiled with a show of satisfaction.

"But why didn't you let the police know of your whereabouts if you have nothing to fear?"

"For reasons of my own, I guess," she added, laughing. "I like to fool the police whenever I can. They are big fools. They showed it on Saturday."

Reached Chicago Last Sunday.

"And you reached Chicago——?"

"Sunday morning about 8 o'clock," she broke in. "I went to a hotel and registered under an assumed name. The police never bothered me," she added, with a shuw of contempt.

"But why did you come here?"

"I came here to be on the spot when the time should come when I would be needed," she returned with determination in every tone.

"Didn't you come here, too, in the hope of some way helping the Isaak family?"

"Yes, to help them if possible. And, if the police connected me with the thing, to be here to face them."

"O, I intended to come here anyhow," she added with a twinkle of her eyes. "I didn't disarrange my plans. I intended to come here and then go to Detroit, to Cleveland, to Pittsburg, to Washington, to Philadelphia, and back to New York City. The New York firm I travel for? I would not like to mention the name. I am a trained nurse, you know, by profession, but I travel for this house to make my expenses."

As Quiet as a Trained Nurse.

The stamp of the trained nurse is on this woman, too. Her bearing is that of one who has been accustomed to dealing with the sick. Her voice is soft and her every action is marked by gentleness. There is nothing of the Carrie Nation type of "reformer" about her. In the uniform of the hospital and sickroom she would pass muster among any number of nurses.

"Where did you first hear of the assassination of President McKinley?"

"O, I didn't receive any news. I heard the newsboys in St. Louis crying their 'extras.' I was going to my boarding-house at 1350 South Thirteenth street. I didn't buy a paper. I know from experience that there are no reliable papers in this country," she continued with a mocking smile at the newspapermen.

"Well, but you knew that you had been charged with the attempted murder?"

"I didn't know that until Saturday afternoon. I got a paper then and to my amazement found that the man who fired the shot

President and Senator Hanna.

"It's strange," she asserted, "that Mark Hanna, the real ruler of this country, for McKinley has been only a tool, should at once claim that there was a plot to kill. Why McKinley has been nothing but this man's tool. He has been the most insignificant and ignorant President this country ever had. He has no skill nor intelligence. Other Presidents have had wits and intelligence. McKinley has been a tool in the hands of monopolists of the wealthy. It seems remarkable that Mark Hanna should talk of a plot."

Calls President "Too Insignificant."

"Then you did not desire to have the President killed?"

"No," and she threw back her head. "No, I consider him too insignificant a man for that purpose."

"Do you believe the cause might have been better furthered, if violence was to be committed, if some monopolist had been stricken down?"

"Yes, the monopolists are responsible for all this misery about us. Had the conditions on which this country was founded been adhered to and followed there would be no Czolgosz today. But you have sought to pursue the lines of an empire. The monopolists are responsible for the conditions today. Now you are trying to throw the blame on our shoulders—the blame for their own work."

"Well, there are other countries where you may live."

"But European countries," she replied, "do not pretend to be free. Here you pretend to have liberty and you have none."

"To these conditions, then, you ascribe Czolgosz's act?"

"This man was one of the unfortunates who was driven about by the misery which he saw surrounding him. He was driven by this to commit the act. He thought he might be the means of bringing relief to his fellows."

"But the police hold that this crime was the result of a carefully planned plot?"

Knows of No Conspiracy.

The woman laughed, swinging her feet back and forth as she whirled her glasses on either index finger.

"I know of no plot. That man was too intelligent. He evidently could make his own plans. I speak now merely from what I have heard."

"But you sympathize with him and approve his deed?"

"I feel deeply with him as an individual. If I had the means I would help him. I would aid him to get counsel and try to see that he received justice."

"Do you believe he is sane?"

The prisoner changed her tactics.

"I don't know whether he is sane or not," she replied, carelessly. "And since I don't care I don't see why I should give an opinion."

Pours Out Wrath on Police.

She then directed her wrath against the police.

"I couldn't believe that the Isaak family had been arrested," she asserted. "Think of dragging a girl of 16 and a boy to the police station!"

"But there were clews which warranted this step!"

"Yes," she returned, "but if a Democrat had killed McKinley I feel certain that the police would not have raided the homes of all the Democrats in this city. I feel certain that they would not have dragged the children of Democrats to cells. They would have held only the man who committed the act responsible."

"But you yourself did not visit the police to set aside the suspicion resting on you."

"O as to my arrest! I was going to give myself up to the police during the morning. Had Captain Schuettler been a half hour later much trouble would have been saved. I would have given myself up in that time."

Then she exhibited her pleasure as she related her experience of the morning.

Laughs at Captain Schuettler.

"When Captain Schuettler entered the house he found me dressing. I was preparing to go to the station then. I had fun with him for some time. He asked me if I knew Emma Goldman. I said 'No.' I told him there was no Emma Goldman there. I said I was a servant. I gave the name of Thorsen—any that happened to come to my lips. He told me not to be frightened, but that he had to search the house. He found a fountain pen in a box bearing my name. I told him the people of the house might have found it. He then said he would have to leave a detective there. I then told him that I didn't care to be trusted with a detective; Homestead strikes. No other."

Then she discussed her arrest again.

"These arrests," said she, "smack a great deal of the Haymarket riot. The police have found themselves discredited in the eyes of the people. Scandals are upon them. They must do something to show that they are really of some value to have around. They are trying to cleanse themselves by making up a case of Anarchists and plots. If they wish to make up this case they may do it—the police can do almost anything. Especially the Chicago police," she added, looking at Chief O'Neill.

"But were there any scandals at the time of the Haymarket riot?"

She put her hand to her head with a mock-heroic gesture.

"Police scandals? There are so many that it would take a better head than mine to remember. But in the present case, the idea of sweeping down on families during the night! Of dragging a girl of 16 to jail! I say for the police, though, they don't do it of their own account. They are well paid for it in all probability."

"But violence was committed at the Haymarket riot?"

What Made Her an Anarchist.

"I do not admit that violence was committed," she asserted. "I believe that was a judicial murder. So do others who believe in justice. I became an Anarchist through the hanging of the Chicago Anarchists. I sympathized with them. The fact that Governor Altgeld pardoned three of them showed that they were unlawfully and illegally sentenced.

"The police have yet to prove who threw the bomb. I am not sure that they themselves did not do it. Mind, I have too much respect for human life to accuse any one. But the police have not shown that they did not do this.

"The men were no more guilty in throwing the Haymarket bomb that I am in this," she concluded.

"Are you in the habit of visiting friends of anarchy under an assumed name?" she was asked suddenly.

"Indeed not," she answered, seeing the trend of the question. "I suppose you infer that I went to Mr. Norris' home under an assumed name. I did not. I had met Mr. Norris during the course of my work as a saleswoman. I went to his home on Monday afternoon and asked if I might spend the night there. I was kindly received and remained there."

"That reminds me," she continued. "The police! Why, I was shopping on Saturday afternoon. I visited many of the big stores in State street. In fact, I passed the City Hall three times. Yes, I saw the police. They paid no attention to me, however."

Sits for Her Photograph.

Then Miss Goldman was asked to sit for a photograph for THE TRIBUNE. She readily consented. Every opportunity tending to get her name before the public was readily welcomed.

"Your pictures hitherto published do not do you justice," said Chief O'Neill as he arranged a chair for her.

She flushed for an instant. Then she added, turning to Detective Herts:

"Well, if my photographs had been good I presume you would have found me more quickly."

Warrant Is Read to Her.

It was Detective Herts who read the warrant for her arrest to her in Chief O'Neill's office shortly before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

"Shall I read this, or do you desire it dispensed with?" he asked.

"You might just as well read it," she replied, closing the book, "Toward Democracy," which she had been trying to read at intervals.

The detective came to the sentence: "That the conspiracy to commit murder was committed in this said county and State."

She sneered at the words, then smiled to those who stood about.

"We demand you to make due service and return hereof, as the law directs," continued the detective later.

"I'm sure the law doesn't direct you to arrest persons who commit no offense," she broke in quietly, never losing her composure.

Mayor Questions Miss Goldman.

During the noon hour Mayor Harrison was among those who questioned her in Chief O'Neill's office.

"The police knew that I was coming here," she told him. "I sent letters to the Isaaks from St. Louis. I told them I would be here on Sunday if I could finish my business there on Saturday. If not at that time, I promised to be here on Monday or Tuesday at the

"I'm sorry to keep you waiting so long," said Captain Schuettler.

"O, don't bother yourself," replied the woman. "I shall have a good dinner, though. The State will pay for it. I shall have a splendid dinner today."

As she left the Chief's office with Captain Schuettler the former extended his hand.

"I can't shake hands with you," she said, drawing back. "You represent government and the law. We believe in no government."

She was escorted to a carriage by the Captain and driven at once to the Harrison Street Annex, where she ate a hearty dinner. Then, in the afternoon, she again faced the police authorities and a circle of newspaper men.

"You are to be married soon, are you not?" was asked.

Doesn't Believe in Marriage.

"Me? Not that I know of," came the reply. "I don't believe in marriage. The law has no right to interfere in the private affairs of the people. Marriage is a private matter, to my mind. I don't see, then, why ministers or judges should stick their noses in. No, sir, I do not believe in marriages."

"Will you insist on a trial when you are arraigned in the morning?" she was asked last night.

"Indeed, I shall," she returned. "I shall insist on an immediate hearing. I have asked the Chief to tell Attorney Salthiel to visit me and care for my case. I have heard nothing from him as yet."

"Do you have any hope of getting out on bail?"

"O, they don't want to try me here," she answered quickly. "They want to get me to Buffalo. There's where they want me. They have asked me already if I will go without the formality of requisition papers."

"Will you?"

"Indeed I shall not. I believe I will not give the police that pleasure. They will have to fight if they want to get me there. I shall not go until I have to."

Her Life Story in Brief.

She traced her history briefly during her talks with the newspaper men.

"I was born in Russia thirty-two years ago," she said. "I was a girl of 16 when I came over here with my sister."

"Is that Mrs. Hichstein of Rochester?"

"Yes. I came over with her. I had sympathized with the peasants and the poor in Russia. No, I am not of peasant blood. I came from the middle class. I am not an Anarchist because I had nothing to eat," she concluded. "The Haymarket riot and the judicial murders that followed made an Anarchist of me. I shall never give up anarchism. It is the one idea which will live. You may kill us, you cannot throttle the idea, no matter how courts may decide nor what laws may be enacted."

Capture of Miss Goldman.

Miss Goldman was barricaded behind locked doors in the apartments of C. G. Norris on the third floor of the McNulty Flats at 303 Sheffield avenue, when Captain Herman Schuettler and Detective Herts visited the place at 11 o'clock in the morning to place the Anarchist leader under arrest.

When the policemen arrived the curtains in the Norris flat were drawn and there was no evidence of life about the place. Vigorous pounding on the doors failed to awaken any response. At the top of the stairway leading from the street a window was found from which another opening into the Norris flat is accessible.

Detective Herts was helped through this window and gained entrance to the apartments, where Emma Goldman was arrested. The door was then opened and Captain Schuettler entered.

Denies Her Identity.

Sitting in the parlor, dressed in a light wrapper, with two partly filled valises in front of her, was Emma Goldman. She turned pale when the policemen confronted her and denied her identity, which was established by a fountain pen box, on which her name was written. The woman had said that she was a servant.

"Well, you were lucky," she remarked to Captain Schuettler, when she saw that further denial was useless. "In ten minutes I would have been away from here. I intended to go down to the Chief's office and give myself up."

Captain Schuettler believes, however, that the woman was packing her clothes preparatory to leaving the city.

After her arrest Miss Goldman was taken to Central Police Station. There was no one else in the flat when the arrest was made, but the premises were placed in charge started toward the building on the opposite side of the street. He passed the house and was hurrying out of the vicinity when Detective Smith followed and overtook him.

"Is your name Norris?" Smith asked.

"Yes, it is. What do you want?"

"Well, you're under arrest," said the detective.

Norris made no comment, and when asked to give the names of the occupants of his flat refused.

"I don't believe I want to talk to you," was all he would say.

He was taken to Chief O'Neill's office. He seemed neither surprised nor chagrined over his arrest.

The building in which Emma Goldman was found is a four-story stone structure, situated within six blocks of the Sheffield Avenue Police Station. The flat from which she was taken is said to be occupied by C. G. Norris, Belle Norris, Stella Thorndale, Rowena Thorndale, her young daughter, and P. C. Verrall. The furnishings of the apartments are substantial and the place is artistically decorated.

Little is known of the occupants of the flat in the neighborhood. Neighbors have observed them almost daily since they moved into the neighborhood on May 1 but never have noticed anything unusual or suspicious about their actions.

Tell of Mysterious Men.

Persons residing in Sheffield avenue near the McNulty Flats report having been approached three times in the evening since Saturday by men who asked for the location of No. 303. They attached no significance to the incidents at the time, but asserted yesterday that they believed the men were looking for some one in the Norris flat.

The "tip" which led to the arrest of Miss Goldman came to Chief O'Neill's office yesterday morning about 10 o'clock, but the Chief and other officers connected with the arrest refused last night to make known the source from which the information came. It is reported, however, that it was furnished by a private citizen.

"Emma Goldman played her part well after she was trapped," said Captain Schuettler last night. "She was indignant at first and declared that she was Miss Armstein and a servant girl. While she was protesting against her arrest I happened to notice a fountain pen box among her effects and on it was written in a scrawling hand, 'Miss Emma Goldman.' When confronted with this evidence she gave up."

Norris a Student of Mankind.

Charles G. Norris, in whose flat Miss Goldman was captured and who was taken into custody shortly after her arrest, has little in his appearance to suggest an Anarchist. Neatly attired and carrying a light cane, Norris appeared to be a successful young business man. He appeared unconcerned about his arrest and declared that his action in offering protection to Miss Goldman could not be construed as abetting the escape of a criminal, as the woman had assured him of her intended surrender to the police during the morning.

Under questioning of Chief O'Neill Norris disclaimed any connection with the alleged conspiracies of the prisoners or any belief in the teachings of Emma Goldman. As a sociological student he asserted that he had been drawn to them by a desire to study at closer range the actions and idiosyncrasies of men and women.

"All men are types, and you are a rather peculiar and interesting one," he said, turning to Chief O'Neill. "It merely was to study the woman that I first sought an introduction to her after one of her speeches in this city. To this end I became acquainted with others while interesting myself but little in their creeds. When Miss Goldman sought me out after her arrival in Chicago she explained that she had come here to surrender herself to the police, and she was given permission to remain until the time that she desired had arrived."

Chief Wants to Know.

"Why did you not notify the police at once?" asked Chief O'Neill. "Here is a woman for whom the federal, State, and city authorities were searching night and day, and every indication points to the fact that she was about to escape from the city. Why did you not perform the duty required of you as a citizen and notify us at once?"

"Miss Goldman had assured me that she was about to surrender herself," returned Norris, "and I had no reason to doubt her veracity."

Norris told the Chief that he was a Canadian, 29 years old, and a naturalized citizen of the United States. For several years, he said, he had been an insurance agent. Prior to that time he was a clerk. For several

EMMA GOLDMAN'S OWN STORY.

Woman Admits Her Anarchistic Convictions, but Says She Does Not Advocate Violence.

Emma Goldman, now under arrest in Chicago, and whose anarchistic teachings are said to have prompted Leon Czolgosz to seek the life of President McKinley, has been prominent as an enemy of organized government for more than ten years. She is recognized as a radical among radicals, when it comes to waving the red flag and expounding the principles of her faith.

Miss Goldman's contempt for the present system of law is pronounced, bitter, and unrelenting, yet she never fails to deny that she is an advocate of violence.

"I have never advocated violence," she asserted some time ago, in an interview, "but neither do I condemn the Anarchist who resorts to it. I look behind him for the conditions that made him possible, and my horror is swallowed up in pity. Perhaps under the same conditions I would have done the same."

Miss Goldman says she was born a revolutionist, but that her belief in anarchy was not actually crystallized until after the hanging of the Chicago Anarchists in 1887. Then she became what she describes as an active Anarchist, and her activity has never flagged since then. She has been a prolific writer for all publications in this country that would give space to her articles upon anarchy and has devoted much of her time to lecturing.

The Chicago police have never had occasion before to arrest Miss Goldman, although she frequently has delivered lectures before the Anarchists and Socialists of this city. In these speeches she is said to have made the most inflammatory utterances. Her lectures in Chicago have attracted little attention, however, seldom having been announced in an obtrusive manner. Her reputation was such, however, that the management of Hull House refused to permit her to speak in that establishment.

Once in a Prison.

In 1893 the New York police arrested Miss Goldman on a warrant charging her with "inciting to riot." The arrest was a result of her activity during the famous Debs strike, and it was followed by her imprisonment on Blackwell's Island for a term of one year, which was shortened to seven months on account of good behavior. She formerly had led a strike of the Waist and Shirt Maker Girls' union in New York, but without attracting much attention.

In an extended interview which Miss Goldman gave out a few months ago while in New York she told many things about her life and her views on social and political questions which have a special interest at the present moment. She said:

"I am a Russian through and through, although little of my life was spent there. I was born in Russia, but was brought up in Germany and graduated from a German school. All that didn't make a German of me. I went back to Russia when I was 15 years old, and felt that I was returning to my home. My family was orthodox. None of my revolutionary tendencies was inherited—at least my parents were not responsible for them and were horrified by them.

"While I was in Germany I did not think much about anarchy, but when I went back to St. Petersburg my whole attitude toward life changed, and I went into radicalism with all my heart and soul. You see, things are different in Russia from what they are here or anywhere else. One breathes a revolutionary thought with the air, and without being definitely interested in anarchy one learns its principles. There was discussion and thought and enthusiasm all around me, and something within me responded to it all.

Woman's Equality in Russia.

"There is no other place in the world where woman has what she has in Russia. There the women have not only the same rights in law as the men, they have the same liberties and the same social and intellectual freedom. There man respects woman, looks upon her as his equal, is her good chum—yes, that is the word. Nowhere are men and women chums as they are in Russia.

"A woman student in Russia may receive visitors all day and most of the night, discuss all vital subjects with them, go with men when and where she pleases, and yet she will not be criticised, and no landlady would dream of insinuating that there was anything wrong with her morals. What is

Should the application for a writ be successful it probably will be made returnable tomorrow morning, at which time all the defendants would be brought into court. It then would devolve on the Prosecuting Attorney to produce the evidence on which the Anarchists are deprived of their liberty.

In the evidence which can be produced, it is said the Chicago police have the following telegram from the Buffalo Chief of Police:

"Czolgosz was in Chicago Aug. 18, in company of Emma Goldman and Abraham Isaak at Isaak's office."

The Chicago police do not know on what evidence this statement is based, but take it for granted that it is a part of the confession of Czolgosz.

The decision to resort to habeas corpus was reached after many efforts had been made to induce the authorities to release the prisoners on bail.

The papers are being prepared by Attorney Leopold Saltiel assisted by Raymond Robbins and Charles T. Brown. They will call for the production in court of the following persons, if Emma Goldman is included in the application:

Emma Goldman.	Clemence Pfuetzner.
Abraham Isaak Sr.,	Michael Roa.
Abraham Isaak Jr.,	Martin Rosalck.
Hippolite Havel,	Morris Fox
Henry Travaglio.	Alfred Schaelder.

The conference between the authorities and Attorney Saltiel was held at 11 o'clock in the office of Chief O'Neill. Besides the Chief, the others present were Chief of Detectives Colleran, City Prosecutor Howard S. Taylor, and Assistant Prosecutor John E. Owens.

"In consideration of the public agitation on the question of these arrests," said Mr. Saltiel, "I did not begin these proceedings yesterday. I appreciate the position of the police and know their anxiety to get at the bottom of a conspiracy if there was one. I believe these men are not guilty and that if released on bail they will not attempt to leave the city."

"Under no consideration will I consent to their release on bail," responded Chief O'Neill. "We have advices from Buffalo to hold them at all hazards. In that case we are only acting for the Buffalo police. We will hold them until advised to release them."

That ended the conference and the attorney hastened to his office and began the preparation of his application for a writ of habeas corpus.

WOULD DRIVE OUT ANARCHISTS.

Harrison Gray Otis Declares That Laws to Control the Reds Must Be Created.

General Harrison Gray Otis of Los Angeles, Cal., for many years an intimate friend of President McKinley, stopped in Chicago yesterday while on his way to Buffalo.

"The anarchistic elements back of the attempted assassination must be crushed," he said. "I think the immediate effect will be legislation against them. An attack against the Chief Executive should, I think, be classed as treason. If the will of the few Anarchists and assassins is allowed to triumph over the will and rights of the majority, it is a poor democracy and government that we have.

"I think that a classification of Anarchists should be made and the most dangerous expelled from the country. Those who are professed believers in anarchy should, I think, be driven out.

"Coming across the continent, the great anxiety of the people over President McKinley was to be observed in every town. In some towns late telegraphic reports had not been received and the people awaited the trains, hoping to hear something. The passengers, as eager as the people at the stations, left the trains hoping to hear late telegraphic reports."

MESSAGES OF SYMPATHY SENT.

Veterans of Battery A and Immaculate Conception Parishioners Adopt Resolutions.

At the annual reunion of the veterans of Battery A, First Illinois Artillery, resolutions of sympathy were passed and telegraphed to Mrs. McKinley.

The pastor and parishioners of the Church of the Immaculate Conception have adopted resolutions eulogizing President McKinley and offering "sympathy and profound sorrow to Mrs. McKinley, the devoted wife, whose great grief is shared by the whole nation and the peoples of all Christian lands."

more, there wouldn't be anything wrong with them. The standard of morals in the student class is phenomenally high, and the average intelligent Russian woman's mind is as pure as it is broad.

"The relation between the sexes in Russia is the most ideal of any I know about. That is why young Russian women learn to think. And because they think they become Anarchists.

Proud of Her Anarchy.

"I was an Anarchist when I left Russia to come to America, but I had hardly formulated my belief. The final influence that crystallized my views was the hanging of the Chicago Anarchists in 1887. I followed that case carefully and it made me an active Anarchist. I was living with my family in Rochester then, and the nearest thing to a radical society the town had was a Social Democratic society, tame as a house cat. I came away to New York and went to work in a factory. That showed me a new side of life. My family had been well-to-do, and I hadn't come in actual contact with the want and suffering of the world until I joined the wage-earners.

"Of course the experience strengthened my revolutionary ideas. When the Waist and Shirtmaker Girls' union went out in 1888 I led the strike. That is, in a way I led it. I have never been an Anarchist leader. I cannot afford it. A leader must be a diplomat. I am not a diplomat. A leader of a party makes concessions to his party, for the sake of holding his power. He must give way to his followers in order to be sure they will sustain him. I can't do all that. I am an Anarchist because I love individual freedom and I will not surrender that freedom.

"I soon saw that the safest and wisest way to keep myself free was not to be a leader. That is why I am connected with no party. I am a member of no group. I stand outside. I take no pay. I accept no favors. What I do I do individually, for love of the cause. There is no party to back me, but there is no party to say: 'You must do this and you must not do that. You are paid. You owe it to us. You must bow to the majority.' I bow to nothing except my idea of right. I am free and I will stay free. Individual freedom and responsibility—there is the basis for true anarchy.

Emma Goldman, the Woman.

"You know I am a professional nurse. It has always been the dream of my life to be a doctor, but I never could manage it—could not get means for the study. My factory work undermined my health, so I thought that if I couldn't be a doctor I could at least be a little part of the profession. I went through the training for a nurse, did the hospital work, and now nurse private cases.

"When I came out of prison on Blackwell's Island I was nervous. I decided to try a change and go to Europe for a year. I could lecture for the cause and take a course in massage and in midwifery in Vienna. There is no good training for either here, though we have the best training schools for nurses in the world.

"Well, I went and did my studying and then went to Paris to study and wait for the Anarchists' congress. You know the government prohibited the congress. We had it all the same, but the meetings were secret. I received the honor or dishonor of especially strict surveillance. I was to give a series of lectures, but after the third the authorities warned me that if I gave any more I must leave France, and as I wanted to attend the congress I kept quiet.

"Finally, detectives escorted me to the station and saw my luggage checked to the steamer and then notified the government that the dangerous woman was on her way out of France."

"REDS" TRY HABEAS CORPUS.

Will Apply for Writ Today Through Attorney Saltiel—Emma Goldman Probably in Case.

An application will be made today for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of the nine Chicago Anarchists now under arrest, charged with conspiracy to murder President McKinley. The name of Emma Goldman also probably will be included in the petition, and an attempt will be made to free the "high priestess of anarchy" along with the other defendants.

Should the application for a writ be successful it probably will be made returnable tomorrow morning, at which time all the defendants would be brought into court. It then would devolve on the Prosecuting Attorney to produce the evidence on which the Anarchists are deprived of their liberty.

In the evidence which can be produced, it

years a civil engineer engaged on the city's water supply, which has given him great experience in work akin to tunnel construction, was next called. He favored a four-track road from the City Hall to the Battery, which other engineers have declared to be impracticable because an excavation of such magnitude would dangerously undermine the great Broadway office buildings. He admitted this difficulty, but said it could be obviated by making the upper part of the excavation first, and bracing it with the heavy permanent steel work of the upper railroad, and then proceeding with the excavation for the undermost tracks. He presented sketches of his plan. He said that the cost of the four tracks according to his plan would be about 30 per cent. more than that of the two-track plan proposed by the commission. To add tracks at a later date to a two-track road, he said, would greatly increase the cost over building a four-track road at once. He said that in the two-story plan connections and grades would be much simpler and that the noise in the trains would be much less than if they were running side by side.

There will be another hearing to-morrow.

EMMA GOLDMAN SPEAKS.

Presides at a Meeting of Anarchists—President Roosevelt Denounced.

Emma Goldman last night made her first public appearance in this city since she returned from Chicago, at a meeting of Anarchists in Civic Hall, 128 East Twenty-eighth Street, held last night under the auspices of the Social Science Club, of which she is the leading member. The hall was well filled with men and women, a number of the latter being young girls.

Emma Goldman presided, while a young man, R. Grossman, gave a lecture on "Anarchism and Communism." He spoke in broken English and denounced President Roosevelt and his recent message. He said that Czolgosz, the assassin of President McKinley, was responsible only to himself for the crime, and then proceeded to give his ideas on anarchism and communism.

His lecture did not please the audience, and was criticised very harshly by several people in it. One of them, who spoke in broken English himself, said that Grossman might have done better if he had learned the English language better.

Emma Goldman then pulled the lecture to pieces. She declared that the speaker knew nothing about Anarchy, but as he was only a recent convert from Socialism to Anarchy he could not be expected to know much about it. Then she said, with much bitterness:

"I object to the speaker's use of the word 'we' in talking about Anarchists. Anarchy, like other things, is changing. We have been dragged by the nose long enough. Anarchy means 'I.' It is dangerous to say 'we,' for if any irresponsible person commits what society calls a crime others are then held responsible. In Anarchy now every one must be responsible to himself or herself for his or her acts. We don't want to force people to be Anarchists, for anarchy is absolute liberty. What Anarchists object to is invasion of the rights of the individual."

Emma Goldman, as well as all the other speakers, denounced President Roosevelt.

La Questione Sociale. 5 Luglio 1902

To the strikers of Paterson

Since Wednesday June 18, when the police caused a riot by opening fire on a body of strikers whose offence only consisted of the attempt to induce those working in the mills to make common cause with them, the monthpieces of the Weidmann, Auger and Simon and the other upstarts in the silk trade, "the Paterson Guardian" has exerted all its "Literary Genius", to spread fallacious and vindicative reports about the Wednesday outbreak and the strikers in general. Since that [illegible] has employed every device to [illegible] the public against the workers by [illegible] holding up the strikers and the [illegible] as the cause of the whole trouble.

As long as this worthy member of Capitalistic hirelings indulged in vile denunciations of Anarchists and Anarchism, we deemed it below our dignity to rectify any of its statements. We know too well that it requires intelligence to discuss anarchism and to do justice to its adherents, and to credit a yellow sensational and viscious journal like the Guardian with such cultured qualities, would even make the Gods laugh; but since it persists in holding us responsible for the general strike, we consider it highest time to speak.

We speak because we wish to have a heart to heart talk with you, strikers. You men and women of the large masses whose life is an endless chain of drudgery, of darkness and despair, to you we speak. In times gone by when the workers dared to assert their rights, when driven to strike through years of suffering and abuse they have ever been misrepresented by the Capitalistic press. Their demands were stamped as unjust, and their brothers denounced as mobs and violaters of Law and Order. In those days a whole machinery was employed to show, that the workers had no cause for discontent that the conditions were good, and that each man could earn a comfortable living if he so desired. But those days are gone, and none but the intellect of the "Guardian Angel" can have the impudence to blow life, into the shadows of a past prejudice. Today every intelligent man from the Professor's chair down to the pulpit, from the literary genius down to the poorest scribbler, from the wealthy drawing room to the poorest hut, all have recognised this one great truth: that the condition of the workers is far from being good. That they are getting poorer, that 70,000,000 people in the U. S. not merely foreigners, but Americans also, are at the mercy of a small number of men, who have accumulated all the wealth of the Country, thereby widening the gulf between the rich and the poor.

Every one recognises, that these conditions render it impossible for the producer to rise out of a life of drudgery and dependence, a life of hopless submission, while giving to the non-producer all opportunity for culture developement and affluence. That strike and conflicts between those who toil and those who live without work, are the most natural results of such conditions.

Every one knows that, and many there are who try their utmost to bring about a change for the better. To educate and elevate the laborer, to raise his self respect, and to awaken in him self consciousness. But the majority who could do much for the oppressed dare not speak, for they have sold their manhood for a mass of porridge, and their degraded occupation consists of [illegible] laws as a protection for a privileged few in their greedy rush for wealth. Or to shoot peaceful men and women, who dare, occasionely to ask for more than a mere crust. They are engaged in spinning cobwebs over the eyes of the public and inventing new excuses, new apologies and new lies as cause of all labor trouble.

Now, it is the Anarchist, he, the outlaw is responsible for it. He, who believes in no master save his own intelligence, he, who insists, that no man, has a right to live at the expence of his fellow man, or to invade his freedom and to coerce him into submission. The anarchist who proves, that all government is based on force and violence and can only thrive on force and violence. He, who knows that the whole machinery of government breeds corruption, fraud and crime. Yes, the Anarchist is responsible for it. "Stamp him out! Imprison him! Hang him! until dead and a little longer".

Now, could the Guardian or any other yellow journal have raised a better cry as an excuse for strikes, than popular prejudice against Anarchists and Anarchism! Certainly not nothing excites the bull more, than the waving of a red cloth. However the thinking people among the strikers know better than to heed such sensational talk. They know that Anarchism means anything but crime and violence. That it is a philosophy dealing with all human life, based upon a deep longing for independence and a strong sympathy with the human family. Of course the "Guardian" cannot be expected to know anything of philosophies. Again we hear, it is the foreigner who is to blame, the Italian, the French, the German, etc. They are responsible. They, the strangers who come to our shores and have the audacity to speak a language we do not understand, because we hardly understand our own language. They, who came to America because they could not resist the treacherous charms of dame liberty, yet will not submit to the policeman's club. They, who will not starve silently while our own patriotic boys swallowed embalmed beef or died of fever without a murmur. Yes, the foreigner is responsible for the labor trouble. Another popular prejudice which may satisfy an ignorant populace but never those, who are united in a common cause, those, who have worked side by side in the time of peace and who, now strongly hold together, in the time of war.

How ridiculous, how illogical it is to hold any given idea or any set of men responsible for an evil that is deeply rooted in the very system of economic relations between millions of people, who produce all the wealth, yet are forced to live on a mere pittance, and a small minority, that not only owns all the products, but that can dictate terms according to a moment's caprice. A system that has given birth to a labor trouble because it has given birth to its enemy, capitalism. These two enemies can never under any circumstances be united, because the rise of one, means the fall of the other, the independence of one, the submission of the other, and when the submission has reached its limit, what then! Ah yes, what then! Then it breaks forth with all its pent up energies, all hopes, all dreams and aspirations and spreads like thunder and lightning all over the country in the form of strikes conflicts and riots. And the militia, and the Mayor with the vigilance league might as well attempt to sweep back the rushing waves of the ocean with a broom, as to stop the current of discontent and long suffering.

Just such a strike is on in Paterson to-day and if the "Guardian Angel" together with the Weidmann, Auger & Simon, Geering etc. will continue, like the ostrich, to hide their heads beneath their feathers, you strikers of Paterson cannot and must not follow their example. You know yourselves that the cause of your strike is neither anarchists nor foreigners. You know as well, as one of your brothers who states in a N. Y. German evening paper, that the strike was brought about through your mager earnings, which made it impossible for you to exist. The writer, who, as the paper assures us, is a very conservative man and is opposed to both Anarchism and Socialism, explains the strikes as follows: The Mill owners who are mostly upstarts, that is to say, have recently risen to wealth, treat their workingmen in the roughest and rudest possible way. They have accumulated large fortunes and built magnificent mansions out of the sweat and blood of their employees. They live in luxury and abundance, while men with big families can hardly earn eight dollars per week, and this not all year around.

You see strikers that even the most conservative among you realize, that the men who have become rich through you, and who will, with the greatest ease squander thousands yet not grant your small demands, that they, who in their cowardice called for the militia to shoot you, and to protect their ill gotten wealth, that they and the system, that breeds them are responsible for the strike and no one else.

Mr. Weidmann and his companions claim, that they cannot pay the price demanded by the strikers. Perhaps they will change their minds when the whole industry of Paterson will be tied up. When all the textile workers, machinists and car drivers will join you in the general strike (the strike which is not composed merely of foreigners as the Guardian will have it but which has involved a large majority of American Workingmen) which to all appearance is but a question of a few days.

Commercialism has tried hard to crush human sympathy, but nature, in her all abounding love has come out victorious. She knows not of Italian, German, French or other nationalities; she knows, that all blood is red, and all tears are salt. She sees but her children with pale faces and bleeding limbs, and she faithfully leads them on to victory a victory, which they can only gain through a strong deep tie of sympathy and devotion in the battle for their rights.

Pel [illegible] risto!

All'amico Mc Grath

Dopo la burrasca del 18 Giugno che raccolse in una fosca nube di terrore e di ferocia gli umanemi concordi di tutti i timorati dell'ordine e della pagnotta sui sobillatori ribelli dell'anarchia, l'amico Mc Grath brandita la croce giurò pel Cristo non avere egli, cristiano e cattolico fedele, nulla di comune cogli eretici nemici dell'autorità e del capitale.

I diarii enormi e rumorosi gli dedicarono subito il cliche elegante che riproduce a centinaia di migliaia di esemplari il buon Mc Grath in cravatta bianca, il Cristo nel pugno, banditore d'una crocinta ermafrodita di rassegnazione rivoluzionaria.

Poichè la QUESTIONE SOCIALE e' povera ed esangue e non può permettersi il lusso dei clichès civettuoli dedichiamo al Cristo dell'amico Mc Grath le poche righe che uno dei più brillanti pubblicisti parigini, Victor Meunier, pare abbia scritto proprio per lui su Le Rappel della scorsa settimana.

" Il Cristo! il Cristo segnito dai discepoli vagabondi in assidno rapporto cogli umili, i diseredati, i poveri, il Cristo che soica della sua parola il cuore e l'anima delle moltitudini, ... Sia!

" Ma quali parole ripeteva agli umili il Cristo! Gettava egli nelle anime loro la semente delle rivolte da cui debbono germogliare le messi dorate dell'avvenire!"

"No, no!

"Egli predicava la rassegnazione, egli curvava la fronte degli umili dinnanzi a Cesare, a cui bisogna dare quel che a Cesare è dovuto, egli esortava coloro che erano stati percossi nella guancia destra ad offrire rassegnati la sinistra, e le ingiurie doversi obliare, [illegible] i dolori subire dolcemente, promettendo, al di là della vita "la felicità eterna...

"Buona religione, senza dubbio, pei re, per gli imperatori, pei preti, per quanti, beati dei beni della terra, hanno bisogno che il popolo spogliato, miserabile, nudo, rimandi all'indomani della morte il compimento delle sue speranze e delle sue aspirazioni..,

"Io respingo con isdegno coloro che promettono agli uomini, riscatto della loro rassegnazione e della loro viltà, i favori postumi d'iddio, e saluto con entusiasmo e convinzione coloro che afferrando delle loro mani robuste la realtà sanguinosa cercano di strapparle più umana, più equa, più dolce la Vita. ,, "Tristi seminatori d'impostura coloro che promettono ai miseri il regno dei cieli; operai forti e buoni quelli che ai poveri gridano: Unitevi, operate concordi perchè i regni della terra che voi toccate colle vostre mani, che sono opera vostra vi appartengono alfine e contro le iniquità di cui soffrono generazioni e generazioni levano alto, sacro, il vessillo della rivolta.,,

. . . . . .

La dedica non vuol essere an'ironia.

L'unico Mc Grath ci teneva alla separazione della responsabilità, ad allontanare dal suo capo quelle che dardeggiano fermentate da odii selvaggi in quest'ora, e noi l'aintiamo, noi che le rassegnazioni del Cristo siamo per tutte le rivolte legittime e gagliarde che zampilliano dalla schiavitù che dilegua.

Sapevamo che assumendo le redini dello sciopero Mc Grath non avrebbe portato i tintori alle barricate, non supponevamo tuttavia che egli volesse portarli a messa ed a completa.

The condition of the streets at Twenty-second street and Wentworth avenue handicaps the Twenty-second street station firemen greatly in the performance of their duties. Twenty-second street is being paved west of State street and is impassable for the fire apparatus. That the apparatus may not be tied up altogether it is left in the street half a block from the engine house and the horses are kept with it. When an alarm rings the firemen must first run the half block to the apparatus and then hitch the horses to it, causing several minutes delay. It is expected that at least five days longer will be required to finish the pavement. In the right of the picture is a gang of pavers at work.

DIVINE AND HUMAN ARE KIN.

Dr. Camden M. Cobern Preaches in St. James' Church on the Vision of Ezekiel.

Dr. Camden M. Cobern spoke in the St. James Methodist Episcopal church yesterday on "The Humanity of God." He said in part:

"It almost seemed to Ezekiel a blasphemous thing to say that he had even in a vision seen a man upon Jehovah's throne. He would only say that he had seen the appearance of the likeness of a man there—a human God. All that the vision taught Ezekiel I cannot tell, but it ought to teach us that God is human; that he is not a being of a nature alien to humanity, but that he has human feeling, human tenderness, and human compassion.

"This vision proves that the incarnation was nut an extraordinary or arbitrary manifestation; rather it was God's natural manifestation. God always had a human heart. The incarnation was the manifestation of what God had always been. God and man always were kin, but never till God displayed himself in Jesus, showing what he really was in his deepest eternal nature, never till then did man believe it—and too many fail to do that now. Like Ezekiel, they are afraid tu accept the happy fact that God is as good as Jesus, and always has been and always will be."

TRUSTS DATE FROM ADAM'S DAY

First One in the Garden of Eden, and It Ended in a Dismal Failure.

"Trusts" was the subject of Mrs. Gestefeld's address before the Church of the Science of Being yesterday. She said:

"The first trust was formed when Adam took tn himself a wife and, by her coöperation, made himself lord over the garden of Eden and its inhabitants. This trust came to grief when privileges ceased to be wisely used and maindministration brought oppression.

"The consequence of the failure of this trust to meet universal needs, through self-seeking, are felt today. Coöperation is indicative of enlightenment and progress. It is associatinn for mutual betterment. But when it is used to divert the mutual benefit and universal good into private channels it has overleaped its appointed boundaries and becomo a monster that threatens national life."

NOISE AND ENTHUSIASM DIFFER

L. A. Crandall Says It Is Not Necessary to Shout and Jump in Church.

"Noise is not enthusiasm, neither is activity," said the Rev. L. A. Crandall in the Memorial Baptist church yesterday. "Some Christian people imagine that the louder they shout and the higher they jump the stronger is the testimony they give to the possession of religious enthusiasm. These physical contortions may or may not be expressions of [illegible] In most cases they are due simply to physical excitement, and have no more to do with religinn than has the war dance of the American Indian. Enthusiasm is primarily a condition and not a manifestation. If we ask ourselves how we can increase enthusiasm, the answer must be found by giving God a larger place in our lives. He is all the time loving, longing, seeking. When his life floods our lives, we shall love, and long, and seek."

CLOSE DOORS TO ANARCHY

MANAGERS OF HANDEL HALL SHUT OUT EMMA GOLDMAN.

Philosophical Society Announces an Address by the Foe of Government and Finds Itself Deprived of Its Regular Meeting Place—Assembly Adjourns to Another Building, Where the Lecturer Criticises Women and Censures Parents.

Handel hall was closed to the voice of anarchy yesterday, and Emma Goldman was required to seek another place in which to make her address.

She had been advertised to speak before the Philosophical society, which meets in Handel hall, and her subject was announced as "Modern Anarchism." When the managers of the hall heard of the contemplated program they decided they did not wish their building used for that purpose and closed the doors to the society and its speaker.

"If the women of this city would only be ready to stand equally with the men we should not have been put out of Handel hall," was the comment of Miss Goldman when the society finally assembled in Trades Union hall, 55 North Clark street.

No Favors for Women.

This criticism was brought out when the women were invited to come forward and take seats, instead of standing in the rear of the hall with men.

"I do not know of what sort of people the Philosophical society is composed," said Miss Goldman, by way of introduction, "but I thought they were free thinking people, who believed in the equality of men and women. It was a surprise to me, therefore, to hear the announcement made at the beginning of the meeting that all the women were requested to come forward and take seats.

"That sounds as if the women were not capable nf standing up with the men in the back of the hall, and unless a woman can at all times stand up with the men she is not entitled to her freedom." Then followed the references to Handel hall.

Censure for Parents.

Miss Goldman then gave her attention to the training of children, finding occasion to censure parents. She announced as a fact that had come to her attention that the children of radicals do not follow in their parents' footsteps, but are almost without exception conservative and narrow minded.

"I account for this in one way," she continued, "because the radical parents drag their children to radical meetings, talk radicalism to them, and make them listen to speeches at a time of night when they ought to be in bed."

Miss Goldman said parents would do better to wait until the child was old enough to understand and then let them see all sides. She said the child who was only shown one side of life often thought the parents were prejudiced and were not telling the truth.

EXPECT 400,000 VISITORS AT THE LIVE STOCK SHOW.

Exposition Which Opens Next Saturday Promises to Make a Record as to Attendance—Roosevelt May Come.

The third annual exhibit of the international live stock exposition opens next Saturday, and preparations have been made to handle 400,000 visitors during the show. That number is more than duuble the attendance of last year.

When the gates are thrown open the best products not only of the United States, but also of Canada and Mexico and some of the South American countries, will be shown side by side in competition for prizes. All the improvements in the way of caring for and raising stock and the preparation for the market will be shown in detail and explained by experts.

An effort has been made to secure a promise from President Roosevelt to attend the exposition, and he is expected to give his answer today. In any event, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson will be present and will deliver an address. It prnbably will be made in connection with the dedication of the new building, which has been erected since last year.

The new structure is known as the Pure Bred Live Stock Record Building of America, and will be maintained as a headquarters the year around. The ground floor will be occupied by the various agricultural exhibits of the railroads. The second floor will furnish room for the different live stock record associations. The third floor will be devoted to well arranged club and lounging rooms. The fourth floor will be given over to an exact reproduction of the work in miniature of the department of agriculture, prominence being given to the live stock interests of the country.

GAGE PARK ASSOCIATION WANTS A SEWER BUILT.

Meets at Oakley Avenue Railway Station to Arrange for Campaign in Favor of Western Avenue Tunnel.

The Gage Park Improvement association held a meeting yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the railway station at Oakley avenue and Fifty-fifth street tu urge the construction of a sewer under Western avenue from Thirty-ninth street to Fifty-fifth.

C. H. Claussen, president of the association, appointed the following men to work on the problem in conjunction with the West End Improvemont club: D. C. McLean, C. S. Claussen, George Schwing, Capt. Morton Hayes, and L. B. Bezine. A. R. Tearney of the Minnehaha Improvement club, D. C. McLean, Capt. Morton Hayes, and John Condon, president of the West End Improvement club, all spoke on the need of a sewer and the frequent floods on both sides of Western avenue.

Ald. Thomas Carey, who intended to address the meeting, was unable to be present. He sent a letter which advised the building of the Western avenue sewer as far south as is possible without too strong opposition. Lateral sewers, he said, could be built afterwards.

Dr. Edward Judson Preaches to Students of the University of Chicago.

The duty of the churches today, according to Dr. Edward Judson, the University of Chi[illegible] in their work and do for others rather than confine their religion to worship among themselves. Dr. Judson could speak with authority upon such a subject, for he has left the wealthy Memorial Baptist church in New York to conduct institutional work in the poorer districts.

"I should be glad to see that wherever a church lifts its spire there should be around it a girdle, as it were, of philanthropic institutions for the poor, the aged, and the friendless," he said.

"We should make the church such a center of real philanthropy that the workman passing by should feel his heart soften, as it does when he passes some great hospital for the sick and the maimed."

pel illusions. Nevertheless, knowledge is fortified, good inclinations strengthened, and the imagination cooled by sober, scientific reading; and I should judge that the circulation of the work would lessen the number of marriages that prove to be the funerals of bright anticipations. Certainly, if there is as much blindness among young people as some of us fondly believe, it is time that a little consciousness was introduced. Pions souls find no fault with St. Paul for substituting intelligence for the ignorant devotions of the Athenians.

I have not seen any remarks about the wickedness of suicide in connection with the death of Mrs. Craddock. She had served a term of imprisonment, and saw a longer one in prospect, which she was convinced would be fatal. Under these conditions life, not death, became the king of terrors. She preferred illuminating gas to the atmosphere of a cell because it spared her suffering, and there is no bodily pain in the grave. Whatever doubts shemay have had about another world—of that she seems to have had none—she knew it could not be worse than this while the Vice Society exists here. As to her sanity, I cannot deem a person insane who chooses the devil before Anthony Comstock.

I had a little conversation with Mrs. Craddock just after her Blackwell's Island experience, and asked her if she did not think she had better join the veteran corps. I spoke cheerfully, and said I regretted to see youth and beauty sacrificed to the vice-hunting ogre. She replied that, although she enjoyed living, she would that her life might be turned to water and poured out for cleansing the lives of others. I saw that she was every inch a martyr, and devoted in the old sacrificial sense. For one, I am grateful to her. It is good for us that such people live nobly and die bravely to inspire us with a little more earnestness and seriousness. When I think of her calmly and without agitation sitting at the typewriter, with all her thoughts in order, thumping out her last words on the machine, correcting the sheets with a pen, and then lying down in the belief that she died as she had lived, that the cause nearest her heart might gain new sympathizers, I see how to her there was truth in the lines of Halleck's apostrophe to death:

Thy voice sounds like a prophet's word,
And in its hollow tones are heard
The thanks of millions yet to be.

Free Speech in Chicago.

EDITOR LUCIFER:—For the benefit of those of your readers who still believe that freedom of speech is a reality, and that America is the freest country on earth, permit me to give you a few details of my experience with the Chicago police.

I came to this city to acquaint the American public with the conditions in Russia, and to raise funds for the unfortunate victims of the Russian knout, many of whom have been flogged to death, while others have been sent to long terms of imprisonment, simply because they dared to ask for bread for the suffering Russian peasants.

To my amazement I found two hundred policemen—some of them high officials, at my first meeting; men who came not out of sympathy with the starving Russian people but who were there to take me to the nearest police station should I not meet their own conception of what liberty means.

O Liberty! poor outraged, degraded Liberty. Fallen indeed art thou from thy once lofty height when every petty policeman can soil thy pure form with his foul hands, and trample in the mire of Chicago's streets thy beauteous lineaments.

Since that first meeting the police have followed me from hall to hall, threatening me with arrest if I dared to say anything against the American government. "Say what you please about Russia, but you must not attack OUR institutions," said Captain Campbell to me at a meeting on the West side.

Another little Tzar, Captain Wheeler, went his colleague one better: "I will not have Miss Goldman speak in my district," and prohibited the meeting that was to take place at Aurora Turn Hall, corner of Ashland Ave. and Division street.

Surely there must be something wrong with the American Institutions of today; something terribly black and corrupt, if they cannot stand the light of criticism; if they can thrive only when physical force is used to defend them against the light of free discussion.

This is not the first time that meetings for free discussion have been prohibited here; not the first time speakers have been shadowed from place to place. On previous occasions the Chicago authorities have had to give some excuse for such interference. They have had to plead either public excitement, too radical utterance on the part of the speaker, or some similar excuse as justification of their acts.

What excuse will they give now?

What excuse will the self-styled Jeffersonian-Democratic mayor of Chicago give for the acts of his subordinates?

There is now no public excitement; no radical utterances made—at least not in reference to "our own sacred government."

What other conclusion can be reached, or inference drawn, than that America is fast being Russianized, and that unless the American people awake from the pleasant dream into which they have been lulled by the strains of "My Country 'tis of Thee," etc., we shall soon be obliged to meet in cellars, or in darkened back rooms with closed doors, and speak in whispers lest our next door neighbors should hear that free-born American citizens dare not speak in the open; that they have sold their birthright to the Russian Tzar disguised by the coat of an American policeman?

Is it not time that SOMETHING BE DONE?

Is it not time that all advanced people unite in protesting against such brutal invasion? all, at least, who have enough Americanism left in them to maintain the right of freedom o speech, of press and of assembly?

Or, are they going to wait until the number of victims of suppression increase to legions—as in Russia today?

Chicago, Nov. 30, 1902. EMMA GOLDMAN.

What Is "Free Secession?"

From Comrades Lloyd and Morton we learn of two sorts of Socialists, "Free Socialists" and another sort not named, but "Tyranny Socialists" might be inferred. I note the benevolence of these comrades in allowing that the latter sort mean well enough but their logic is faulty; they advocate tyranny unknowingly. They will not permit of "free secession" and the necessary land.

In 1880 the Socialists in the Greenback Convention offered but one resolution, which was approximately as follows: "Resolved, that land, light, air and water are free gifts of Nature to all mankind; any law or custom that permits any one to monopolize these gifts, we earnestly condemn and seek to abolish." Mr. Lloyd should not object to this, and it has never been repudiated. Within a year or two a faction left the Socialist party of that time because not enough freedom was taught, and this faction became known as Anarchists. Some of them advocated absolute liberty of action, unlimited by any sort of rules, laws or codes, even to taking of life. "Murder is Righteous" at least one of them was fond of saying.

There may be Socialists who would not permit an individual to secede and hie away to the woods, but I never met one. Those I have met are occupied in seeking the law of relations where association is accepted as natural and right. They may debate at times with those mental giants who state the abstract law of liberty but never apply it to human affairs.

With many individualists "free secession" means the right to secede but remain in a collectivity, refusing to bear the burdens but continuing to enjoy collective benefits in the way of pavements, light, fire protection, etc. They may contribute but must not be taxed, basing their position on the idea that the rights of the individual are greater than the rights of the majority; that is the rights of one are greater than the rights of many, for if he use a pavement built by many he is consuming their product just as any other form of privilege would permit him to do.

A Card.

To all those who have expressed surprise that I had nothing to write about our dead friend Kate, I would like to say that human language is inadequate to express my sorrow over the loss of one who to me was, of all the women I have met in my public career, the most beloved friend. It is easy to speak of the activity of a public man or woman; of the force of logic and depth of intellect he or she may have had; but who can do justice to a great personality, to a beautiful soul?

Kate to me was not the Anarchist, the rebel, the thinker, the writer; she was a mother, a friend, one to whom I could go for rest and peace when tired and weary of life and hard battles. She was all to me—how, then, can I sit down to write about her? No, no, Kate is dead; a noble soul has ceased to be; and those who have known and loved her, can mourn but not talk.

Meetings.

Last Sunday afternoon, Comrade Grossmann spoke on "The Labor Press: Its Purpose and Aim," at Wosta's Hall, before an attentive audience. The police were present, of course, to see whether or not the utterances would shake the foundations of the American government. The speaker pointed out that the capitalistic dailies worked more harmoniously in upholding prevailing institutions than the workers' press in its aim to overthrow capitalism and despotism. While the dailies, no matter of what political opinion, were all united in upholding exploitation and wage slavery, the workers often tried to ruin their press simply on account of difference regarding the remedy proposed. Some Social Problems.

William Shakspeare puts into the mouth of one of his characters words like these:

"Who steals my purse steals trash. Who steals my good name takes that which not enriches him but leaves me poor indeed."

Many good and wise sayings are credited to the "bard of Avon," but how is it with the one just quoted?

Money, as representing the product of time and labor; money as a means of exchange between producers and consumers, is not "trash," but a very useful and desirable thing.

Money of some kind is one of the prime social necessities.

It is only when used as a means of oppression, of exploitation, of robbery—only when used as an agent whereby the products of labor, the labor of all, may be monopolized by the few, that money becomes something much worse than trash. Of itself money is neither good nor bad.

Much the same may be said of reputation. As commonly understood, a man's good name is part of his capital; part of his available wealth. It means that if he has no money, no exchangeable property of any kind, he can still get what he needs because of his reputation as a man of veracity, a man of honor, of integrity, of diligence, frugality, etc.

On the other hand a good man's reputation may suffer eclipse from no fault of his own, but simply because he is not understood. The people with whom he associates may not be able to catch, seize or sense the occult vibrations that emanate from his personality; from the invisible, intangible substance we call his ego. Whatever this man may do, or may not do, he is the victim of misrepresentation, of calumny, of persecution and prosecution, sometimes even unto death.

Yes, reputation, like money, may be a friend or it may prove a foe. It may be used to help or to crush, and that without real merit or demerit on the part of the object of such help or persecution.

But when a man—or woman—is misunderstood, misrepresented, persecuted; when his or her good name is cast out as evil, it does not necessarily follow that the person thus misunderstood and maligned is "left poor indeed"—as Shakspeare puts it. Poor he or she may be in this world's goods and yet rich in the best sense of that word; rich in CHARACTER!—something wholly different from and incomparably better and more enduring than reputation, or good name.

Often it happens, as I think, that the person maligned, persecuted, robbed of good name and material wealth, is made richer by such robbery, such persecution. The fires of persecution, of calumny and detraction serving as the best possible school or training to develop the inner qualities, the mental and spiritual fiber, that constitute real manhood or womanhood.

AS TO GLASS HOUSES.

Elbert Hubbard says:

"I used to live in a glass house, but now there is nothing left but the sash."

I would amend by saying that in my case the SASH ALSO is gone!

There is not left even the iron framework of what was once my glass house.

That house was not built for my own comfort, health or convenience, but rather to please my Grundyite neighbors who lived in glass houses and wanted me to do likewise.

One by one the panes, stained with various colors—some pretty and attractive enough, but all ARTIFICIAL, all more or less grotesque and fanciful—have been broken, and not only have I refused to go to the expense and trouble of replacing them but have deliberately removed even the sash, so that now I am beginning to feel that there is nothing to keep out the light, the pure and health-giving sunlight and starlight of Truth; of truth as it is in Nature.

RESTRAINMENT VERSUS GOVERNMENT.

Last Sunday eve—Dec. 7—I listened to an interesting address by Emma Goldman of New York, sometimes called the "High priestess of Anarchy." Her subject on this occasion was "Modern Phases of Anarchism." As stated last week in these columns, it was this address, first delivered in Cleveland, Ohio, that was reported far and wide as having prompted Leon Czolgosz to assassinate President McKinley.

In this historic address, as I heard it, there was certainly no language used that could be construed as counseling deeds of violence or murder. As I now recall it the address was mainly devoted to showing the difference between the methods of reform advocated and used by Anarchists of a generation or two ago, and those advocated and used now, by Anarchists such as Leo Tolstoi, Benjamin R. Tucker, and other distinguished teachers of that cult.

At the close of the lecture, in response to invitation by the chairman, several short addresses were made by persons in the audience. Among the rest I took occasion to briefly state my own views in regard to Anarchy and Anarchists, in language something like this:

With the speaker of the evening I recognize that there are more kinds of Anarchists than one—almost as many kinds as of Socialists. For twenty years I have been called an Anarchist. In reply to those who thus catalogue me I sometimes say: Give me my own definition of the word and I have no objection to the name Anarchist, but emphatically protest against being reckoned such in the common and popular meaning of that much abused term. With Miss Goldman I agree that "propaganda by deed"—that is, by violence, by assassination, is not Anarchy—in the modern, the evolved and more philosophic meaning of the word. The assassination of McKinley, in my opinion, was not the act of an Anarchist, but rather of a revolutionist who scarcely knew what he wanted, or what the natural effect of his act would be.

With the facts before me, bearing upon the question, I incline to the belief that Leon Czolgosz was a tool, a victim, in the hands of others. In obedience to his instructions—as I now think it probable—he called himself an Anarchist, said Miss Goldman's speech incited him to kill McKinley, said, "I have done my duty," and refused to say more. His managers pretty evidently feared he would talk too much, and hence took special and unheard-of precautions to prevent him from talking to the public.

Personally I accept the definition of liberty given by Herbert Spencer: "Each has the right to do as he pleases so long as he invades not the equal right of others," and this is what I understand by Anarchy. A legitimate inference from this definition is that invaders should be restrained; that those who cannot or will not limit their acts to their own proper sphere of action should be compelled to do so—compelled by physical force if necessary. This restraint, this resistance to invasion is demanded by the law, or principle, of self-preservation, and should be exercised by the person invaded, in his own behalf, and also co-operatively, by all who do not wish to be invaded—assaulted, robbed or murdered.

In accord with this view I have advocated the term "restrainment" to take the place of what is now called "government," government of man by his fellow man. I have also favored the use of the word "Antarchy," or "Anto-archy," meaning self-government, to take the place of Anarchy, which means denial of government, or opposition to government.

This in brief is a synopsis of my five minute talk in comment upon the subject of the lecture. In her reply to criticisms Miss Goldman spent most of her closing fifteen minutes in an effort to refute the views presented by me. She said, in substance, that restrainment is the same as government, and that my arguments were simply those in common use by the defenders of our present system of government, namely, that evil doers must be restrained and that for this purpose we have courts, sheriffs, taxes, jails, penitentiaries, etc., etc., all the machinery of government.

"Who is wise enough to decide", asked Miss Goldman, "where one man's right ends and another man's begins? who will have the right, under freedom, to say who shall be restrained and who shall not? There are many who think Mr. Harman should be restrained from printing and mailing the doctrines he has been teaching many years past. Who shall decide in cases like this?"

Proceeding Miss Goldman said she did not condemn violence; did not sit in judgment upon the man Czolgosz and condemn him for his act. On the contrary she felt unbounded sympathy for one who was not allowed the citizen right to say a word in his own behalf—kept in a dungeon and treated more like a wild beast than a human being.

When deeds of violence are committed the rational method of procedure would be to study the causes that led to such acts, then by removing the causes prevent a like occurrence in future.

This, if I heard correctly, is a brief but substantially correct synopsis of Miss Goldman's concluding remarks, at her last appearance before the public in Chicago. Expecting to meet her again before her departure for New York I hoped to have, from her own hand, a synopsis of her speech at Uhlich's Hall, for publication in Lucifer. but of this I was disappointed.

Under the peremptory ruling of the chair, which ruling was sustained by the custom of giving the last word to the first speaker, I was denied the privilege of even a very brief rejoinder to Miss Goldman's reply to my remarks. I wished merely to say, at that time, that I certainly had not the slightest desire or intention to misrepresent the speaker's attitude on the question of the right to use violence, force, as a means of righting unendurable wrongs. I wanted to say that I, too, take the ground,—as I have often done in public as well as in private—that there is nothing man or woman CAN do that, under conceivable circumstances, it may not be perfectly right and proper for him or her to do. I also wanted to add that I did not, and do not, sit upon and condemn the MAN, Czolgosz, nor the MOTIVES that prompted him to fire the fatal shot. Of persons and their motives I know—judicially know—nothing, but of their ACTS I must form a judgment, and decide for or against them. The conditions of human existence upon earth demand this much of me, and of every other rational human mind.

Elaborating a little upon this point I would now say that, from a rational standpoint the act of Czolgosz was most unwise, because furnishing the enemies of freedom with a most unanswerable argument in favor of drastic measures against human liberty.

Second. The act of Czolgosz was a plain violation of the Spencerian formula in regard to human liberty, since it was an invasion of McKinley's right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness, without any attempt to show how or when he—McKinley, had forfeited such right by first invading Czolgosz. It was also an invasion of the right of all those who wanted McKinley to live and to be their chief ruler,

In answer to Miss Goldman's question, will say that I would have all disputes settled by arbitration—by arbiters selected by the disputants themselves. For instance, when the wolf charged the lamb with the offense of defiling the water that he must drink, if disinterested arbitrators should decide that the charge was sustained by the facts, even though the water ran from the wolf towards the lamb, then the wolf would gain his suit and the lamb be restrained from repeating the offense in future.

For another illustration, take the case of Anthony Comstock against Ida C. Craddock. If the plaintiff could have shown to the satisfaction of the board of arbitrators that Miss Craddock had really corrupted his own morals, or the morals of children of which he was parent or guardian, then a verdict of "guilty" would have been rendered and Miss Craddock would have been enjoined not to repeat the offense of selling or giving her literature to Anthony Comstock, his minor children or minor wards. If, on the contrary, the board of arbitration should decide in favor of defendant then the plaintiff would be liable to indictment for unwarrantably meddling with Miss Craddock's affairs.

Likewise in my own case—reference to which was made by Miss Goldman. When certain citizens of Kansas complained that I had sent to them an immoral document, namely, Lucifer, containing a plainly worded account of and protest against marital outrage, if the properly selected arbiters had decided that the complaint was valid, and that I had no legal nor moral right to harrow up the feelings of my subscribers and patrons by such recitals, then it would have been competent for such arbitration board to assess damages in dollars and cents, much as judges now assess damages in slander suits, and in "breach of marriage promise" cases, and I would have been enjoined not to send any more such literature to the plaintiffs in the case.

Failure to obey the injunctions, the awards, of boards of arbitration would, I presume, be punished, under freedom, by the boycott, by loss of social standing and by loss of financial patronage on the part of all who subscribe to, or support the principle of arbitration as against government by authority of officials backed by professional butchers and cutthroats—the standing armies and navies of the world.

A FEW DEFINITIONS.

While it may be true that Miss Goldman is a much better linguist or philologist than I, as her criticism would seem to assume, I will, with all due diffidence, venture to suggest that she study the origin, the true meaning, of the words "restrainment" and "government." This latter word is derived from the Latin gubernare, and is defined thus:

"To steer a ship; to order, to manage, to conduct."

"Restrainment" is derived from the Latin restringere, and is defined: "To bind; to stop; to stay."

Thus it is seen that the two words are radically different in meaning. Government means DIRECTING or GUIDING power, as a pilot directs or guides a ship; while restrainment means simply to PREVENT further advance; to STAY or limit the power that directs or guides.

Many apt illustrations of this radical difference in meaning will doubtless occur to many of our readers, but the great length of this article prohibits further elaboration of social and governmental problems for this issue.

"CRONACA SOVVERSIVA"

Ai compagni e lettori della Cronaca Sovversiva del nostro nuovo ribelle giornale italiano saluti ed augurii di buona battaglia!

CARISSIMI COMPAGNI,

Era mio fermo proposito di testimoniare al nostro nuovo giornale i miei sentimenti di solidarietà col contributo affettuoso d'un articolo mio, vi avevo anzi promesso uno studio sul movimento anarchico degli Stati Uniti. Le non liete condizioni della mia salute, quelle più gravi del mio penoso ufficio d'infermiera mi hanno impedito di assolvere al mio voto di collaborare al primo numero del nostro giornale.

Non aggiungo inutili scuse. Voi assapororaste come me tutte le amarezze della lotta per l'esistenza e se voi anelate di dare alla causa della giustizia della verità e della libertà eternamente soffocata dalla miseria, dal lavoro penoso, dalla disperazione tutte le vostre energie saprete comprendere e compatire se pur essendo con voi anima e cuore non posso darvi per ora che una fraterna parola di simpatia.

Parole d'incoraggiamento non vi abbisognano: di tutti i compagni che lo tano in questo paese voi, figli della ridente Italia, siete stati sempre i più tenaci, i più ardenti, voi tra tutti quelli che i pericoli della propaganda affrontano su questo suolo sacro al dollaro onnipotente, alla ignobile lotta che ha spento ogni scintilla d'entusiasmi, ogni fremito d'indignazione su questa terra in cui un pugno solido vale più che un cervello fosforescente, in cui Teddy il terribile vuole in ogni uomo uno schiavo sommesso, in ogni donna una femmina fecouda.

E tutti quelli che conoscono i pericoli tremendi della propaganda in questo paese apprezzeranno i vostri assidui sforzi e l'abnegazione tenace che votate al trionfo del nostro ideale.

Avanti! Avanti! ed all'opera vostra arrida luminoso il trionfo.

LEGALITARII ED ANARCHICI
nelle agitazioni operaie.

Ginevra 25 Maggio.

I nostri socialisti, come ben sapete, sono riusciti a far eleggere molti dei loro alle assemblee parlanti, sono riusciti anzi ad issarne qualcuno fino al potere esecutivo in cui il Millerand ginevrino S. E. Thiebaut si segnala pel suo zelo d'obbedienza agli ordini dei capitalisti onnipotenti fino a firmare decreti d'espulsione contro i socialisti stranieri, fino a chiamar sotto le armi e lanciare contro pacifici lavoratori le truppe del governo.

Il che non deve meravigliare alcuno poichè rientra nell'ordine naturale delle cose e della storia; non appena un socialista giunge ad arraffare un mandato di governo egli fa esattamente quello che han fatto sempre tutti i governi passati e faranno ....quelli futuri, coll'ipocrisia per giunta.

Vi ha qualchecosa di più caratteristico nella condotta dei nostri parlamentari socialisti di Ginevra ed è il silenzio ostinato, il mutismo assoluto in cui si suggellano ogni qual volta scoppia tra lavoratori e dirigenti una crisi acuta; nè soltanto ammutoliscono ma scompaiono per così dire dalla circolazione cosichè invano li cerchereste là dove in tempi normali li incontravate ogni giorno; sono dileguati, squagliati.

L'eclissi del deputato socialista dura e si ostina in ragione diretta della gravità del conflitto. Dopo la crisi mau mano che la situazione turbata dagli urti e dalle agitazioni vibrauti tende ad assidersi ed a schiarirsi e che nel dominio della lotta tra il salariato e l'attuale organizzazione emerge qualche fatto nuovo od anche soltanto un unovo argomento di ciarla alla facondia deputassier, il deputato socialista, che pareva colto da paralisi, riappare, non invade ancora le riunioni pubbliche — in cui gli toccherebbe rifare i conti colle corporazioni operaie organizzate all'infuori d'ogni azione politica — ma s'è orientato ormai alla meglio dei suoi interessi e spia ora in agnato il momento propizio di sfruttare gli avvenimenti e la situazione.

couto e, sotto l'influenza dei compagni libertarii, la Federazione operaia di Ginevra — la quale comprende quasi tutti i corpi di mestiere — si è inderdetta ogni azione politica ritornando all'antico concetto dell'Internazionale che "l'Emancipazione dei lavoratori dei lavoratori deve essere opera dei lavoratori stessi."

Durante i cromi di lotta in cui nella strada il proletariato cosciente si urtava contro le truppe che loro opponeva il governo radicale-socialista, nessuu deputato socialista — all'infuori del maestro Sigg, che pel suo coraggioso rifiuto a prestar servizio nell'esercito ebbe quattro mesi di prigione — s'è fatto vedere: non soltanto, ma uessnna protesta fu promossa o pubblicata contro la chiamata delle truppe sotto le armi.

Le cariche di cavalleria, le violazioni reiterate, e flagranti delle garanzie (!!) costituzionali, le espulsioni arbitrarie in massa perpetrate con inaudito raffinamento di barbarie sulle indicazioni d'una polizia politica i cui agenti ufficiali stanno alla greppia di tutte le ambasciate, tutte queste infamie governative hanno trovato i deputati socialisti sordi e muti.

Soltanto quando una fortissima corrente volle, nel pubblico, la liberazione di tutti i condannati per delitto di sciopero, i deputati socialisti felici del pretesto di tornare in scena appoggiarono la petizione con cui 5 000 cittadini d'ogni partito reclamavano la liberazione del compagno Bertoni.

Troppo tardi! i socialisti del governo possono ormai fare il lutto dell'antica influenza che essi avevano fin qui esercitato sulle masse lavoratrici.

Essi possono con pazza incoscienza e con impudenza ineccepibile delegare a loro rappresentante al corteo del 1.° Maggio il proscrittore Thiebaut, (1) il valletto, l'esecutore delle basse persecuzioni della Compagnia dei Tramways. Thiebaut che fece espellere tutti gli stranieri sospetti non solo di aver rapporti con anarchici, ma di aver simpatie per gli scioperanti, Thiebaut che scagliò le truppe contro gli operai in sciopero, suoi elettori, e che ora in vista delle prossime elezioni e dei molti scudi che la carica gli assicura, torna al suo gregge in attesa di lasciarlo in asso alla prima occasione: l'esperienza rimarrà.

Io intanto per non mancare alla mia promessa vi compiego due articoli. Il primo è di uno dei più sinceri e coraggiosi compagni nostri, John H. Cook, l'altro di W. Tharston Brown già ministro ed ora socialista rivoluzionario. (1)

Egli ha abbandonato la sua posizione e la sua carica a quel mondo che tollera soltanto schiavi e padroni non mai una anima fiera ed è venuto, senza rimpianti, tra noi a cercarvi ambiente più puro e più nobile di libertà, d'indipendenza di solidarietà.

E' uno dei nostri anche se non ha incondizionatamente aderito a tutte le nostre idee.

Che importa?

La libertà, madre, accarezza d'affetti generosi tutti i figli che armati d'integra onestà combattono contro l'oppressione e la tirannia per un avvenire in cui non saranno nè padroni nè servi, nè ricchi nè poveri nè oppressori nè oppressi; per l'avvenire che irradierà le fiamme delle sue aurore vermiglie sulle fanciulle felici, sui figli liberi perchè avranno compreso che la libertà di ciascuno ha le sue radici nella libertà di tutti e che in questa libertà di tutti è la guarentigia della libertà, dello sviluppo, dell'autonomia, delle libere affermazioni di ciascuno.

Per questo ideale radioso il nostro collaboratore William Thurston Brown ha lasciato della vita le mollezze e gli agi tra cui la gente vana chiude i confini e le aspirazioni della felicità.

Per questo io lo tengo dei nostri e sono certa che egli sarà contento di ridarvi all'occasione la sua collaborazione e tutto il suo appoggio per la Cronaca Sovversiva.

Comincia così a muovere un'interpellanza al "Gran Consiglio" sa che la sua interpellanza è vana, inutile, inconcludente ma sa che essa posa il deputato e che i citrulli del gregge elettorale glie ne terranno buon conto.

I deputati socialisti di qui, vecchi e nuovi, eccezion fatta per un antico maestro di scuola, sono gente sprovvista d'ogni dono naturale, ignoranti, gretti, stitacati come ostriche ai impieghi salariati dallo Stato o dal Comune, paurosi di perdere l'offa e la sinecura che essi o i membri delle loro famiglie detengono soltanto in grazia al brevetto socialista legalitario e che sanno appetito da pericolosi avversarii di indiscutibile competenza.

Durante le giornate dallo scorso Ottobre mentre più agitato ferveva lo sciopero ai sarebbe potuto credere che il Gran Consiglio non contava deputati socialisti. All'inizio dell'agitazione i deputati socialisti avevano cercato di rendersene padroni e devesi appunto alla loro intromissione il pronto componimento dello sciopero dei tramvieri sulla base di promesse officiali che non furono mantenute nè, dalla Compagnia dei Tramways, nè dal governo dando così luogo al secondo sciopero seguito poi dallo sciopero generale.

Alle assemblee che precedettero questo movimento nessun deputato socialista mostrò la faccia, gli anarchici soli si prodigarono ovunque c'era propaganda da fare, interessi operai a difendere, colpi da ricevere... o da dare, sì essi, i compagni nostri, fecero questo lavoro con un'abnegazione, con un disinteresse, con una sincerità di cui i socialisti non hanno neppure l'intuizione, ma che hanno penetrato il cuore delle masse profondamente.

E queste — per quanto è almeno degli operosi organizzati — hanno abbandonato i cinici madori socialisti i quali non cercano nelle agitazioni operaie che il loro tornaro rappresentato al tempo del Mayor il proscrittore Thiebaut, (1) il vallotto, l'esecutore delle basse persecuzioni della Compagnia dei Tramways. Thiebaut che fece espellere tutti gli stranieri sospetti non solo di aver rapporti con anarchici, ma di aver simpatie per gli scioperanti. Pochi giorni di crisi acuta tra dirigenti e produttori, di lotta diretta ed accesa tra sfruttati e sfruttatori istruiscono sulla funzione di questi personaggi equivoci il popolo mille volte più che non anni ed anni sciupati nelle vane e vuote schermaglie parlamentari.

Thiebaut di cui il nostro corrispondente offre ai lettori della "Cronaca Sovversiva" lo stato di servizio socialista è dunque sempre nel partito e dal momento che i socialisti lo delegano al corteo del 1.o Maggio bisogna credere che ne sia sempre un pò il beniamino. LE FRODI DELL'ARBITRATO

I panegiristi dell'arbitrato, gli apologisti delle agitazioni legali e pacifiche dovrebbero fare un'escursione in questi distretti minerarii per toccare con mano in quanto turpe inganno ci abbia, dopo sei mesi di resistenza e di digiuni, affogato la famosa sentenza arbitrale della Commissione Rooseveltiana per lo sciopero dell'antracite.

Cessati i canti di trionfo, svanite le ebbrezze o gli entusiasmi, la realtà si erge con tutto l'orrore delle sue delusioni e delle sue miserie.

E' vero che non abbiamo mai, come oggi, estratto il minerale a 90 cents la tonnellata ed è altrettanto vero che effettivamente il nostro salario si è elevato del 12 per cento; ma fin dal 1 Aprile la carne e con essa i generi di prima necessità — quasi tutti controllati dai trusts — sono

Per la Liberta'

Avrei voluto prima d'ora intrattenervi del caso Turner, ma m'impedirono fin qui l'incertezza della situazione, l'aver io dovuto dare a questa nuova battaglia per la libertà tutto il mio tempo, tutta l'opera mia.

Se ve ne scrivo oggi gli è che io posso dirvi quanto si è fatto, quanto si farà per lui, pel trionfo del nostro buon diritto.

Voi conoscete già la sentenza del giudice Lacombe in forza della quale Turner dovrebbe, perché anarchico, essere deportato in Inghilterra, voi sapete la vanità dei nostri tentativi ad ottenergli la libertà sulla parola o sotto cauzione: non ci rimaneva quindi che una via, quella di ricorrere alla Suprema Corte federale e non avremmo indugiato ad esperire anche quest'unico mezzo se il compagno John Turner non avesse dovuto attendere manente alla Lega della libera parola la quale si propone di portare in ogni libero animo il convincimento che la legge antianarchica é inapplicabile ed assurda.

Al comitato che ha con tanta energica efficacia iniziato i suoi lavori aderirono i signori E. N. Chamberlain, Dott. E. B. Foot junior, A. Pleydel (segretario, 175 Broanway), Benjamin Tuker, George Mac Donal, David Rousseau; N. F. Doll, Moise Oppenenheimer; E. C. Nallen, Dr. J. B. Maryson, Herman Schluter, Alexander Jonas del "Volkszeitung", Algernon Lee, P. Borowsky, Joseph Barondes, Bolton Hall, oltre a moltissimi altri che vi mandarono pure la loro adesione.

Clarence S. Darrou sarà il consulente di Turner, Hugh. O. Pentecost ne sarà l'avvocato. E' stato intanto deciso un grande meeting pubblico di protesta che avrà luogo al Cooper Union Hall la sera del 3 Dicembre p. v. col concorso e coll'assistenza di notissimi personaggi tra cui mi basterà ricordarvi De Witt Warner, Ernest Crosby, Henry Frank ed altri moltissimi di ogni gradazione e partito. E' di capitale importanza associare alla nostra protesta quanti, fuori delle file libertarie, hanno sentimenti di giustizia e di umanità e mostrare contendere alla Russia il primato della violenza, della brutalità e della tirannia.

IL PASSATO

La vita è un incessante divenire. Vive tutto ciò che si modifica e si rinnova. Tutto ciò che s'arresta, si stanca, si cristallizza, muore.

Si é detto che la natura non consente mai neppure ad una molecola il riposo ed é verità: la materia stessa dei cadaveri inerti é soggetta ad assidua trasformazione da cui zampilla- fu convertita in statua di sale per essersi voltata indietro è un simbolo che si può applicare a tutti coloro i quali dimenticano l'istante attuale della loro esistenza per volgersi ad ammirare il passato.

Ma che cosa può darci il passato? Ammaestramenti? E sta bene: noi ci stimeremo felici di farne tesoro. Ma gli ammaestramenti che il passato ci dà sono esperienza di vita non di morte. Noi ammiriamo Dante, Platone e Cristo ma se attingeremo da loro qualche cosa non sarà mai la forma che uccide, sarà lo spirito che vivifica.

Platone, Cristo, Dante, hanno precorso i loro tempi insorsero contro di essi, non guardarono al passato, guardarono all'avvenire, non imitarono servilmente i loro predecessori, da questi trassero semplicemente la materia ispiratrice dell'opera loro.

Noi facciamo lo stesso, noi, nemici del passato, siamo dunque verso di esso più conseguenti che non lo siano i suo piú devoti e servili adoratori,

Voi conoscete già la sentenza del giudice Lacombe in forza della quale Turner dovrebbe, perché anarchico, essere deportato in Inghilterra, voi sapete la vanità dei nostri tentativi ad ottenergli la libertà sulla parola o sotto cauzione: non ci rimaneva quindi che una via, quella di ricorrere alla Suprema Corte federale e non avremmo indugiato ad esperire anche quest'unico mezzo se il compagno John Turner non avesse dovuto attendere nelle carceri di Ellis Island durante tre o quattro mesi — che tanti ne occorono alla Suprema Corte per decidere l'esito del ricorso. Abbiamo ritenuto miglior proposito rimetterci al compagno Turner stesso, al quale chiedemmo se preferiva starsene alla sentenza del giurlice Lacombe o ricorrere alla Suprema Corte Federale. Dobbiamo aggiungere subito che la condotta del compagno nostro si é in questa circostanza, come sempre, ispirata unicamente al maggior vantaggio della nostra propaganda, lontana da ogni preoccupazione di vantaggi o di disagi personali. Egli ha eletto senza un indugio, quattro lunghi mesi di prigionia nelle fetide sentine di Ellis Island sempre quando della nuova sopraffazione di cui è vittima sappiano i compagni trarre la ragione e la forza di una generosa battaglia contro la violenza reazionaria dei poteri costituiti, non perché egli speri di veder rivocata dalla Suprema Corte la deportazione a cui è stato condannato ma perchè sente, come noi sentiamo, che un'energica ed intensa agitazione popolare potrebbe ammonire i pubblici poteri intorno ai pericoli che un replicato abuso delle leggi scellerate trarrebbe seco inevitabilmente.

Si é adunque interposto appello e si è dato vita ad un comitato Pro Turner il quale nel suo meeting del 4 novembre corrente ha non solo avvisato ai mezzi piú efficaci per impedire la deportazione del nostro compagno carissimo ma col proposito di combattere ogni sopraffazione alla libertà di pensiero, di riunione e di stampa ha dato vita con carattere per- deciso un grande meeting pubblico di protesta che avrà luogo al Cooper Union Hall la sera del 3 Dicembre p. v. col concorso e coll'assistenza di notissimi personaggi tra cui mi basterà ricordarvi De Witt Warner, Ernest Crosby, Henry Frank ed altri moltissimi di ogni gradazione e partito. E' di capitale importanza associare alla nostra protesta quanti, fuori delle file libertarie, hanno sentimenti di giustizia e di umanità e mostrare loro che le leggi scellerate per cui Turner è arrestato, imprigionato e minacciato della deportazione sono un oltraggio alla tradizione liberale americana. Il meeting del 3 Dicembre provvederà a quest'urgenza mentre più tardi, quando l'eco delle generali proteste avrà scosso anche la massa che vive lontana dalle nostre lotte, si penserà ad una serie di comizii libertari, si penserà, sopratutto, con una circolare in cui il caso di Turner sarà studiato dal punto di vista etico e legale, intetessare i giornali operai e liberali deil'intiera nazione.

Deve però intendersi bene che Clarence S. Darrow non é in caso di poter dare gratuitamente la sua assistenza, che meeting, manifesti e circolari importano spese continue e gravi al cui sopperimento occorrono denari e che ciascuno quindi deve nel limite delle proprie forze sostenerci ed aiutarci. Dobbiamo intenderci sopra un altro punto: né Turner nè quelli che con lui hanno ingaggiato questa battaglia sfanno illusioni soverchiamente ottimiste intorno all'esito della causa ed alla decisione della Suprema Corte. Puó essere benissimo che il magistrato confermi la deportazione comminata dal giudice Lacombe contro il compagno Turner ma i principii agitati durante questo febbrile periodo di battaglia riusciranno se non a vincere l'ostinatezza reazionaria dei mercanti di giustizia a convincere la parte sana del popolo che la libertà é quì uno storico lontano patrimonio del passato, che rinnegando la sua liberale tradizione repubblicana l'America non ha piú che un'ambizione, quella di

La vita è un incessante divenire. Vive tutto ciò che si modifica e si rinnova. Tutto ciò che s'arresta, si stanca, si cristallizza, muore.

Si é detto che la natura non consente mai neppure ad una molecola il riposo ed é verità: la materia stessa dei cadaveri inerti é soggetta ad assidua trasformazione da cui zampillano vivaci organismi nuovi.

Il pensiero, come ogni cosa, é soggetto a questa legge dell'evoluzione, l'arte pure. Si pensa e si scrive oggi in una forma che non é piú quella di ieri, si penserà domani in una forma diversa da quella di oggi.

Così eternamente.

Tuttavia....

C'è della buona gente la quale s'attacca disperatamente all'idea che le cose siano state sempre come oggi sono, che come oggi esse debbano essere in eterno. Altri, senza dirlo, lo pensano, vi credono ed invocano ad ogni istante epoche antiche, opere antiche, nomi antichi.

Così se ci parlano d'arte ricordano, ad esempio, Dante.... se ci parlano di filosofia esclamano: Platone.... parlandoci di ideali susurrano: Cristo... E vorrebbero farci scrivere alla maniera di Dante, farci pensare alla maniera di Platone, eccitarci a combattere alla maniera di Cristo; questo vogliono, cristallizzare in Cristo la vita del sentimento, in Dante quella del pensiero, in Platone quella della scienza.

Sappiamo che la cristallizzazione della vita implica la morte. La morte, la morte della scienza, del pensiero e del sentimento é tutto quello a cui cotesta buona gente anela.

Questo culto del passato é una caratteristica delle intelligenze senili a cui manca la feconda energia che si chiama potenza generativa. La leggenda biblica della moglie di Lot che questi trasse semplicemente la materia ispiratrice dell'opera loro.

Noi facciamo lo stesso, noi, nemici del passato, siamo dunque verso di esso più conseguenti che non lo siano i suo piú devoti e servili adoratori,

Pretendere di paralizzare la vita e' pretendere d'ucciderla e la vita non si puòs pegnere. Pretendere di soggiogare il presente al passato o l'avvenire al presente e' delirio di menti inferme. Tutto cambia, tutto, tutto quello che e', vita che e' passione, che e' forza.

Noi che ci opponiamo con tutte le nostre forze alla cristallizzazione del presente, che lottiamo per orientarlo verso l'avvenire, noi siumo gli eletti per l'ultimo trionfo.

E come potrebbe esser diverso se noi siamo la vita?

GIULIO CAMBA.

Rigenerazione

L'atmosfera è satura di elettricità: un urto potrebbe determinare l'uragano. La miseria delle classi lavoratrici, lo spettacolo delle ladrerie delle classi privilegiate e del loro parassitismo a detrimento della grande maggioranza, la gesuitica alterigia dei governanti e la crescente brutalità dei loro stipendiati, tutto contribuisce a render fosco l'aere, a condensare i nembi che momentaneamente hanno tutta la parvenza della quiete ma che sono pronti a sconvolgersi, a premersi, a cozzare in una terribile conflagrazione. Le sommosse pullulanti quà e là ad intervalli, audaci, minacciose, temerarie, assomigliano troppo alle parziali scaramuccie che precedettero in Francia il 1789 perchè si possa negare che siamo ai prodomi della rivoluzione.

Tutto è corrotto, tutto è fradicio e barcollante. I governi, che rappresentano non il popolo, ma le classsi abbienti e sfruttatrici, hanno dimostrato e dimostrano continuamente in ogni loro atto di fare i proprii interessi senza curarsi che in modo illusorio e menzognero di quelli del popolo lavoratore. I parlamenti non potrebbero dar prove più luminose di essere accozzaglie di imbecilli, di ambiziosi e di ladri. Le magistrature e le polizie, che ormai si possono accoppiare, offrono ogni

ANARCHIA

E' parola che torna ostica a molta gente la quale non sa comprenderla che come sinonimo di malvagità, di disordine e di caos, come non sa ritenere gli anarchici che quali malfattori facinorosi sempre in agguato per accoppare un ricco e ripartirsene le spoglie.

Pei suoi adepti ha ben diverso significato, essa é dottrina sociale che intende realizzare l'ordine nell'assenza di ogni governo, di ogni sfruttamento dell'uomo sull'uomo: non significa quindi chè completa libertà individuale.

Le ragioni per cui alla parola anarchia si è dato fin quì significato di illimitato disordine sono ovvie essendosi fin quì inculcato agli uomini che essi devono essere governati, che sono governati saggiamente, che il governo è una necessità di cui non si pretendere farne a meno ci pare assurdo.

Il male é questo: che un buon governo è un'illusione; la sua esistenza é fondata nella tirannia di una classe sopra l'altra.

— Ma gli uomini debbono essere pur governati! osservano, essi vogliono esser guidati dalle leggi! Può anche essere ma ammesso pure che gli uomini sieno bambini i quali debbano essere ad ogni modo guidati chi sarà sufficientemente perfetto, sufficientemente savio, sufficientemente puro da governare e guidare i suoi compagni?

Noi sosteniamo che gli uomini debbono governarsi individualmente da sé e se per questo essi non sono maturi, ancor meno maturi essi sono per governare gli altri. E' dunque possibile che un solo uomo, che pochi uomini possono guidare i milioni di ciechi di cui si costituisce una nazione?

— Non possiamo tuttavia far a meno di qualche autorità, osserva un ostinato e con ragione. Ma noi questa autorità l'abbiamo pure; l'abbiamo nel potere irresistibile delle leggi naturali che si manifesta nel mondo sociale come nel mondo fisico.

Sono promesse che in cospetto dell'ineffabile miseria della moltitudine hanno carattere di amare, atroci ironie.

Ho trovato pochi uomini, pochissime donne, intelligenti, che osino difendere l'onore e la coscienza dei governi esistenti: tutti erano con me, ed in più d'un punto, d'accordo: ma nel momento decisivo dell'azione mancava loro il coraggio morale di affermare francamente, apertamente, la loro simpatia, la loro solidarietà coi rivoluzionari dell'anarchismo.

Noi che abbiamo scelto la nostra via, la via segnataci dalle nostre convinzioni in nome dei principii della scienza e delle leggi naturali, combattiamo con ogni forza nostra l'organizzazione che si chiama Stato proclamando per tutti un egual diritto alla produzione ed alle gioie della vita.

Rotti i vincoli d'un'autorità straniera nelle libere associazioni sorte spontanee a consacrare l'indipendenza e l'autonomia dell'individuo, ognuno recherà al benessere comune ed al proprio il suo contributo lavorando secondo le sue forze, consumando a seconda dei suoi bisogni. Le scoperte della scienza, le applicazioni sempre crescenti sempre più umane delle invenzioni tecniche all'industria renderanno il lavoro facile e gradito: la scienza, l'istruzione, l'arte, accessibili pubblico sempre disposto ad accettare per poltroneria intellettuale e morale anche le scempiaggini piú fantastiche.

Noi, anarchici, pensiamo che l'anarchia cioé la liberta' individuale non si conquistera' senza violenza, come senza violenza non avrebbe potuto la liberta' difendersi alle Termopili ed a Moratona.

Le plebi reclamano sempre piú energicamente, sempre più apertamente la liberta' e le condizioni ad attingerla si fanno giorno per giorno più favorevoli.

E' evidente che attraverso la storia un'evoluzione si elabora a cui schiavitú e violenza di ogni forma dovranno cedere il passo e da quella evoluzione zampillera' piena, intera, insommergibile la liberta', la liberta' per tutti, la liberta' per ciascuno.

L'anarchismo non é dunque, come insinuano i microcefali dell'ordine costituito e.... di quello costituendo, un movimento retrogado ma movimento rivoluzionario fecondo d'avanguardia. Gli anarchici ricordano alle masse lavoratrici una imperiosa necessita' che esse non debbono dimenticare mai: la lotta gigantesca da cui deve essere fatalmente preceduta la realizzazione delle nostre idee; mentre d'altro canto la soluzione rivoluzionaria affrettano con tutti i mezzi che sono a loro disposizione: la parola, la stampa, l'a-gnificato, essa é dottrina sociale che intende realizzare l'ordine nell'assenza di ogni governo, di ogni sfruttamento dell'uomo sull'uomo: non significa quindi che completa libertà individuale.

Le ragioni per cui alla parola anarchia si è dato fin quì significato di illimitato disordine sono ovvie essendosi fin quì inculcato agli uomini che essi devono essere governati, che sono governati saggiamente, che il governo è una necessità di cui non si può assolutamente far a meno.

Nei secoli scorsi ogni temerario che osasse affermare poter l'umanità proseguire, senza la protezione d'un'autorità terrena e spirituale, il suo cammino, era considerato come un pazzo e la sua temeraria pazzia scontava al manicomio o sul rogo: oggi si contano a milioni gli empii, uomini e donne, che all'idea di un ente soprannaturale sorridono.

Con tutto questo i liberi pensatori di oggi continuano nella loro maggior parte a credere nella necessità di uno Stato che protegga i cittadini, senza ricordare, senza riflettere che il governo non é esistito, non esisterà mai che coll'oppressione per l'oppressione; che all'autorità si debbono imputare i piú scellerati delitti che abbiano mai funestato la società umana; che se l'autorità evolvendosi progressivamente fu dispotismo, oligarchia, democrazia, non cessó però mai d'essere coercizione ed oppressione.

La falange dei buoni che riconoscono il malessere presente e vogliono rimediarvi ed all'onesto proposito votano intelligenza e volontà, s'é di molto accresciuta, ma essa non sa ancora emanciparsi dai pregiudizii, dalle supestizioni di che l'inquinarono secoli e secoli di barbarie, non sa ancora vedere con chiarezza che cosa realmente si nasconda sotto l'istituzione che essa chiama governo.

— Come potremo vivere senza governo? si chiedono gli uni; se il nostro governo non é buono cerchiamo di cambiarlo, di sostituirgliene uno migliore, ma prescindere da esso, chi di cui si costituisce una nazione.

— Non possiamo tuttavia far a meno di qualche autorità, osserva un ostinato e con ragione. Ma noi questa autorità l'abbiamo pure; l'abbiamo nel potere irresistibile delle leggi naturali che si manifesta nel mondo sociale come nel mondo fisico.

La schiavitù cosí come oggi esiste tollera un padrone esterno, un legislatore straniero a coloro che gli obbediscono, mentre le leggi naturali non sono fuori di noi, sono in noi stessi e soltanto in conformità di queste leggi viviamo, respiriamo, ci muoviamo; non sono nemiche nostre, sono nostre benefatirici.

Le leggi stabilite dall'uomo e raccolte nei codici sono in conformità ed in corrispondenza colle leggi naturali? Nessuno oserebbe affermarlo. Ed è appunto perché le leggi umane non sono conformi alle leggi naturali l'umanità geme piagata da tutti i dolori. E' assurdo parlare di benessere umano finché non avremo realizzata la libertà.

Non meravigliamoci dunque che l'anarchia ed i suoi apostoli raccolgano tanta messe di maledizioni e di persecuzioni feroci: essa é dottrina che urta troppo violentemente le regole generalmente convenute: l'attiva, ardente energia dei suoi propagandisti deve necessariamente ferire un soverchio numero di coscienze.

Al povero si predicano la rassegnazione e la pazienza a riscatto di gioie ultra terrene, ma che cosa deve importare al povero, al paria miserabile, nudo, mendicante per tutta la vita un boccon di pane, se le porte del paradiso si spalancheranno piú largamente..... dopo morte, a lui che non al ricco?

Rotti i vincoli d'un'autorità straniera nelle libere associazioni sorte spontanee a consacrare l'indipendenza e l'autonomia dell'individuo, ognuno recherà al benessere comune ed al proprio il suo contributo lavorando secondo le sue forze, consumando a seconda dei suoi bisogni. Le scoperte della scienza, le applicazioni sempre crescenti sempre più umane delle invenzioni tecniche all'industria renderanno il lavoro facile e gradito: la scienza, l'istruzione, l'arte, accessibili ad ogni mente, perfezioneranno, nobiliteranno la razza e la donna sarà, allora, l'uguale dell'uomo.

Angioli? ma l'egoismo non è un delitto né un ostacolo, lo è soltanto, per meglio dire, laddove le condizioni d'ambiente permettano ad un individuo di soddisfare al proprio egoismo a detrimento di quello dei suoi simili.

In una società anarchica ciascuno cercherà naturalmente di soddisfare alle esigenze del proprio io, ma come nella natura sopravvivono soltanto le specie i cui individui facciano del mutuo appoggio la base del loro sviluppo così nella società l'uomo ad assicurare al proprio io le soddisfazioni agognate stendera' amica la mano a tutti coloro che solidali gli stenderanno fraternamente la propria e germogliera' dall'egoismo invitta, invincibile la fratellanza.

Questo il nostro ideale.

Un pugnale nella destra, una fiaccola nella sinistra tra il fumo e lo schianto delle esplosioni dinamitarde dipingono i nemici del nostro l'ideale l'anarchico, l'anarchico pazzoide e delinquente, fanatico del cataclisma universale, pronto a raggiungerlo assassinando il primo che passa. Ma è una sconcia caricatura convenzionale, agitata ostinatamente dinnanzi ad un insinuano i microcefali dell'ordine costituito e.... di quello costituendo, un movimento retrogado ma movimento rivoluzionario fecondo d'avanguardia. Conchiudendo: il benessere dell'umanita' non è possibile senza comunismo e senza anarchia, senza uguaglianza nei rapporti economici, senza liberta' nel diritto. Il sistema comunista escludendo ogni rapporto da padrone a servo significa gia' in se' anarchismo: certo e' che a raggiungere meta cosí alta la rivoluzione sociale e' fatalita' ineluttabile.

Quanto alla violenza che dovrebbe secondo i benpensanti essere caratteristica dell'anarchismo noi non la ripudiamo, non la ripudieremo mai: confessiamo soltanto che non arriviamo a comprendere come possa condannarsi in un individuo e glorificarsi in un popolo quando entrambi vi fanno ricorso per conquistare o difendere la liberta'.

Questo solo in conclusione e' vero: che tutti gli oppressori hanno condannato sempre la ribellione degli oppressi; le colonie greche indocili provocano le ire della Persia, le forche caudine schiaffeggiano la maesta' di Roma onnipotente e Bunkershill e' per l'Inghilterra vaticinio di sciagura.

Può l'anarchia realizzarsi senza ricorrere alla forza che regge e governa al mondo ogni cosa?

which direction the carriage faced. The answer came that it was not Mr. Sheehan.

The carriage proceeded on up the hill. When inquiry was made at the residence as to who had arrived there was a fine array of evasive answers and a clever display of sidestepping.

"Why, some local politicians have been here," was the answer. "Then Mr. Rodie and Mr. Meyer were here also, you know."

Only after several minutes was it admitted that Mr. Belmont was at Rosemount. He was then conferring with Judge Parker and Mr. Sheehan.

The condition of the campaign machinery was again declared to be excellent here today. It was reiterated that the most valiant and valuable work was being done by all the Democratic forces, and not one complaint could be lodged against anybody for laxness or failure to take advantage of opportunities.

There have been reports that Messrs. Rodie and Meyer made their all-night stay at Rosemount in order to point out that relations were not altogether cordial between the State and National Committees. It was impossible to find any responsible leader who would concede that such reports had an iota of truth in them.

There is every expectation here that ex-Senator Henry G. Davis will visit his running mate before the end of the week.

The Eighth Massachusetts, en route for Albany from the bloodless battle of Bull Run, passed through Esopus shortly after 9 o'clock this morning. Their train of a half dozen cars was at the station when Judge Parker drove up to take the train for Kingston.

The candidate was caught sight of in his carriage with Mrs. Parker before he had come under the large campaign banner in front of the Valley House. Desultory cheering began. As the occupants of the vehicle came alongside the platform the boys recently engaged in the struggles of the Blue and Brown tumbled out of the cars and at company front saluted the nominee.

Judge Parker was surrounded by a half dozen officers, and then discipline was thrown to the winds and the Bay State soldiers crowded about for a handshake. They were gratified in the main, only the arrival of the train which was to bear the candidate to church breaking up the demonstration.

COCKRAN CHIEF ORATOR.

Wigwam Plans Its Big Parker Rally at Tammany Hall.

Tammany has arranged for its big Parker and Davis ratification meeting to be held at the Wigwam on Wednesday evening of this week. James W. Gerard, Chairman of the Tammany Campaign Committee, will preside at the meeting in the hall, while elaborate arrangements have been completed for the overflow meetings.

The plans provide for a meeting with only Tammany men for orators. Tickets of admission will not be required, and all will be welcome. Congressman W. Bourke Cockran is announced as the orator of the evening, the other speakers to include Senator Thomas F. Grady, Justice George F. Roesch, M. Warley Platzek, Congressmen Sulzer, Harrison, and Goldfogle, John J. Delany, James Lindsay Gordon, Alfred J. Talley, Wauhope Lynn, Thomas C. T. Crain, ex-Senator T. C. O'Sullivan, Charles L. Guy, John M. Quinn, Water Register Savage, Dr. William J. O'Sullivan, Maurice R. Blumenthal, F. O. Duttmann, Carl P. Hangi, Henry W. Wolf, William M. Klein, Justice Zeller, Gotthardt A. Litthauer, and Maurice Ellinger.

There will be four outdoor meetings, including a German meeting at Fourteenth Street and Irving Place and an Italian meeting at Irving Place and Fifteenth Street. Antonio Zucca will preside at the Italian meeting, and Charles G. F. Wahle at the German meeting. Stands will be erected on each side of the entrance to Tammany Hall, where Daniel F. Cohalan and Ferdinand Levy will speak. The Sixty-ninth Regiment Band will furnish the music for the indoor meeting, and each outdoor meeting also will have a band. There will be ment now on foot in Utah to purify the politics of the State from apostolic domination and to secure to the people of Utah the political freedom which of right should be theirs."

If a Republican Legislature is elected Senator Kearns will probably be succeeded by ex-Congressman George Sutherland, who was born a Mormon, but left the Church. He was for a time an uncompromising opponent of Smoot, but became his supporter coincidently with his own candidacy for the Senate.

ANARCHISTS' BIG RALLY.

Most and Emma Goldman Speak for Movement in Russia.

The Anarchists held a rally last night at the Grand Irving Hall in Broome Street, in support of the Anarchistic movement in Russia. The hall was packed. Emma Goldman, Herr Most, and others made speeches. About a hundred policemen and detectives were scattered throughout the hall. It was the biggest Anarchistic meeting, it is said, that was ever held in this city.

It was strenuously denied that it had any reference to the assassination of President McKinley, although it was held at a time marking the anniversary of the days the stricken President hovered between life and death as the result of the assassin's bullet.

The meeting was opened by Isaac Isaacs, editor of "Free Society." The first speaker introduced was "Comrade" Kelly of London, an "International anarchist" who, in slipping into this country, escaped the fate of Turner, the other London "Red," who was arrested while at a meeting at the Murray Hill Lyceum, and later deported.

"Comrade" Kelly said that the time was ripe for an extension of the Anarchistic propaganda in Russia.

Emma Goldman spoke next.

"We will not be much better off in America," she said, "than the people are in Russia, as long as a spark of Government remains. Freedom has been dead in America for a hundred years, and capitalism swings the knout here as bravely as that weapon ever was wielded in Darkest Russia. I tell you we will need more heroes and greater heroes than in Russia to make this country free."

Herr Most was the last speaker.

"It is not probable," he said, "that there will be a social revolution in Russia for a long time, because the army is too big and they have too many policemen; but as a matter of revenge it is highly satisfactory to know that we can chuck a bomb at a Romanoff or a de Plehve. If we cannot do the army, we can strike at the personification of the whole rotten system—the Czar."

DEFIED CROWD WITH AN AXE.

He Had Attacked His Father's Housekeeper—Now He May Die.

Special to The New York Times.

VINELAND, N. J., Sept. 11.—Five hundred persons were called to Boulevard and Pear Street this afternoon to dislodge Charles Dawson, so that he could receive medical aid. He and his brother Edward went to the home of their father, William Dawson, and, tearing the clothing from the housekeeper's back, threw the garments out of the window, together with the crockery and furniture.

The housekeeper's son ran screaming from the house, and broke thirteen window lights before he succeeded in felling Charles Dawson with a brickbat. Dawson rushed across the street to his own residence, barricaded the door and threatened all comers with an axe. He refused to surrender, and when the police arrived they found him in a corner of the room, with the axe in his hand. He struck at the officers, and they were compelled to shoot him in the arm before they could overpower him. He will probably die.

National Headquarters during the day today, and would receive party men there for several days, as well as going over the campaign work in general. He was not sure last night whether Judge Parker would be down this week or not, but if the Judge does not appear in New York before it comes time for Senator Davis to return to West Virginia, the Vice Presidential candidate will probably make a second pilgrimage to Esopus.

TEXAS GAMBLERS DEFY POLICE.

Withstand Siege Behind Barred Doors and Dictate Terms of Surrender.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 11.—Police Commissioner Blaylock and Chief of Police Knight declared war on public gambling houses months ago, and the gambling house managers defied them. Knight says there are seventeen big gambling houses and scores of minor "joints" in operation in Dallas.

Lastnight some of his secret service men, after months of effort, succeeded in gaining entrance into several rooms, among the number the Coney Island, Dan Stuart's old place. Thirty-four men were arrested there.

At midnight Lilly Strong's place, "The Branch," was attacked, but the doors were barred against the police. Chief Knight and twenty of his men surrounded the place and held it in siege until 5 o'clock this morning, when the chief threatened to break in, and eighty-three beleaguered men agreed to surrender if permitted to plead guilty, deposit money to pay fines, and promise to obey the law.

The offer of compromise was accepted rather than continue the siege scene throughout the Sabbath.

WOMEN SAW PISTOL DUEL.

Men Blazed Away at Each Other Near Crowded Brooklyn Park.

An impromptu pistol duel between two men caused intense excitement in a crowd of women and children in City Park, Brooklyn, late yesterday afternoon. The shooting ended after four shots, when one of the men received a bullet in the left arm.

The men were Leonard Infranz, twenty-three years old, who lives in Leonard Street, and Peter Adams, thirty-two years old of 105 Navy Street. Infranz is a baker and Adams a mechanic. The two met yesterday afternoon at Park Avenue and Navy Street and stood talking together for some time. A quarrel arose between them and in an instant the pair started to blaze away at each other.

The park, which is in a tenement district, was filled with women and children enjoying a Sunday airing. Some one telephoned to the police, and several men were sent around from the Adams Street Station in the patrol wagon. They arrested Infranz and had Adams removed to the Brooklyn Hospital.

KILLED IN BOXING BOUT.

Death Ends Friendly Match in Atlantic City Boardwalk Cafe.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 11.—In a friendly boxing bout in a Boardwalk café to-day Alexander Tilghman, a waiter, was killed by a body blow. His opponent was Robert Glenn, a fellow waiter, who had south-bound Ninth Avenue surface car about 12:15 o'clock this morning at Thirty-first Street. His left leg was cut off just above the knee.

While Policeman Goldman of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station made a tourniquet with the leather thong of his night stick and lessened the flow of blood, the Rev. Father Gleason of St. Michael's Roman Catholic Church, in front of which the accident happened, administered the last rites. The man was taken to Roosevelt Hospital, where it was said he probably will die.

Policeman Goldman said that Motorman Donohue, after running over the man, did not bring his car to a stop for some distance. Goldman pulled Donohue off the platform, and then sent in a hurry call to Roosevelt Hospital. Five minutes after a second hurry call was sent in, but the police say that it was nearly half an hour before the ambulance came.

In the man's clothing was found an envelope, soiled and frayed, on which was the address "John Dineen, 523 East One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street."

JAILED FOR KILLING NEGRO.

Mississippi Whitecaps Tell of Plans to Murder and Run Out Black Men.

Special to The New York Times.

BROOKHAVEN, Miss., Sept. 11.—Will Franklin, Oscar Franklin, and Will Porter, charged with having murdered Henry List, a negro, were remanded to jail without bail by Justice Daughtry. This was the first of the Whitecap cases, and there was much suppressed excitement.

Gov. Vardaman placed the local militia company under the orders of the Executive Committee of citizens in order to prevent any attempt at rescue. The militia remained under arms at the Court House until after the trial, when prisoners were returned to their quarters in the jail.

Luella List, wife of the murdered negro, told how her husband was killed. Several members of the Whitecap organization turned State's evidence. Jeff Wills, a special detective, said he was a member of the Whitecap organization.

"Before I attended any meetings this year," he said, "Gov. Vardaman appointed me special detective to work up evidence against Whitecaps. I had conversations with Oscar Franklin, who said he was at the last killing. Will Franklin said he held the horses. The first meeting I attended was in John Lard's field. Will Franklin was there. It was resolved that night to kill Pink Adams and Tom Brady and to run off all the negroes west of the Illinois Central Railroad this Fall and burn the negroes' houses."

GAVE A DOLLAR FOR 75 CENTS.

Then Young Farmer Was Arrested and Locked Up for Counterfeiting.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 11.—Because he was willing to give four quarters for three, Herman Knapp, a young farmer residing near here, was arrested to-day by Secret Service men from Buffalo and charged with counterfeiting. The Federal officials have been after Knapp for some time, but it was only his boldness in passing the spurious quarters that gave him away.

Knapp's residence is at Etna, a village seven miles from here, and the detectives believe that his counterfeiting plant may be located there. It is thought that evidence is withheld in the hope of discover-made to the Pueblo House and the Old Inn on the Mountain. Other runs to intervale and other places will be made.

Regarding the coming automobile events in the South, Mr. Morgan said:

"A record-breaking trial will be held on Ormond Beach during the second week of November, during which many prominent autoists will attempt to lower the records which have already been established there.

"The Cuban people want an automobile tournament. Last week I had an interview in New York with the President of the Havana Automobile Club, Enrique J. Conill. The Cuban Government has donated to the club the free and exclusive use of the famous sixty-mile palm tree lined road running from Havana to the village of San Cristobel for a Cuban road race. I am to go to Cuba to look over the ground for the three days' carnival, and we may include in the programme motor boats for fast races in Havana Harbor. We are now looking about with a view to chartering a special steamer to carry our automobile party to Cuba and Florida."

Voltairine de Cle[y]re / E[mma] G[oldman].– p. 213 ; 35 cm. In Lucifer, The Lightbearer [Chicago]. –(Dec. 8, 1904).

h a journal; so too in Australasia and all the English colonies, ay nothing of the great centers of Europe—for which it ld later on perhaps be printed in Esperanto. Then would ir treasury become as plethoric as it is now constantly de- ted "Think of the useful work, too, that might be done merely hy tablishing a means of communication between women who want to marry and women who are too much or unhappily mar- ied and thus giving both the opportunity of talking their cases ver together. When we consider that fully fifty per cent of tho women, who constitute the clientele of palmists and fortune tell- rs, are wrongly mated or unhappily married, it will at once be en what useful work could be done on these lines alone.

"A. WASTALL, Ex-Editor
"'Natural Food,' London."

That the question of methods of work is a vital one to suc- ss will be readily conceded, and that upon no point is it more ecessary to have substantial agreement than upon the ques- tion of concentration, on the one hand, or of diversity on the ther, will also he conceded. For this reason I now ask brief eplies to, or comments upon the suggestions of Brother Wastall.

Once more, in regard to the first four questions named in his article, I would suggest that if changes are to be made in ny of these particulars, the nearer these changes can be made to or after, the beginning of the new year the better. M. H.

THE LAST OF THE JOHN TURNER CASE.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker:

As treasurer of the Free Speech League and the Turner Fund Committee, I am now able to report that all matters relat- ing to the John Turner case are at last settled, and in accord with the action of the last meeting of the committee I now offer a report of what use was made of the Fund collected.

The contributions were acknowledged, as they came in, in various Liberal papers that aided in encouraging them, and it would be asking too much of your space to print them in detail again. So, also, of the numerous items of disbursement; but the following summary gives a sufficient idea of the cost of de- fense, as audited by the committee:

For John Turner and family	$425.50
For halls and meetings	180.00
For secretary's postage, etc	174.54
For collector's expenses	185.90
For printing	355.60
For attorneys' fees and court charges	1,644.31

The total of expense account also represents the total income, and for this expenditure, together with much personal effort, we report as results: some publicity, considerable opposition aroused to such restrictive immigration laws, and the adverse Supreme Court decision which practically says of the law that excludes John Turner, "that's all right."

It is generally well to know the worst, which now amounts to this, that foreigners have no rights here that Congress may choose to deny to them.

The only remaining assets of the Turner Committee are about fifty copies of the pamphlet of Darrow's brief for the Su- preme Court, which contains much of use to all who have occa- sion to defend the rights of opinion, free speech, etc. These are now offered at 25 cents per copy (of which it takes 10 cents to mail them), and any little income thereby will be turned in to the small fund of the Free Speech League.

E. B. FOOTE, JR., Treasurer.

New York, November 2, 1904.

[The above report was overlooked else it would have been given to LUCIFER'S readers much sooner. First and last we have given considerable space and time to the "Turner case," regard- ing it as one of the most important ever brought to the atten- tion of liberty lovers in the United States. In San Francisco last winter, and at the congress of the "National Liberty Party" (now the American Free Thought Association) in St. Louis, I did what I could to secure public protest against the unAmer- ican and reactionary methods adopted by the Federal govern- ment at Washington, in its treatment of John Turner, an Eng- lishman, whose only crime was that, when asked for his political belief, he acknowledged himself an "Anarchist."—M. VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

Voltairine de Cleyre, the well-known radical poet, free thought and anarchist lecturer, is lying dangerously ill in Phila- delphia, and in very straitened circumstances. Her life and works are known to a great many readers of the LUCIFER, and to them we believe it unnecessary to do more than to mention this fact. To those to whom they are not, however, we would say that she has given seventeen years of her life with pen, voice and whatever way she could, to the cause of freedom and human progress. Possessed of ability, honesty and high moral courage, she never swerved from the hard and stony path which all ideal- ists are compelled to travel. Devoting herself unceasingly to the uplifting and enlightening of the human family without hope or thought of reward, except that feeling of exhilaration that comes to the soldier of progress, it was inevitable that now in the hour of physical disability, she should find herself penniless and help- less. Her frinds in Philadelphia have rallied to her assistance to the best of their ability and have placed her in a hospital where she is receiving medical attendance and the best of care. The expenses are considerable and as their means are limited, this appeal is issued in the hope that many friends till now not aware of her condition, may know it and render that assistance which is necessary and which we believe they will gladly give. Miss de Cleyre is too ill to be consulted in the matter, so the appeal is issued without her knowledge. The situation is so critical, however, that we have no alternative. She would be the last to say or imply that any obligation, moral or otherwise, rests upon anyone to assist her because of her devotion to the cause of freedom. We feel, however, that most of us have done far less than she and we must rally in the hour of need round a fighter who has fought so strenuously in that cause. Contributions can be sent to either E. G. Smith, 210 E. 13th St., New York City, or to N. Notkin, 1332 S. 6th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

FRIENDS OF VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

ANOTHER WOMAN'S "DECLARATION."

Three cheers for you "(Mrs.) W. M!"

Is the handle a badge of servitude?

I have but one fault to find with you, and that is you did not sign your full name.

Sing it out, sister! You have nothing to be ashamed of.

Like some of the sisters I think most men have a good deal to learn. Minding their own business is the biggest. Even our most radical do and say some very odd things.

One said his love for his sweetheart gave him the right to go into her presence any time he wished.

Bah! And his love for her might give him the right to knock her down any time he wished.

Another said, "Oh, I don't care if my wife associates sexually with other men, but I don't want to know it." The same man would not take a lady out, although she asked him to do so, because another man was living in the same house with her and was her lover. Another man's property, you bet!

It is these would-be free people that hurt the cause of free- dom.

Elsie Colo Wilcox makes me smile when she says she is afraid "to speak out in meetin'." She says "Liberty is the one thing needful." Yes, dear sister, but liberty is an idea that has no place in the mind of the average Socialist. All the "prosperity" in the world will never root out of the minds of governmentalis- ists the idea of ownership of the body. I know a good many Socialists but none that are free, or even who know the meaning of that word.

The only demand that any woman can make, or has the right to make, is freedom for herself. This she takes, if she wants it; if not she remains a slave—a slave to public opinion, religion, authority, or man-made laws of any kind or of all kinds.

Freedom cannot be given; you must take it. The laws that now hold women in a grasp of iron will never recede. The mind must break them.

As for myself I take freedom. If I wish a sex mate I ask him—no other. He has the right to comply or refuse.

I make no love contracts. That I love a man to-day is no sign I will love him forever, or even to-morrow.

In this I believe I am right, and say as much at any time or place, and am not afraid to sign my name,

LYDIA R. TOOP.

IN March next there will be issued the first number of a magazine which will be called "MOTHER EARTH." It will be published at 10 cents a copy or one dollar the year.

The aim of "MOTHER EARTH" will be to present to its readers every phase of LIBERAL thought and activity throughout the world, whether in the realm of pure literature, in the whirlpool of revolutionary struggle, or in the sombre depths of silent preparation.

Recognition is given, however, to the newly awakened desire on the part of vast numbers of those, on the outside of the liberal movement, to know the meaning of the universal unrest in which the whole world shares, but which is directed by scattered groups of workers.

"MOTHER EARTH", therefore, will be at once informing and educative, and to these ends will enlist the services of the leaders of both thought and action in the various parts of the world.

"MOTHER EARTH" will be edited by Emma Goldman and Max Baginski, with the co-operation of John R. Coryell.

Among the contributors to the first number are Hutchins Hapgood, Emma Goldman, Bolton Hall, Peter Kropotkin, John R. Coryell, Max Baginski.

Die Dächer des Denkens sprechen [illegible]
ohne Berufung zuzulassen. Aus dem schreckhaften Mechanismus, dessen unbarmherzige Arbeit auf seinen stillen Blättern in Zeilen verzeichnet ist, kommen Menschen und Nationen zu Pulver gemahlen hervor. Wenn das Capital Sieger bleibt, dann können wir uns unser goldenes Zeitalter weisen; in jener Stunde, wo wir unterliegen, mögen wir zurückschauen und sehen, wie Licht, Freude und Hoffnung — alles, was die Welt an Schönem und Gutem innehatte, wie ein absterbendes Licht vergeht. Die Menschheit wird aufgehört haben zu leben.

Was das Anarchisten anbelangt, die wir „die modernen Barbaren" genannt werden, so ist unsere Forderung: Gerechtigkeit für Alle. Bösewichte, die wir sind, verlangen wir für alle die das Licht der Welt erblicken, Brot, Freiheit und Fortschritt.

— "Mother Earth" — „Mutter Erde". Unter diesem Titel soll vom fünfzehnten März ab, ein anarchistisches Monats-Magazin in englischer Sprache erscheinen. Durch nachstehendes Circular, das keiner Uebersetzung bedarf, da es doch nur Solche interessiren kann, welche der englischen Sprache mächtig sind, geben die Herausgeber ihre An- und Absichten kund — :

"Comrades,—On March 15th will appear the first number of an anarchistic monthly, "Mother Earth". This magazine will try to represent the center of all truly radical elements in the United States, who, tired of the loud dissonances of the present, and awakened in opposition thereto, see the only hope for struggling humanity in the reorganization of our social and economic life upon a basis of freedom and justice. Here and there are solitary individuals or groups of idealists who battle against external and internal tyrannies, against 'Virtue,' perched on her throne, self-satisfied, and against dull indifference. What is badly wanted is an intellectual link that will bring these scattered elements together. "Mother Earth" will attempt to be that link. The contents will consist of articles, essays, and notes, treating of the development and growth of anarchistic ideas, in various phases of human life; then too, it will bring international reports of the struggle of new ideas against the old, of the various movements of the oppressed against their oppressors, and the methods employed by them, such as the general strike, trade unionism, and the co-operative movement. Every endeavor at a higher, broader, and deeper life, literary, artistic, social, or economic, will be brought before the readers of "Mother Earth". „Mother Earth" proposes not only to deal with the serious side of life, but with its humorous, satirical and ironical phases as well. In the certainty that many will agree with us, that in this country, where public opinion and sentiments are more successfully fabricated than abroad, such a publication is an absolute necessity, we ask for your co-operation and assistance. The magazine will be published monthly, and will be $1.00 a year, or 10 cents a copy. Subscriptions and communications may be sent to the undersigned. Max Baginski, — Ein grosser Bauhandwerker-Streik in New York, durch welchen die allgemeine Einführung des „offenen Shop" verhindert werden soll, wirft seinen Schatten vor sich her. Bei der totalen Zerfahrenheit der einschlägigen Unions und dem stupid-conservativen Charakter der meisten Anhänger derselben, kann Unsereiner nichts Gutes ahnen. Indessen — wer weiss!? — vielleicht folgt auf den muthmasslichen Zusammenbruch ein Aufbau auf radicaler Basis. In diesem Falle wären keine Opfer zu gross, die gebracht werden müssten, dann das Resultat würde bald zu einer Auferlegung derselben führen.

Als um die Mitte des achtzehnten Jahrhunderts das vorgeschobene Jahrhundert ein Proletariat von Frankreich nach Deutschland herüberwehte und den politischen Zündstoff, der noch von Julius 1848 übrig geblieben war, allmählig zum Glimmen brachte, da brüteten die reactionären deutschen [illegible] Spiessbürger. Auf den Gesichtern der [illegible] fürstlichen Staatsretter und auf den Visagen der Stellvertreter Seiner himmlischen Ohnmächtigkeit spiegelte sich die Furcht wieder, es könnte das erwachende Proletariat mit höchst deren Köpfen ein ergötzliches Fangballspiel in Scene setzen.

Leider war auch das damalige Proletariat von dem Wahne befangen, es könne seine elende Lage auf dem Wege des Parlamentarismus „gesetzlich" verbessern. Bis zum Jahre 1878 duldete die Regierung, dass auch Arbeiter ihre Vertrauensleute ins Parlament schicken und dort gleich den Junkern ihre Menschenrechte fordern lassen durften. Das Parlamentiren gestattete die Reichsregierung den Arbeitervertretern jedoch nur solange, als sie, die Regierung, gleich einer fürsorglichen Mutter, immer noch hoffte, ihre Pflegebefohlenen würden die „Angelassenheiten der tollen Jugend und deren Uebermuth" bald anstecken. Als aber der ungerathene Sohn Socialismus immer derber und frecher wurde und zuweilen gar den kindlichen Gehorsam verweigerte, da beschlossen die beiden Curatoren, Reichstag und Bundesrath, den ungezogenen Jungen aus dem Vaterhause zu jagen und seine Verführer ins Arbeitshaus zu stecken. Nach zwölf langen Jahren durften diejenigen, die während dieser Zeit den Beweis dauernder Besserung erbrachten, wieder in die deutsche Kinderstube zurückkehren, während die Unverbesserlichen dem Genusse des deutschen Paradieses ferngehalten wurden.

Auf die Führer der socialdemokratischen Partei wirkte diese Züchtigung durch das Ausnahmegesetz vortrefflich. Ihre geheimen Jugendsünden, als da waren: Geheimbündelei, Schmuggel verbotener Broschüren, Kampf gegen die Gottes- und Staatspest etc., hat man ihnen längst verziehen und man erlaubte den rothen Generalstäblern sogar, dass sie nunmehr 60 Mann hoch im Deutschen-Reichspossen-Ensemble — einer nach dem anderen — debutiren und sich von drei Millionen zur politischen Harmlosigkeit degenerirten Zuhörern applaudiren lassen. Ja, man bildet sich sogar innerhalb der rothen Priesterschaft ein, dass 60,000,000 Deutsche auf die Evangelisten und Hohenpriester, auf die Kirchenväter und Parteipäpste hören. Oder sollte ich mich am Ende geirrt haben. Sollte die deutsche Staatsregierung nicht doch vor den „Unthaten" der Socialdemokratie erzittern? Das ist kaum anzunehmen, denn in vielen Beziehungen ist diese „Socialdemokratie" unter das politische Niveau der bürgerlichen Demokratie gesunken, was viel sagt.

Keine Phrasen will ich schreiben, sondern einfach Thatsachen registriren, Keinem meine Meinung suggeriren, sondern den Leser selbst ein Urtheil sich bilden lassen.

In Stuttgart streikten vor einigen Jahren die Trambahner um Erzielung eines höheren Lohnes. Der socialdemokratische Reichs- und Landtags-Abgeordnete, Vorstand des Holzarbeiterverbandes und Gemeinderathsmitglied Keil, stimmte am im Magistrat, dafür, dass man den Schutzleuten, die man gegen die Demonstranten losliess, eine Gratification von M. 3000 gewähre, weil sie

Gemeinderathes angehörte, [illegible]
Arbeiter rebellisch werden, und der [illegible]
Köpfen bei schleunigster Arbeitszeit [illegible] bewogen hatte, dann werden sie die [illegible] kaum Ueberstunden bezahlen!!

Die Abenteurer Gesinnung — natürlich [illegible] ist ersterwähnt — hat bei der Gehart seines [illegible] Soldaten, sondern fandalisirten am Ueberfalltage der Pfahlstrasse. Der Letztere war [illegible] tuveller als der Proles; er überwegerte [illegible]
Ruhe, doch gewährte er dem socialdemokratischen
Soldatenzähler wegen dieses [illegible] dienstes um den Heeresetat ein Geldgeschenk — eine Prämie!

Der socialdemokratische württembergische Landtags-Abgeordnete Blumhardt stiftete der katholischen Kirche ein Messgewand, Hausaltar und Weihwasserbecken, da ja bekanntlich „Religion Privatsache ist".

Bei der Einweihung des Berliner Domes brachten socialdemokratische, organisirte Massen auf Wilhelm II. ein donnerndes Hoch aus. Das war der Dank der „Elenden", die nöthigenfalls auf ihre Väter und Brüder nach Commando schiessen werden!

Der Führer des deutschen Proletariats, Bebel, erklärte kürzlich officiell im Reichstage, allenfalls nehme er noch selbst die Büchse auf seinen Buckel, um sein Vaterland gegen feindliche Angriffe zu vertheidigen! Einfach pöbelhaft! August! Denkst du noch an die Zeit deiner Verfolgung, an die Gefängnisse?

Der verstorbene socialdemokratische Reichstagsabgeordnete Emil Rosenow gab ein aufklärendes Werk — „Wider die Pfaffenherrschaft" — heraus. Das Blatt des Herrn Georg Ritter von Vollmar, die sociald. „Münchener Post", warnte vor Ankauf dieses Werkes und schrieb unter anderem: „Der Socialismus bekämpft die Dummheit, aber nimmermehr den Glauben! Christenthum und Socialismus schliessen sich nicht aus." Ferner: Rosenow hätte keine Spur von der Bedeutung der Kirche im Mittelalter gehabt. Jeder katholische Arbeiter wisse mehr von den Culthandlungen und von dem Geiste seiner Kirche, als er, Rosenow, der socialdemokratische Reichstagsabgeordnete!! Die Kirche habe ihre grosse Zeit gehabt und immerhin der Menschheit ihre grossen Dienste geleistet! Nun wird man ja auch begreifen, dass die verpfaffte königl. bayer. Socialdemokratie in den Jahren 1899 und 1905 bei den Landtagswahlen Bündnisse mit den grössten Volksbetrügern, den römischen Pfaffen, vulgo Centrum, abschloss.

Beim Parteifeste der Münchener Socialdemokratie konnte man sich für zehn Pfennige die Bildnisse .... Wilhelm II. nebst Gattin und des des bayerischen Prinzregenten als Preis herausschiessen!

In ihrem Wahlenfruf sagte die „Münchener Post", die Arbeiter sollten sich das Wahlrecht nicht entgehen lassen; sie sollten lieber Hunger leiden, um es kaufen zu können! Damit nämlich die Herren Abgeordneten für ihr Gewäsche pro Tag auf Staatsunkosten 10 Mark Diäten bekommen; das allerdings verschweigen sie ehrlich. In Sachsen haben die Arbeiter erst auch gehungert, und dann liessen sie sich das Wahl-„recht"! mit Gewehr bei Fuss, ohne auch nur im geringsten aufzumucken, ruhig nehmen! Was man aber in Sachsen, dem rothen Königreich, kann, das konnte man auch seinerseit im Reiche und wird man, wenn man es für nöthig erachtet, auch anderwärts können. In Bayern scheint das ja noch nicht geplant zu sein, denn vorerst fühlen sich die k.-b. Genossen bei den von Ministern gegebenen Weingelagen noch recht wohl und munter und auch dankbar, dass [illegible]
Landtage sind die unentwegten Rothen für die Gehaltserhöhung der Criminalschutzleute eingetreten, und diese Sorte Polizisten jagte kurze Zeit hernach Arbeiter auf der Strasse gewaltsam auseinander. Dass die Schutzleute gegen Arrestanten zum Theil recht brutal sein können, hat vielleicht schon mancher brave Genosse am eigenen Leib erfahren. Und als der spanische Königsengel vor einigen Monaten in München war, wurden sogar eingesperrte Parteigenossen polizeilich überwacht und belästigt! (Schluss folgt.)

MOTHER EARTH

THERE was a time when men imagined the Earth as the center of the universe. The stars, large and small, they believed were created merely for their delectation. It was their vain conception that a supreme being, weary of solitude, had manufactured a giant toy and put them into possession of it.

When, however, the human mind was illumined by the torch-light of science, it came to understand that the Earth was but one of a myriad of stars floating in infinite space, a mere speck of dust.

Man issued from the womb of Mother Earth, but he knew it not, nor recognized her, to whom he owed his life. In his egotism he sought an explanation of himself in the infinite, and out of his efforts there arose the dreary doctrine that he was not related to the Earth, that she was but a temporary resting place for his scornful feet and that she held nothing for him but temptation to degrade himself. Interpreters and prophets of the infinite sprang into being, creating the "Great Beyond" and proclaiming Heaven and Hell, between which stood the poor, trembling human being, tormented by that priest-born monster, Conscience.

In this frightful scheme, gods and devils waged eternal war against each other with wretched man as the prize of victory; and the priest, self-constituted interpreter of the will of the gods, stood in front of the only refuge from harm and demanded as the price of entrance that ignorance, that asceticism, that self-abnegation which could but end in the complete subjugation of man to superstition. He was taught that Heaven, the refuge, was the very antithesis of Earth, which was the source of sin. To gain for himself a seat in Heaven, man devastated the Earth. Yet she renewed herself, the good mother, and came again each Spring, radiant with youthful beauty, beckoning her children to come to her bosom and partake of her bounty. But ever the air grew thick with mephitic darkness, ever a hollow voice was heard calling: "Touch not the beautiful form of the sorceress; she leads to sin!"

But if the priests decried the Earth, there were others who found in it a source of power and who took possession of it. Then it happened that the autocrats at the gates of Heaven joined forces with the powers that had taken possession of the Earth; and humanity began its aimless, monotonous march. But the good mother sees the bleeding feet of her children, she hears their moans, and she is ever calling to them that she is theirs.

To the contemporaries of George Washington, Thomas Paine and Thomas Jefferson, America appeared vast, boundless, full of promise. Mother Earth, with the sources of vast wealth hidden within the folds of her ample bosom, extended her inviting and hospitable arms to all those who came to her from arbitrary and despotic lands—Mother Earth ready to give herself alike to all her children. But soon she was seized by the few, stripped of her freedom, fenced in, a prey to those who were endowed with cunning and unscrupulous shrewdness. They, who had fought for independence from the British yoke, soon became dependent among themselves; dependent on possessions, on wealth, on power. Liberty escaped into the wilderness, and the old battle between the patrician and the plebeian broke out in the new world, with greater bitterness and vehemence. A period of but a hundred years had sufficed to turn a great republic, once gloriously established, into an arbitrary state which subdued a vast number of its people into material and intellectual slavery, while enabling the privileged few to monopolize every material and mental resource.

During the last few years, American journalists have had much to say about the terrible conditions in Russia and the supremacy of the Russian censor. Have they forgotten the censor here? a censor far more powerful than him of Russia. Have they forgotten that every line they write is dictated by the political color of the paper they write for; by the advertising firms; by the money power; by the power of respectability; by Comstock? Have they forgotten that the literary taste and critical judgment of the mass of the people have been successfully moulded to suit the will of these dictators, and to serve as a good business basis for shrewd literary speculators? The number of Rip Van Winkles in life, science, morality, art, and literature is very large. Innumerable ghosts, such as Ibsen saw when he analyzed the moral and social conditions of our life, still keep the majority of the human race in awe.

MOTHER EARTH will endeavor to attract and appeal to all those who oppose encroachment on public and individual life. It will appeal to those who strive for something higher, weary of the commonplace; to those who feel that stagnation is a deadweight on the firm and elastic step of progress; to those who breathe freely only in limitless space; to those who long for the tender shade of a new dawn for a humanity free from the dread of want, the dread of starvation in the face of mountains of riches. The Earth free for the free individual!

The Song of the Storm-Finch*

By MAXIM GORKY

THE strong wind is gathering the storm-clouds together
Above the gray plain of the ocean so wide.
The storm-finch, the bird that resembles dark lightning,
Between clouds and ocean is soaring in pride.

Now skimming the waves with his wings, and now shooting
Up, arrow-like, into the dark clouds on high,
The storm-finch is clamoring loudly and shrilly;
The clouds can hear joy in the bird's fearless cry.

In that cry is the yearning, the thirst for the tempest,
And anger's hot might in its wild notes is heard;
The keen fire of passion, the faith in sure triumph—
All these the clouds hear in the voice of the bird. . . . .

* From "Songs of Russia," rendered into English by ALICE STONE BLACKWELL

The storm-wind is howling, the thunder is roaring;
With flame blue and lambent the cloud-masses glow
O'er the fathomless ocean; it catches the lightnings,
And quenches them deep in its whirlpool below.

Like serpents of fire in the dark ocean writhing,
The lightnings reflected there quiver and shake
As into the blackness they vanish forever.
The tempest! Now quickly the tempest will break!

The storm-finch soars fearless and proud 'mid the lightnings,
Above the wild waves that the roaring winds fret;
And what is the prophet of victory saying?
"Oh, let the storm burst! Fiercer yet—fiercer yet!"

To the Readers

The name "Open Road" had to be abandoned, owing to the existence of a magazine by that name.

Observations and Comments

The importance of written history for the people can easily be compared with the importance of a diary for the individual. It furnishes data for recollections, points of comparison between the Past and Present. But as most diaries and auto-biographies show a lack of straight-forward, big, simple, sincere self-analyses, so does history seldom prove a representation of facts, of the truth, of reality.

The way history is written will depend altogether on whatever purpose the writers have in view, and what they hope to achieve thereby. It will altogether depend upon the sincerity or lack thereof, upon the broad or narrow horizon of the historian. That which power, they would break her proud neck with one stroke, but they cannot put the heads of a hundred million people on the block, they cannot deport eighty millions of Peasants to Siberia, nor can they order all the workingmen in the industrial districts shot. Were the working bees to be killed, the drones would perish of starvation—that is why the Czar of the Peace Treaty still suffers some of his people to live? — —

In Mayville, Wis., a transvaluation society has been formed, the purpose of which is, to bring about the transvaluation of all values in matters of love and the relations of the sexes. The members of this society are to contribute by word and deed towards the breaking of all barriers that prevent an ideal and healthy conception of love.

The president of this society, Emil Ruedebusch, known in this country through his work, "The Old and New Ideal," which, by the way, was confiscated upon the grounds of obscenity and the author put on trial. It is an undisputed fact that robust, graft-greedy Columbia abhors every free expression on love or marriage. Emil Ruedebusch, like many others who have dared to lift the veil of hypocrisy, was condemned to a heavy fine. A second work of the author, "Die Eigenen," was published in Germany.

His idea, that the relation of the sexes must be freed from the oppressing fetters of a lame morality that degrades every human emotion to the plane of utility and purpose, I heartily endorse. His method of achieving the ideal seems to me too full of red tape. However, I welcome every effort against the conspiracy of ignorance, hypocrisy and stupid prudery, against the simplest manifestation of nature.

The Tragedy of Woman's Emancipation

By Emma Goldman

I BEGIN my article with an admission: Regardless of all political and economic theories, treating of the fundamental differences between the various groups within the human race, regardless of class and race distinctions, regardless of all artificial boundary lines between woman's rights and man's rights, I hold that there is a point where these differentiations may meet and grow into one perfect whole.

With this I do not mean to propose a peace treaty. The general social antagonism which has taken hold of our entire public life to-day, brought about through the force of opposing and contradictory interests, will crumble to pieces when the reorganization of our social life, based upon the principles of economic justice, shall have become a reality.

Peace and harmony between the sexes and individuals does not necessarily depend on a superficial equalization of human beings; nor does it call for the elimination of individual traits or peculiarities. The problem that confronts us to-day, and which the nearest future is to solve, is how to be oneself, and yet in oneness with others, to feel deeply with all human beings and still retain one's own innate qualities. This seems to me the basis upon which the mass and the individual, the true democrat and the true individuality, man and woman can meet without antagonism and opposition. The motto should not be forgive one another; it should be, understand one another. The oft-quoted sentence of Mme. de Stael: "To understand everything means to forgive everything," has never particularly appealed to me; it has the odor of the confessional; to forgive one's fellow being conveys the idea of pharisaical superiority. To understand one's fellow being suffices. This admission partly represents the fundamental aspect of my views on the emancipation of woman and its effect upon the entire sex.

Emancipation should make it possible for her to be human in the truest sense. Everything within her that craves assertion and activity should reach its fullest expression; and all artificial barriers should be broken and the road towards greater freedom cleared of every trace of centuries of submission and slavery.

This was the original aim of the movement for woman's emancipation. But the results so far achieved have isolated woman and have robbed her of the fountain springs of that happiness which is so essential to her. Merely external emancipation has made of the modern woman an artificial being who reminds one of the products of French arboriculture with its arabesque trees and shrubs—pyramids, wheels and wreaths; anything except the forms which would be reached by the expression of their own inner qualities. Such artificially grown plants of the female sex are to be found in large numbers, especially in the so-called intellectual sphere of our life.

Liberty and equality for woman! What hopes and aspirations these words awakened when they were first uttered by some of the noblest and bravest souls of those days. The sun in all its light and glory was to rise upon a new world; in this world woman was to be free to direct her own destiny, an aim certainly worthy of the great enthusiasm, courage, perseverance and ceaseless effort of the tremendous host of pioneer men and women, who staked everything against a world of prejudice and ignorance.

My hopes also move towards that goal, but I insist that the emancipation of woman, as interpreted and practically applied to-day, has failed to reach that great end. Now, woman is confronted with the necessity of emancipating herself from emancipation, if she really desires to be free. This may sound paradoxical, but is, nevertheless, only too true.

What has she achieved through her emancipation? Equal suffrage in a few states. Has that purified our political life, as many well-meaning advocates have predicted? Certainly not. Incidentally it is really time that persons with plain, sound judgment should cease to talk about corruption in politics in a boarding-school tone. Corruption of politics has nothing to do with the morals or the laxity of morals of various political personalities. Its cause is altogether a material one. Politics is the reflex of the business and industrial world, the mottoes of which are: "to take is more blessed than to give"; "buy cheap and sell dear"; "one soiled hand washes the other." There is no hope that even woman, with her right to vote, will ever purify politics.

Emancipation has brought woman economic equality with man; that is, she can choose her own profession and trade, but as her past and present physical training have not equipped her with the necessary strength to compete with man, she is often compelled to exhaust all her energy, use up her vitality and strain every nerve in order to reach the market value. Very few ever succeed, for it is a fact that women doctors, lawyers, architects and engineers are neither met with the same confidence, nor do they receive the same remuneration. And those that do reach that enticing equality generally do so at the expense of their physical and psychical well-being. As to the great mass of working girls and women, how much independence is gained if the narrowness and lack of freedom of the home is exchanged for the narrowness and lack of freedom of the factory, sweat-shop, department store, or office? In addition is the burden which is laid on many women of looking after a "home, sweet home"—cold, dreary, disorderly, uninviting—after a day's hard work. Glorious independence! No wonder that hundreds of girls are so willing to accept the first offer of marriage, sick and tired of their independence behind the counter, or at the sewing or typewriting machine. They are just as ready to marry as girls of middle class people who long to throw off the yoke of parental dependence. A so-called independence which leads only to earning the merest subsistence is not so enticing, not so ideal that one can expect woman to sacrifice everything for it. Our highly praised independence is, after all, but a slow process of dulling and stifling woman's nature, her love instinct and her mother instinct.

Nevertheless, the position of the working girl is far more natural and human than that of her seemingly more fortunate sister in the more cultured professional walk of life. Teachers, physicians, lawyers, engineers, etc., who have to make a dignified, straightened and proper appearance, while the inner life is growing empty and dead.

The narrowness of the existing conception of woman's independence and emancipation; the dread of love for a man who is not her social equal; the fear that love will rob her of her freedom and independence; the horror that love or the joy of motherhood will only hinder her in the full exercise of her profession—all these together make of the emancipated modern woman a compulsory vestal, before whom life, with its great clarifying sorrows and its deep, entrancing joys, rolls on without touching or gripping her soul.

Emancipation as understood by the majority of its adherents and exponents, is of too narrow a scope to permit the boundless joy and ecstasy contained in the deep emotion of the true woman, sweetheart, mother, in freedom.

The tragic fate of the self-supporting or economically free woman does not consist of too many, but of too few experiences. True, she surpasses her sister of past generations in knowledge of the world and human nature; and it is because of that that she feels deeply the lack of life's essence, which alone can enrich the human soul and without which the majority of women have become mere professional automatons.

That such a state of affairs was bound to come was foreseen by those who realized that in the domain of ethics, there still remained many decaying ruins of the time of the undisputed superiority of man; ruins that are still considered useful. And, which is more important, a goodly number of the emancipated are unable to get along without them. Every movement that aims at the destruction of existing institutions and the replacement thereof with such as are more advanced, more perfect, has followers, who in theory stand for the most extreme radical ideas, and who, nevertheless, in their every-day practice, are like the next best Philistine, feigning respectability and clamoring for the good opinion of their opponents. There are, for example, Socialists, and even Anarchists, who stand for the idea that property is robbery, yet who will grow indignant if anyone owe them the value of a half-dozen pins.

The same Philistine can be found in the movement for woman's emancipation. Yellow journalists and milk and water literateurs have painted pictures of the emancipated woman that make the hair of the good citizen and his dull companion stand up on end. Every member of the women's rights movement was pictured as a George Sand in her absolute disregard of morality. Nothing was sacred to her. She had no respect for the ideal relation between man and woman. In short, emancipation stood only for a reckless life of lust and sin; regardless of society, religion and morality. The exponents of woman's rights were highly indignant at such a misrepresentation, and, lacking in humor, they exerted all their energy to prove that they were not at all as bad as they were painted, but the very reverse. Of course, as long as woman was the slave of man, she could not be good and pure, but now that she was free and independent she would prove how good she could be and how her influence would have a purifying effect on all institutions in society. True, the movement for woman's rights has broken many old fetters, but it has also established new ones. The great movement of true emancipation has not met with a great race of women, who could look liberty in the face. Their narrow puritanical vision banished man as a disturber and doubtful character out of their emotional life. Man was not to be tolerated at any price, except perhaps as the father of a child, since a child could not very well come to life without a father. Fortunately, the most rigid puritanism never will be strong enough to kill the innate craving for motherhood. But woman's freedom is closely allied to man's freedom, and many of my so-called emancipated sisters seem to overlook the fact that a child born in freedom needs the love and devotion of each human being about him, man as well as woman. Unfortunately, it is this narrow conception of human relations that has brought about a great tragedy in the lives of the modern man and woman.

About fifteen years ago appeared a work from the pen of the brilliant Norwegian writer, Laura Marholm, called "Woman, a Character Study." She was one of the first to call attention to the emptiness and narrowness of the existing conception of woman's emancipation and its tragic effect upon the inner life of woman. In her work she speaks of the fate of several gifted women of international fame: The genius, Eleanora Duse; the great mathematician and writer, Sanja Kovalevskaja; the artist and poet nature, Marie Bashkirzeff, who died so young. Through each description of the lives of these women of such extraordinary mentality, runs a marked trail of unsatisfied craving for a full, rounded, complete and beautiful life, and the unrest and loneliness resulting from the lack of it. Through these masterly psychological sketches, one cannot help but see that the higher the mental development of woman, the less possible it is for her to meet a congenial mate, who will see in her, not only sex, but also the human being, the friend, comrade and strong individuality, who cannot and ought not lose a single trait of her character.

The average man with his self-sufficiency, his ridiculously superior airs of patronage towards the female sex, is an impossibility for woman, as depicted in the "Character Study" by Laura Marholm. Equally impossible for her is the man who can see in her nothing more than her mentality and genius, and who fails to awaken her woman nature.

A rich intellect and a fine soul are usually considered necessary attributes of a deep and beautiful personality. In the case of the modern woman, these attributes serve as a hindrance to the complete assertion of her being. For over a hundred years, the old form of marriage, based on the Bible, "till death us do part" has been denounced as an institution that stands for the sovereignty of the man over the woman, of her complete submission to his whims and commands and the absolute dependence upon his name and support. Time and again it has been conclusively proven that the old matrimonial relation restricted woman to the function of man's servant and the bearer of his children. And yet we find many emancipated women who prefer marriage with all its deficiencies to the narrowness of an unmarried life; narrow and unendurable because of the chains of moral and social prejudice that cramp and bind her nature.

The cause for such inconsistency on the part of many advanced women is to be found in the fact that they never truly understood the meaning of emancipation. They thought that all that was needed was independence from external tyrannies; the internal tyrants, far more harmful to life and growth, such as ethical and social conventions, were left to take care of themselves; and they have taken care of themselves. They seem to get along beautifully in the heads and hearts of the most active exponents of woman's emancipation, as in the heads and hearts of our grandmothers.

These internal tyrants, whether they be in the form of public opinion or what will mother say, or brother, father, aunt or relative of any sort; what will Mrs. Grundy, Mr. Comstock, the employer, the Board of Education say? All these busybodies, moral detectives, jailers of the human spirit, what will they say? Until woman has learned to defy them all, to stand firmly on her own ground and to insist upon her own unrestricted freedom, to listen to the voice of her nature, whether it call for life's greatest treasure, love for a man, or her most glorious privilege, the right to give birth to a child, she cannot call herself emancipated. How many emancipated women are brave enough to acknowledge that the voice of love is calling, wildly beating against their breasts demanding to be heard, to be satisfied.

The French novelist, Jean Reibrach, in one of his novels, "New Beauty," attempts to picture the ideal, beautiful, emancipated woman. This ideal is embodied in a young girl, a physician. She talks very clearly and wisely of how to feed infants, she is kind and administers medicines free to poor mothers. She converses with a young man of her acquaintance about the sanitary conditions of the future and how various bacilli and germs shall be exterminated by the use of stone walls and floors, and the doing away of rugs and hangings. She is, of course, very plainly and practically dressed, mostly in black. The young man, who, at their first meeting was overawed by the wisdom of his emancipated friend, gradually learns to understand her, and recognizes one fine day that he loves her. They are young and she is kind and beautiful, and though always in rigid attire, her appearance is softened by spotlessly clean white collar and cuffs. One would expect that he would tell her of his love, but he is not one to commit romantic absurdities. Poetry and the enthusiasm of love cover their blushing faces before the pure beauty of the lady. He silences the voice of his nature and remains correct. She, too, is always exact, always rational, always well behaved. I fear if they had formed a union, the young man would have risked freezing to death. I must confess that I can see nothing beautiful in this new beauty, who is as cold as the stone walls and floors she dreams of. Rather would I have the love songs of romantic ages, rather Don Juan and Madame Venus, rather an elopement by ladder and rope on a moonlight night, followed by a father's curse, mother's moans, and the moral comments of neighbors, than correctness and propriety measured by yardsticks. If love does not know how to give and take without restriction it is not love, but a transaction that never fails to lay stress on a plus and a minus.

The greatest shortcoming of the emancipation of the present day lies in its artificial stiffness and its narrow respectabilities which produce an emptiness in woman's soul that will not let her drink from the fountain of life. I once remarked that there seemed to be a deeper relationship between the old-fashioned mother and hostess, ever on the alert for the happiness of her little ones and the comfort of those she loved and the truly new woman, than between the latter and her average emancipated sister. The disciples of emancipation pure and simple declared me heathen, merely fit for the stake. Their blind zeal did not let them see that my comparison between the old and the new was merely to prove that a goodly number of our grandmothers had more blood in their veins, far more humor and wit, and certainly a greater amount of naturalness, kind-heartedness and simplicity than the majority of our emancipated professional women who fill our colleges, halls of learning, and various offices. This does not mean a wish to return to the past, nor does it condemn woman to her old sphere, the kitchen and the nursery.

Salvation lies in an energetic march onward towards a brighter and clearer future. We are in need of unhampered growth out of old traditions and habits. The movement for woman's emancipation has so far made but the first step in that direction. It is to be hoped that it will gather strength to make another. The right to vote, equal civil rights, are all very good demands, but true emancipation begins neither at the polls nor in courts. It begins in woman's soul. History tells us that every oppressed class gained its true liberation from its masters through its own efforts. It is necessary that woman learn that lesson, that she realize that her freedom will reach as far as her power to achieve her freedom reaches. It is therefore far more important for her to begin with her inner regeneration, to cut loose from the weight of prejudices, traditions, and customs. The demand for various equal rights in every vocation in life is just and fair, but, after all, the most vital right is the right to love and be loved. Indeed if the partial emancipation is to become a complete and true emancipation of woman, it will have to do away with the ridiculous notion that to be loved, to be sweetheart and mother, is synonomous with being slave or subordinate. It will have to do away with the absurd notion of the dualism of the sexes, or that man and woman represent two antagonistic worlds.

Pettiness separates, breadth unites. Let us be broad and big. Let us not overlook vital things, because of the bulk of trifles confronting us. A true conception of the relation of the sexes will not admit of conqueror and conquered; it knows of but one great thing: to give of one's self boundlessly in order to find oneself richer, deeper, better. That alone can fill the emptiness and replace the tragedy of woman's emancipation with joy, limitless joy.

TRY LOVE

By Grace Potter

IN the human heart it lies. The key to happiness. Men call the key love. In the sweet time of youth, every man and every maid knows where lies the key that will unlock happiness. Sometimes, they, laughing, hold the key in eager, willing hands and will not put it in the door for very bliss and waiting. Just outside they laugh and play and blow wild kisses to the world. The whole world of men and women, who in their youth found happiness in just that way, is gathered round to see it found again.

When at last the man and maid unlock the door and go in joy to find their happiness, the men and women who have been watching them bury their faces in their hands and weep. Why do they weep? Because they are thinking that soon other doors in life will be met by this man and maid and that there will be no keys to unlock them. They, themselves, could find no key.

They never thought of trying the key of love in all the doors of life. Long and wearily, eyes searching wide, hands eagerly groping, they have spent their time trying to find other keys. They have looked for and found knowledge. And tried that. Looked for and found fame. And tried that. Looked for and found wealth. And tried that. Looked for and found many, many other keys. And tried them all. And when at last they have lain down on their deathbeds, they have turned gray hopeless faces to the world and died saying, "We could not find the right key."

Some few, some very few, there are, who try the key of love in all life's doors. Radiant, they turn to the men and women about and cry, "Try love! It unlocks all other doors as surely as it does the first in life. Try love!"

And though their fellow beings see that these are the only ones in all the world who find happiness, they turn doubting from them. "It cannot be," they say, "that the key we used in youth should be used again in all the other doors of life." And so they keep on trying the keys that every disappointed, dying man calls out in warning voice will fail.

Only a few there are who learn—a very few—that love unlocks all other doors in life as surely as it does the first. Try love!

Japan.—A new civilization. The land of a new culture! was the cry of every penny-a-liner at the time when she began to display her battleships, cannon, and her accomplished method of drilling her soldiers. They were mocking themselves and did not know how. They talk of culture and civilization and their criterion thereof is the development of the technique of murder. Again, Japan a modern state. She can take her place in the ranks of other civilized countries. Rejoice! and then learn that victorious Japan is on the threshold of a famine. Nearly a million people, it is laconically reported, are in danger of dying of starvation. Surely, no one will possibly doubt now that Japan is a civilized country.

Many radicals entertain the queer notion that they cannot arrange their own lives, according to their own ideas, but that they have to adapt themselves to the conditions they hate, and which they fight in theory with fire and sword.

Anything rather than arouse too much public condemnation! The lives they lead are dependent upon the opinion of the Philistines. They are revolutionists in theory, reactionists in practice.

The words of Louis XIV, "I am the State," have been taken up as a motto by the American policeman. One of the New York papers contains the following account:

"In discharging some seventy prisoners in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday morning, the Magistrate said to the police in charge of the cases: 'I am amazed that you men should bring these prisoners before me without a shred of evidence on which they can be held.'"

Such is the blessing of this republic. We are not confronted by one czar of the size of an elephant, but by a hundred thousand czars, as small as mosquitoes, but equally disagreeable and annoying.

EMMA GOLDMAN,

Box 217, Madison Square Station.

THE CHILD AND ITS ENEMIES.

By EMMA GOLDMAN.

Is the child to be considered as an individuality, or as an object to be moulded according to the whims and fancies of those about it? This seems to me to be the most important question to be answered by parents and educators. And whether the child is to grow from within, whether all that craves expression will be permitted to come forth toward the light of day; or whether it is to be kneaded like dough through external forces, depends upon the proper answer to this vital question.

The longing of the best and noblest of our times makes for the strongest individualities. Every sensitive being abhors the idea of being treated as a mere machine or as a mere parrot of conventionality and respectability, the human being craves recognition of his kind.

It must be borne in mind that it is through the channel of the child that the development of the mature man must go, and that the present ideas of the educating or training of the latter in the school and the family—even the family of the liberal or radical—are such as to stifle the natural growth of the child.

Every institution of our day, the family, the State, our moral codes, sees in every strong, beautiful, uncompromising personality a deadly enemy; therefore every effort is being made to cramp human emotion and originality of thought in the individual into a straight-jacket from its earliest infancy; or to shape every human being according to one pattern; not into a well-rounded individuality, but into a patient work slave, professional automatin, tax-paying citizen, or righteous moralist. If one, nevertheless, meets with real spontaneity (which, by the way, is a rare treat,) it is not due to our method of rearing or educating the child: the personality often asserts itself, regardless of official and family barriers. Such a discovery should be celebrated as an unusual event, since the obstacles placed in the way of growth and development of character are so numerous that it must be considered a miracle if it retains its strength and beauty and survives the various attempts at crippling that which is most essential to it.

Indeed, he who has freed himself from the fetters of the thoughtlessness and stupidity of the commonplace; he who can stand without moral crutches, without the approval of public opinion—private laziness, Friedrich Nietzsche called it—may well intone a high and voluminous song of independence and freedom; he has gained the right to it through fierce and fiery battles. These battles already begin at the most delicate age.

The child shows its individual tendencies in its plays, in its questions, in its association with people and things. But it has to struggle with everlasting external interference in its world of thought and emotion. It must not express itself in harmony with its nature, with its growing personality. It must become a thing, an object. Its questions are met with narrow, conventional, ridiculous replies, mostly based on falsehoods; and, when, with large, wondering, innocent eyes, it wishes to behold the wonders of the world, those about it quickly lock the windows and doors, and keep the delicate human plant in a hothouse atmosphere, where it can neither breathe nor grow freely.

Zola, in his novel "Fecundity," maintains that large sections of people have declared death to the child, have conspired against the birth of the child,—a very horrible picture indeed, yet the conspiracy entered into by civilization against the growth and making of character seems to me far more terrible and disastrous, because of the slow and gradual destruction of its latent qualities and traits and the stupefying and crippling effect thereof upon its social well-being.

Since every effort in our educational life seems to be directed toward making of the child a being foreign to itself, it must of necessity produce individuals foreign to one another, and in everlasting antagonism with each other.

The ideal of the average pedagogist is not a complete, well-rounded, original being; rather does he seek that the result of his art of pedagogy shall be automatons of flesh and blood, to best fit into the treadmill of society and the emptiness and dulness of our lives. Every home, school, college and university stands for dry, cold utilitarianism, overflooding the brain of the pupil with a tremendous amount of ideas, handed down from generations past. "Facts and data," as they are called, constitute a lot of information, well enough perhaps to maintain every form of authority and to create much awe for the importance of possession, but only a great handicap to a true understanding of the human soul and its place in the world.

Truths dead and forgotten long ago, conceptions of the world and its people, covered with mould, even during the times of our grandmothers, are being hammered into the heads of our young generation. Eternal change, thousandfold variations, continual innovation are the essence of life. Professional pedagogy knows nothing of it, the systems of education are being arranged into files, classified and numbered. They lack the strong fertile seed which, falling on rich soil, enables them to grow to great heights, they are worn and incapable of awakening spontaneity of character. Instructors and teachers, with dead souls, operate with dead values. Quantity is forced to take the place of quality. The consequences thereof are inevitable.

In whatever direction one turns, eagerly searching for human beings who do not measure ideas and emotions with the yardstick of expediency, one is confronted with the products, the herdlike drilling instead of the result of spontaneous and innate characteristics working themselves out in freedom.

> "No traces now I see
> Whatever of a spirit's agency.
> 'Tis drilling, nothing more."

These words of Faust fit our methods of pedagogy perfectly. Take, for instance, the way history is being taught in our schools. See how the events of the world become like a cheap puppet show, where a few wire-pullers are supposed to have directed the course of development of the entire human race.

And the history of our own nation! Was it not chosen by Providence to become the leading nation on earth? And does it not tower mountain high over other nations? Is it not the gem of the ocean? Is it not incomparably virtuous, ideal and brave? The result of such ridiculous teaching is a dull, shallow patriotism, blind to its own limitations, with bull-like stubbornness, utterly incapable of judging of the capacities of other nations. This is the way the spirit of youth is emasculated, deadened through an over-estimation of one's own value. No wonder public opinion can be so easily manufactured.

"Predigested food" should be inscribed over every hall of learning as a warning to all who do not wish to lose their own personalities and their original sense of judgment, who, instead, would be content with a large amount of empty and shallow shells. This may suffice as a recognition of the manifold hindrances placed in the way of an independent mental development of the child.

Equally numerous, and not less important, are the difficulties that confront the emotional life of the young. Must not one suppose that parents should be united to children by the most tender and delicate chords? One should suppose it; yet, sad as it may be, it is, nevertheless, true, that parents are the first to destroy the inner riches of their children.

The Scriptures tell us that God created Man in His own image, which has by no means proven a success. Parents follow the bad example of their heavenly master; they use every effort to shape and mould the child according to their image. They tenaciously cling to the idea that the child is merely part of themselves—an idea as false as it is injurious, and which only increases the misunderstanding of the soul of the child, of the necessary consequences of enslavement and subordination thereof.

As soon as the first rays of consciousness illuminate the mind and heart of the child, it instinctively begins to compare its own personality with the personality of those about it. How many hard and cold stone cliffs meet its large wondering gaze? Soon enough it is confronted with the painful reality that it is here only to serve as inanimate matter for parents and guardians, whose authority alone gives it shape and form.

The terrible struggle of the thinking man and woman against political, social and moral conventions owes its origin to the family, where the child is ever compelled to battle against the internal and external use of force. The categorical imperatives: You shall! you must! this is right! that is wrong! this is true! that is false! shower like a violent rain upon the unsophisticated head of the young being and impress upon its sensibilities that it has to bow before the long established and hard notions of thoughts and emotions. Yet the latent qualities and instincts seek to assert their own peculiar methods of seeking the foundation of things, of distinguishing between what is commonly called wrong, true or false. It is bent upon going its own way, since it is composed of the same nerves, muscles and blood, even as those who assume to direct its destiny. I fail to understand how parents hope that their children will ever grow up into independent, self-reliant spirits, when they strain every effort to abridge and curtail the various activities of their children, the plus in quality and character, which differentiates their offspring from themselves, and by the virtue of which they are eminently equipped carriers of new, invigorating ideas. A young delicate tree, that is being clipped and cut by the gardener in order to give it an artificial form, will never reach the majestic height and the beauty as when allowed to grow in nature and freedom.

When the child reaches adolescence, it meets, added to the home and school restrictions, with a vast amount of hard traditions of social morality. The cravings of love and sex are met with absolute ignorance by the majority of parents, who consider it as something indecent and improper, something disgraceful, almost criminal, to be suppressed and fought like some terrible disease. The love and tender feelings in the young plant are turned into vulgarity and coarseness through the stupidity of those surrounding it, so that everything fine and beautiful is either crushed altogether or hidden in the innermost depths, as a great sin, that dares not face the light.

What is more astonishing is the fact that parents will strip themselves of everything, will sacrifice everything for the physical well-being of their child, will wake nights and stand in fear and agony before some physical ailment of their beloved one; but will remain cold and indifferent, without the slightest understanding before the soul cravings and the yearnings of their child, neither hearing nor wishing to hear the loud knocking of the young spirit that demands recognition. On the contrary, they will stifle the beautiful voice of spring, of a new life of beauty and splendor of love; they will put the long lean finger of authority upon the tender throat and not allow vent to the silvery song of the individual growth, of the beauty of character, of the strength of love and human relation, which alone make life worth living.

And yet these parents imagine that they mean best for the child, and for aught I know, some really do; but their best means absolute death and decay to the bud in the making. After all, they are but imitating their own masters in State, commercial, social and moral affairs, by forcibly suppressing every independent attempt to analyze the ills of society and every sincere effort toward the abolition of these ills; never able to grasp the eternal truth that every method they employ serves as the greatest impetus to bring forth a greater longing for freedom and a deeper zeal to fight for it.

That compulsion is bound to awaken resistance, every parent and teacher ought to know. Great surprise is being expressed over the fact that the majority of children of radical parents are either altogether opposed to the ideas of the latter, many of them moving along the old antiquated paths, or that they are indifferent to the new thoughts and teachings of social regeneration. And yet there is nothing unusual in that. Radical parents, though emancipated from the belief of ownership in the human soul, still cling tenaciously to the notion that they own the child, and that they have the right to exercise their authority over it. So they set out to mould and form the child according to their own conception of what is right and wrong, forcing their ideas upon it with the same vehemence that the average Catholic parent uses. And, with the latter, they hold out the necessity before the young "to do as I tell you and not as I do." But the impressionable mind of the child realizes early enough that the lives of their parents are in contradiction to the ideas they represent; that, like the good Christian who fervently prays on Sunday, yet continues to break the Lord's commands the rest of the week, the radical parent arraigns God, priesthood, church, government, domestic authority, yet continues to adjust himself to the condition he abhors. Just so, the Freethought parent can proudly boast that his son of four will recognize the picture of Thomas Paine or Ingersoll, or that he knows that the idea of God is stupid. Or that the Social Democratic father can point to his little girl of six and say, "Who wrote the Capital, dearie?" "Karl Marx, pal" Or that the Anarchistic mother can make it known that her daughter's name is Louise Michel, Sophia Perovskaya, or that she can recite the revolutionary poems of Herwegh, Freiligrath, or Shelley, and that she will point out the faces of Spencer, Bakunin or Moses Harmon almost anywhere.

These are by no means exaggerations; they are sad facts that I have met with in my experience with radical parents. What are the results of such methods of biasing the mind? The following is the consequence, and not very infrequent, either. The child, being fed on one-sided, set and fixed ideas, soon grows weary of rehashing the beliefs of its parents, and it sets out in quest of new sensations, no matter how inferior and shallow the new experience may be, the human mind cannot endure sameness and monotony. So it happens that that boy or girl, over-fed on Thomas Paine, will land in the arms of the Church, or they will vote for imperialism only to escape the drag of economic determinism and scientific socialism, or that they open a shirt-waist factory and cling to their right of accumulating property, only to find relief from the old-fashioned communism of their father. Or that the girl will marry the next best man, provided he can make a living, only to run away from the everlasting talk on variety.

Such a condition of affairs may be very painful to the parents who wish their children to follow in their path, yet I look upon them as very refreshing and encouraging psychological forces. They are the greatest guarantee that the independent mind, at least, will always resist every external and foreign force exercised over the human heart and head.

Some will ask, what about weak natures, must they not be protected? Yes, but to be able to do that, it will be necessary to realize that education of children is not synonymous with herdlike drilling and training. If education should really mean anything at all, it must insist upon the free growth and development of the innate forces and tendencies of the child. In this way alone can we hope for the free individual and eventually also for a free community, which shall make interference and coercion of human growth impossible.

HOPE AND FEAR.*

(Translated from the Jewish of L. I. PERETZ.)

... My heart is with you.

My eye does not get weary looking at your flaming banner; my ear does not get tired listening to your powerful song ...

My heart is with you; man's hunger must be appeased, and he must have light; he must be free, and he must be his own master, master over himself and his work.

And when you snap at the fist which is trying to strangle you, your voice, and your ardent protest, preventing you from being heard—I rejoice, praying that your teeth may be sharpened. And when you are marching against Sodom and Gomorrah, to tear down the old, my soul is with you, and the certainty that you must triumph fills and warms my heart and intoxicates me like old wine ...

And yet....

And yet you frighten me.

I am afraid of the bridled who conquer, for they are apt to become the oppressors, and every oppressor transgresses against the human soul ....

Do you not talk among yourselves of how humanity is to march, like an army in line, and you are going to sound for it the march on the road?

And yet humanity is not an army.

The strong are going forward, the magnanimous feel more deeply, the proud rise higher, and yet will you not lay down the cedar in order that it may not outgrow the grass?

Or will you not spread your wings over mediocrity, or will you not shield indifference, and protect the gray and uniformly fleeced herd?

* This sketch the writer had addressed to Jewish Social Democrats.

You frighten me.

As conquerors you might become the bureaucracy: to dole out to everybody his morsel, as is the usage in the poor-house; to arrange work for everybody as it is done in the galleys. And you will thus crush the creator of new worlds—the free human will, and fill up with earth the purest spring of human happiness—human initiative, the power which braves one against thousands, against peoples, and against generations? And you will systematize life and bid it to remain on the level of the crowd.

And will you not be occupied with regulations: registrating, recording, estimating—or will you not prescribe how fast and how often the human pulse must beat, how far the human eye may look ahead, how much the ear may perceive, and what kinds of dreams the languishing heart may entertain?

With joy in my heart I look at you when you tear down the gates of Sodom, but my heart trembles at the same time, fearing that you might erect on its ruins new ones—more chilling and darker ones.

There will be no houses without windows; but fog will envelop the souls ....

There will be no empty stomachs, but souls will starve. No ear will hear cries of woe, but the eagle—the human intellect—will stand at the trough with clipped wings together with the cow and the ox.

And justice, which has accompanied you on the thorny and bloody path to victory, will forsake you, and you will not be aware of it, for conquerors and tyrants are always blind. You will conquer and dominate. And you will plunge into injustice, and you will not feel the quagmire under your feet.... Every tyrant thinks he stands on firm ground so long as he has not been vanquished.

And you will build prisons for those who dare to stretch out their hands, pointing to the abyss into which

In a report of the Russian government, it is stated that the conduct of the soldiers in the struggles of the streets was such, that in no instance did they transgress the limit which is prescribed to them in their oath as soldiers. This is true. The soldier's oath prescribes murder and cruelty as their patriotic duty.

If government, were it even an ideal Revolutionary government, creates no new force and is of no use whatever in the work of demolition which we have to accomplish, still less can we count on it for the work of reorganization which must follow that of demolition. The economic change which will result from the Social Revolution will be so immense and so profound, it must so change all the relations based to-day on property and exchange, that it is impossible for one or any individual to elaborate the different social forms, which must spring up in the society of the future. This elaboration of new social forms can only be made by the collective work of the masses. To satisfy the immense variety of conditions and needs which will spring up as soon as private property shall be abolished, it is necessary to have the collective suppleness of mind of the whole people. Any authority external to it will only be an obstacle, only a trammel on the organic labor which must be accomplished, and beside that a source of discord and hatred.

A SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY. — POLICE PROTECTION.

CHICAGO'S pride are the stockyards, the Standard Oil University, and Miss Jane Addams. It is, therefore, perfectly natural that the sensibility of such a city would suffer as soon as it became known that an obscure person, by the common name of E. G. Smith, was none other than the awful Emma Goldman, and that she had not even presented herself to Mayor Dunne, the platonic lover of Municipal Ownership. However, not much harm came of it.

The Chicago newspapers, who cherish the truth like a costly jewel, made the discovery that the shrewd Miss Smith compromised a number of Chicago's aristocracy and excellencies, among others also Baron von Schlippenbach, consul of the Russian Empire. We consider it our duty to defend this gentleman against such an awful accusation. Miss Smith never visited the house of the Baron, nor did she attend any of his banquets. We know her well and feel confident that she never would put her foot on the threshold of a representative of a government that crushes every free breath, every free word; that sends her very best and noblest sons and daughters to prison or the gallows; that has the children of the soil, the peasants, publicly flogged; and that is responsible for the barbarous slaughter of thousands of Jews.

Miss Jane Addams, too, is quite safe from Miss Smith. True, she invited her to be present at a reception, but, knowing the weak knees of the soup kitchen philanthropy from past experience, Miss Smith called her up on the 'phone and told her that E. G. S. was the dreaded Emma Goldman. It must have been quite a shock to the lady; after all, one cannot afford to hurt the sensibilities of society, so long as one has political and public aspirations. Miss E. G. Smith, being a strong believer in the prevention of cruelty, preferred to leave the purity of the Hull House untouched. After her return to New York, E. G. Smith sent Smith about its business, and started on a lecture tour in her own right, as Emma Goldman.

applying for protection from the city authorities? It does not behoove us, who neither believe in their right to prohibit free assembly, nor to permit it, to appeal to them. If the authorities choose to do either, they merely prove their autocracy. Those who love freedom must understand that it is even more distasteful to speak under police protection than it is to suffer under their persecution. However, the meetings were very encouraging and the feeling of solidarity sweet and refreshing.

Buffalo. The shadow of September 6 still haunts the police of that city. Their only vision of an Anarchist is one who is forever lying in wait for human life, which is, of course, very stupid; but stupidity and authority always join forces. Capt. Ward, who, with a squad of police, came to save the innocent citizens of Buffalo, asked if we knew the law, and was quite surprised that that was not our trade; that we had not been employed to disentangle the chaos of the law,—that it was his affair to know the law. However, the Captain showed himself absolutely ignorant of the provisions of the American Constitution. Of course, his superiors knew what they were about when they set the Constitution aside, as old and antiquated, and, instead, enacted a law which gives the average officer a right to invade the head and heart of a man, as to what he thinks and feels. Capt. Ward added an amendment to the anti-Anarchist law. He declared any other language than English a felony, and, since Max Baginski could only avail himself of the German language, he was not permitted to speak. How is that for our law-abiding citizens? A man is brutally prevented from speaking, because he does not know the refined English language of the police force.

Emma Goldman delivered her address in English. It is not likely that Capt. Ward understood enough of that language. However, the audience did, and if the police of this country were not so barefaced, the saviour of Buffalo would have wished himself anywhere rather than to stand exposed as a clown before a large gathering of men and women.

The meeting the following evening was forcibly dispersed before the speakers had arrived. Ignorance is always brutal when it is backed by power.

Toronto. King Edward Hotel, Queen Victoria Manicuring Parlor. It was only when we read these signs that we realized that we were on the soil of the British Empire.

However, the monarchical authorities of Canada were more hospitable and much freer than those of our free Republic. Not a sign of an officer at any of the meetings.

The city? A gray sky, rain, storms. Altogether one was reminded of one of Heine's witty, drastic criticisms in reference to a well-known German university town. "Dogs on the street," Heine writes, "implore strangers to kick them, so that they may have some change from the awful monotony and dulness."

Rochester. The neighborly influence of the Buffalo police seems to have had a bad effect upon the mental development of the Rochester authorities. The hall was packed with officers at both meetings. The government of Rochester, however, was not saved—the police kept themselves in good order. Some of them seem to have benefited by the lectures. That accounts for the familiarity of one of Rochester's "finest," who wanted to shake Emma Goldman's hand. E. G. had to decline. Baron von Schlippenbach or an American representative of law and disorder,—where is the difference?

Syracuse. The city where the trains run through the streets. With Tolstoy, one feels that civilization is a crime and a mistake, when one sees nerve-wrecking machines running through the streets, poisoning the atmosphere with soft coal smoke.

What! Anarchists within the walls of Syracuse? O horror! The newspapers reported of special session at City Hall, how to meet the terrible calamity.

Well, Syracuse still stands on its old site. The second meeting, attended largely by "genuine" Americans, brought by curiosity perhaps, was very successful. We were assured that the lecture made a splendid impression. which led us to think that we probably were guilty of some foolishness, as the Greek philosopher, when his lectures were applauded, would turn to his hearers and ask, "Gentlemen, have I committed some folly?"

Au revoir.

HUMAN AIRSHIP A FAILURE.

But He Made a Kilhoare Trial—He's at Bellevue Now.

Policeman Abraham Frankin of the Old Slip Station was standing under the elevated structure at the Battery early yesterday afternoon when he was approached by a short, swarthy man, who said:

"I'm an airship. Stand here a few minutes and see me fly." Frankin was aware that yesterday was the 1st of April. So he told the speaker to go ahead and fly.

Five minutes later he was astonished to see a man gayly skipping along the ties overhead in his direction. When he arrived directly overhead of the policeman, the man flapped his arms and jumped off.

He landed on the pavement at the policeman's feet, bruised, not much hurt and apparently astonished at his failure. Frankin called Dr. Merrill of the Hudson Street Hospital. After a short examination the man was pronounced insane, and was removed to the psychopathic ward of Bellevue Hospital.

From papers found in his possession the police believe his name is Emanuel Grulna of 504 West Twenty-fourth Street.

BENEFITS JEWISH CHILDREN.

Bill Provides for Commitments to Homes of Their Own Religionists.

A delegation of Jews will go to Albany this week to attend a hearing on the bill introduced by Assemblyman Max Eckmann providing that the Commissioner of Charities, in indenturing, placing out, or committing any child in New York City shall, when possible, send it to a family or institution of the same religion as the child's parents.

The primary intent of the bill is to provide that Jewish children shall be placed in Jewish families or Jewish institutions. A special clause has for some time provided that Catholic children committed should be sent only to Catholic institutions. In Greater New York there are four institutions for committed children and there is soon to be built a large orphanage for them in Hawthorne, near Yonkers.

Mr Eckmann asked the State Board of Charities about the number of Jewish children in non-Jewish institutions last year. Acting Secretary Robert W. Hill answered that in the year ended Sept. 30, 1905, 655 Jewish children were admitted to institutions managed by Hebrews in Greater New York, while 704 Jewish children were received in non-Jewish institutions.

Non-Jewish institutions which cared for Jewish children and the number of such children in the year ended last September are:

Convent of Mercy, Brooklyn, 9; Industrial School Association, Brooklyn 18; Nursery and Child's Hospital, New York City, 24; Society for Aid of Friendless Women and Children, Brooklyn, 5; New York Catholic Protectory, 261; New York Foundling Hospital, 12; Missionary Hospital, 1; New York Juvenile Asylum, 101; Institution of Mercy, 2; St Agatha's Home, 1; St. Joseph's Home, 1; St. Mary's Maternity and Infant Home, Brooklyn, 2; Brooklyn Children's Aid Society, 11; Brooklyn Nursery and Infant's Hospital, 15; Dominican Convent of Our Lady of the Rosary, 5; Five Points House of Industry, 47; Missionary Sisters Third Order of St Francis, 3; Nursery and Child's Hospital (Castleton), 13; Orphan Asylum Brooklyn 3; Sheltering Arms Nursery, 2; New York Infant Asylum, 150.

The Eckmann bill has a clause specifying that it shall take effect immediately. It has been read once and referred to the Committee on Cities.

THE SKIPPER'S MODEL LOG.

Capt. Burnett's Deep-Sea Pen Tells of Storm That Hit the Hudson.

The British steamship Hudson, in yesterday from China, Japan, and East Indian ports, ran into a terrific hurricane on March 19. The vessel sustained much damage to her gangs, decks, and lifeboats. The skipper of the Hudson is Capt. Burnett, and he has been known as the writer of the most entertaining log to be found on the ocean seas. Here is the story of the hurricane in his own words:

Tuesday, March 11, latitude 32.37, longitude 11.07: The wind developed a force gale from the S. E. with a very high sea running with squalls of hurricane force. At 10 o'clock struck a heavy sea on the port bow which swept over the vessel from end to end, the lifeboats on the starboard side were stove in, and the starboard rail was carried away for a length of 40 feet. The vessel lay over to the starboard side and the water poured in through the open ports and the hatchways. The vessel righted herself, but remained in a very dangerous position. The crew were ordered to the boats, but the captain decided to remain by the ship. The crew worked hard all night, and by morning had the water under control.

FEAR HEARST AS A FOE

Pressing the Recount Bill as a Means of Balking Him.

IT IS LIKELY TO BE PASSED

Republicans Would Be Satisfied Whatever the Result of the Recount—Hearst Men Worried.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 3. Roosevelt wants it; Odell wants it—Higgins wants it; that, in brief, is the situation relative to the Hinkes-Murphy Recount bill. The Republican leaders are unanimous in holding that William R. Hearst is likely to be too dangerous a factor for the Governorship for the Republicans to leave anything undone to weaken him. The enactment of the Recount bill and seating of Hearst in the Mayor's chair is believed at present to be the most available weapon. It is not that the Republican leaders have no use for McClellan, but that they have less for Hearst.

There is an opinion among many Republican leaders that Hearst is making such headway that he may capture the regular Democratic organization. They are fearful that with him as the Independence League Democratic candidate nothing could prevail against him. While they know that thousands of Democrats would bolt Hip and either vote for the Republican candidate or not at all, they also realize that thousands of Republicans would support him.

The Republican leaders figure that to enact the Recount bill is most desirable, as the opponents have everything to gain and absolutely nothing to lose. They hold that if the recount shows Hearst defeated he will, in their opinion, be unable to pose as a martyr—a sacrifice to Tammany ingenuity and trickery. If he succeeds McClellan, they declare, he will not attempt to run for Governor; will feel bound to serve out his term, as he promised during the campaign.

None of the Hearst leaders have said that their chief would serve out the four-year term if he should be declared elected. It is known that Hearst is doing nothing toward obtaining McClellan's seat and, in fact, his emissaries here are disposed to view any move in that direction as a blow at their plans.

New York has had three-cornered fights for Governor before. In 1848 Hamilton Fish, as candidate of the Whigs, was indebted to a split among the Democrats for his election. In 1854 Horatio Seymour was defeated by Myron H. Clark because thousands of Democrats favored the temperance and "free soil" platform upon which Clark, the Whig candidate, was running. In 1870 Lucius Robinson was defeated by Alonzo B. Cornell as the price of having offended John Kelly, who nominated himself as the Tammany Hall candidate and polled just enough votes to beat the regular candidate.

The Recount bill is due to come up in the Assembly this week. A long fight is expected, but that it will pass is not doubted. Palmer, the Democratic leader, and La Fetra, Charles F. Murphy's personal representative, have served notice that they are opposed to it. That the Senate will also act favorably there can be little doubt. And that the measure will receive the signature of Governor Higgins there is less doubt.

Certain corporations are very desirous that the bill fail of enactment, for they view with dismay the possibility of Hearst becoming Mayor. Also many conservatives of both parties are sincerely desirous of having the bill defeated. But the Republicans, who think first of victory, and who also happen to be possessed of all the power, do not care about the manner thereof.

ARREST FOR PRUNING TREES.

Ruf Planted Them Himself, but He Had No Permit.

Herman Ruf of 1,005 Clinton Avenue planted one or two trees in front of his house a few years ago, and since then he has taken great pride in them.

Saturday afternoon he thought the time of year had come when a little pruning would improve their appearance. While he was trimming them he was arrested, and yesterday was arraigned before Magistrate Hogan in the Westchester Police Court on a charge of pruning trees without a permit.

After listening to a lecture from the Court, he was discharged but was told that in future he must not prune trees, even if he planted them himself, when the trees are on the public sidewalk.

Gov. Brockholst Winthrop of Porto Rico was among the arrivals from San Juan on the steamship Ponce yesterday. Governor Winthrop said that he had been upon the island when the hurricane struck it, and that the damage done to property was very great.

WOMAN ANARCHIST CALLS OUR FLAG A SHAM

Violent Speeches Made to Reds in Memory of Johann Most.

DIATRIBES IN FIVE TONGUES

Orators Denounce The Times, Modern Civilization, and the Police—Emma Goldman Among the Speakers.

The Grand Central Palace was crowded yesterday afternoon with Anarchists and sympathizers gathered to commemorate the life of the late Johann Most.

Lucy Parsons, widow of Albert Parsons, one of the executed Chicago Anarchists, was present, having journeyed from Illinois to be at the meeting and speak in tribute to the dead Anarchist. The speakers were many and of many languages. Each of them aimed a part of his oratory at THE TIMES in respect to a recent editorial on Most and his life. THE TIMES was berated in Hebrew, Yiddish, German, Italian, and English.

Red banners, red feathers in red hats of many women, red neckties and red badges for the men and the blue coats of more than a hundred policemen under Inspector Walsh gave color to the assemblage. The reporters were denounced as the hirelings of the capitalistic element.

Abraham Isaacs presided, and in his opening address made the first attack on THE TIMES, declaring that it was the only paper that dared insinuate against the sincerity and honesty of Most's motives and that it had "insinuated that Most should have been shot down in the streets."

"Most loved justice and truth," he declared, "and for no other reason he was hounded and persecuted. Had he lived 2,000 years ago he would have been crucified. As it was he got only ten years in prison."

Emma Goldman There, Too.

Emma Goldman, wearing a black gown, bare-headed, and bare-throated, followed Max Hoginsky, who spoke in German. She too denounced the press.

"Never a man was so shamefully hounded by the representatives of the robbers and thieves as was Most," she declared. "Their work knows no limit when it comes to misrepresenting an idea. They have done all they could to misrepresent Most's ideas, but they still live. They also misrepresented the man when they failed to kill his ideas. They represented him as the wildest of beasts, in pictures and articles, using lies, infamous lies.

"The ruling powers may think they can now rest in peace because he is dead, but although he is dead this great meeting shows that his ideas live. A time will come when we will gather to celebrate our freedom and there will be no officers in blue coats and brass buttons around us."

After a speech in Yiddish, Comrade Kelley spoke. He denounced THE TIMES and informed the audience of the birth of a new Anarchistic magazine called "Mother Earth," published by Emma Goldman and edited by Max Hoglisky. Lucy Parsons referred to the bomb throwing in Chicago as "an explosion which rent this capitalistic country."

"In 1883 it required more courage to say 'I am an Anarchist' than it does in 1906," she declared. "But Most had the courage to say it then, and to declare that he was a friend of those men who were being hounded to the gallows in America, the land of the free and the home of the slave, the flag which invites the immigrant fleeing from tyranny and oppression to a place of refuge tells a brazen lie, because here they imprison men for telling the truth. If the founders of this republic had been made of such contemptible stuff as Anarchists are made of they would have been no republic."

Compliments for Policemen, Too.

She referred to the policemen as the "vile hirelings of the capitalistic spirit personified in a club and a few brass buttons."

"They hated Most," she said, "because he tore the veil of hypocrisy from Society with ruthless hand and said to the proletariat 'look behind the veil and see the devils tied up in hell with hearts of steel.' If he had put our Mayors and Governors and the Supreme Court judges in small addresses he would have been called an elegant gentleman, but that

BENEFITS JEWISH CHILDREN.

Bill Provides for Committments to Homes of Their Own Religionists.

A delegation of Jews will go to Albany this week to attend a hearing on the bill introduced by Assemblyman Max Enkmann providing that the Commissioners of Charities in determining placing out or committing any child in New York City shall, when possible, send it to a family or institution of the same religion as the child's parents.

The primary intent of the bill is to provide that Jewish children shall be placed in Jewish families or Jewish institutions. A special clause has for some time provided that Catholic children committed should be sent only to Catholic institutions. In Greater New York there are four institutions for committed children, and there is soon to be built a large orphanage for them in Hawthorne, near Yonkers.

Mr. Eckmann asked the State Board of Charities about the number of Jewish children in non-Jewish institutions last year. Acting Secretary Robert W. Hill answered that in the year ended Sept. 30, 1905, 696 Jewish children were committed to institutions managed by Hebrews in Greater New York, while 704 Jewish children were received in non-Jewish institutions.

Non-Jewish institutions which cared for Jewish children and the number of such children in the year ended last September are:

Convent of Mercy, Brooklyn, 9; Industrial School Association, Brooklyn 18; Nursery and Child's Hospital, New York City, 24; Society for Aid of Friendless Women and Children, Brooklyn, 5; New York Catholic Protectory, 504; New York Foundling Hospital, 12; Misericordia Hospital, 1; New York Juvenile Asylum, 100; Institution of Mercy, 2; St. Agatha's Home 1; St. Joseph's Home, 1; St. Mary's Maternity and Infant Home, Brooklyn, 2; Brooklyn Children's Aid Society, 11; Brooklyn Nursery and Infant's Hospital, 15; Dominican Convent of Our Lady of the Rosary, 5; Five Points House of Industry, 47; Missionary Sisters Third Order of St. Francis, 3; Nursery and Child's Hospital (Castleton), 13; Orphan Asylum, Brooklyn 3; Sheltering Arms Nursery, 2; New York Infant Asylum; 180.

The Eckmann bill has a clause specifying that it shall take effect immediately. It has been read once and referred to the Committee on Cities.

THE SKIPPER'S MODEL LOG.

Capt. Burnett's Deep-Sea Pen Tells of Storm That Hit the Hudson.

The British steamship Hudson, in yesterday from China, Japan, and East Indian ports, ran into a terrific hurricane on March 10. The vessel sustained much damage to her plates, decks, and lifeboats. The skipper of the Hudson is Capt. Burnett, and he has been known as the writer of the most entertaining log to be found on the seven seas. Here is the story of the hurricane in his own words:

"Tuesday, March 11, latitude 32.37, longitude 80.40, the wind developed a fierce gale from the N. N.W., with a very high sea running with squalls of hurricane force. At 10 o'clock shipped a heavy sea amidships, which swept over the saloon chart room and the lifeboats at the after-end of the bridge. The starboard lifeboat was torn from its lashings, smashing it against an iron ventilator. All the doors on the starboard side were stove, and the bridge deck started.

"The lifeboat was secured with great difficulty, owing to the high force of the wind. Oil was used through the starboard wash pipes, and thereafter no heavy seas came aboard abaft the bridge on the weather side. At 11 o'clock a wall of sea water struck the steamer on her starboard bow, bending in the two upper plates for a length of twenty feet, stove all the forecastle ports, and started the forecastle deck. The steam pipe coverings were torn away, and considerable damage was caused to deck fittings.

"The impact of the giant sea was terrific. It fell, and looked as if the fore part of the vessel was torn away, and nothing could be seen forward for spray and rushing water.

"The sea continued to be very heavy, and blew with hurricane force at midnight. Then the gale gradually moderated, and finally turned into rain on the 11th and 12th."

No Money for Topographers.

The Topographical Bureau of the Borough of Queens is likely to go to pieces this week. The 175 attaches did not receive their salary [illegible] and inquiries at the office of Controller Metz brought forth the statement that there was no money to the credit of the bureau, so salaries could not be paid. The bureau is in Long Island City, and is engaged in officially mapping the boroughs.

ARREST FOR PRUNING TREES.

Ruf Planted Them Himself, but He Had No Permit.

Herman Ruf of 1,065 Clinton Avenue planted one or two trees in front of his house a few years ago, and since then he has taken great pride in them.

Saturday afternoon he thought the time of year had come when a little pruning would improve their appearance. While he was trimming them he was arrested, and yesterday was arraigned before Magistrate Breen in the Westchester Police Court on a charge of pruning trees without a permit.

After listening to a lecture from the Court, he was discharged, but was told that in future he must not prune trees, even if he planted them himself, when the trees are on the public sidewalk.

Gov. Winthrop Here on a Summons.

Gov. Beekman Winthrop of Porto Rico was among the arrivals from San Juan on the steamship Coamo yesterday. Gov. Winthrop said that he had been summoned to Washington to appear before the House Committee on Insular Affairs in relation to Porto Rican questions. Beyond this the Governor had nothing to say at present.

Suicide's Bullet Failed.

A thin, shabbily dressed man, who said he was Joseph Schwartz, a homeless laborer, attempted suicide by shooting himself on a bench in Central Park, at Sixth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, early yesterday morning. He aimed badly, and the bullet was deflected by his skull, after making a severe scalp wound. In Flower Hospital the surgeon revived Schwartz. He wouldn't say why he wanted to kill himself.

Women Teachers Want Equal Pay.

The women teachers of the city have organized and are about to present to the Board of Education a petition to have the salary schedules arranged without regard to the sex of teachers. As they regard their services as quite as satisfactory as those given by the men, they feel that in justice to them the compensation should be the same.

VICHY CELESTINS

[illegible] Woman Anarchist Calls Our Flag a Sham

[illegible] Goldman, wearing a black gown, bare-headed, and bare-throated, followed Max Bodinsky, who spoke in German. She too denounced the press.

"Never a man was so shamefully hounded by the representatives of the robbers and thieves as was Most," she declared. "Their work knows no limit when it comes to misrepresenting an idea. They have done all they could to misrepresent Most's ideas, but they still live. They also misrepresented the man when they failed to kill his ideas. They represented him as the wildest of beasts, in pictures and articles, using lies, infamous lies.

"The ruling powers may think they can now rest in peace because he is dead, but although he is dead this great meeting shows that his ideas live. A time will come when we will gather to celebrate our freedom and there will be no officers in blue coats and brass buttons around us."

After a speech in Yiddish, Comrade Kelley spoke. He denounced THE TIMES and informed the audience of the birth of a new Anarchistic magazine called "Mother Earth," published by Emma Goldman and edited by Max Bodinsky. Lucy Parsons referred to the bomb throwing in Chicago as "an explosion which rent this capitalistic country."

"In 1887 it required more courage to say 'I am an Anarchist' than it does in 1906," she declared. "But Most had the courage to say it then, and to declare that he was a friend of those men who were being hounded to the gallows in America, the land of the free and the home of the slave, the flag which invites the immigrant fleeing from tyranny and oppression to a place of refuge tells a brazen lie, because here they imprison men for telling the truth. If the founders of this republic had been made of such contemptible stuff as Americans are made of to-day there would have been no republic."

Compliments for Policemen, Too.

She referred to the policemen as the "vile hirelings of the capitalistic spirit personified in a club and a few brass buttons."

"They hated Most," she said, "because he tore the veil of hypocrisy from Society with ruthless hand and said to the proletariat 'look behind the veil and see the devils bred in hell with hearts of stone.' If he had said our McCurdys, and Perkinses, and the Standard Oil push were elegant gentlemen he would have been called an elegant gentleman himself. But he called them thieves and liars. That was his crime, and that is our crime.

"We have burned our bridges behind us. I despise the civilization which sends 1,750,000 children to work in the factories. But the spirit of liberty is abroad. There never has been a time when there was so much unrest in the world, and from this unrest will be born the sturdy child of liberty."

Editor S. Yanovsky of the Free Workmen's Voice reviewed Most's life and the principles of Anarchy. He spoke in Yiddish. Pietro de Estavi spoke in Italian. For all of the speeches there was abundant cheering.

The collection baskets had to be passed several times to cover the expenses of the meeting. The Chairman announced that $347.93 and three gold rings were collected on the first tour. After paying $150 expenses it was hoped to get a sum of money to add to a fund for the education of Most's children.

The audience sang "Die Arbeitsmänner," written by Most, demanding it over and over again. The playing of the "Marseillaise" stirred the crowd, while the funeral-march by Chopin made many woman weep.

Inspector Walsh had not trouble handling the Anarchists.

Prof. Beckwith to Rest.

The Trustees of the General Seminary, Chelsea Square, the official theological [illegible] accepted the resignation of the Rev. Ibson Thaddeus Beckwith, Professor of the Literature and Interpretation of the New Testament. An official of the seminary said yesterday that Prof. Beckwith's health is not of the best. He is to take a long rest, it is said, and will devote some time to literary work.

HER SAVINGS GONE IN A FIR

Hard Plight of a Polish Girl Who Ha Deprived Herself for Her Parents.

Bertha Lipschy, a young Polish woman, spent most of yesterday searching the ruins of the fire which on Saturday destroyed several tenements in Avenue D, Bayonne. The girl had lived in one of the houses. By hard work and by depriving herself of all but the necessities of life she had managed to save $8[illegible] which she kept in a trunk in her room. She had planned to return to Poland when her fortune reached $1,000, and provide a home for her aged parents.

When the police and firemen hustled the tenants out of the blazing building the girl was compelled to flee. She thought of her money when she reached the street, and only force prevented her from rushing back into the building.

No trace of the trunk has been found.

Jail for Hitting Police Captain.

A sentence of six months in the Kings County Penitentiary was imposed by Magistrate Furlong, in the Lee Avenue Court, Williamsburg, yesterday, on the prizefighter, John J. Head, who attacked Police Captain Finkerton of the Bedford Avenue Station in the latter's home, 25 Fillmore Place, on Saturday morning because the Captain refused to give him money. None of the wealthy friends whom Head said he once worked side by side with were present in court to help him.

had given it flesh and blood and the appeal to union; one felt that the strength they so generously poured into this living word was indestructible, inexhaustible.

Here and there blind troops of armed men, dressed in gray, gathered and formed ranks in silence; it was the fury of the oppressors preparing to repulse the wave of justice.

And in the narrow streets of the immense city, between the cold and silent walls raised by the hands of ignored creators, the noble belief in Man and in Fraternity grew and ripened.

"Comrade."—Sometimes in one corner, sometimes in another, the fire burst out. Soon this fire would become the conflagration destined to enkindle the earth with the ardent sentiment of kinship, uniting all its peoples; destined to consume and reduce to ashes the rage, hate and cruelty by which we are mutilated; the conflagration which will embrace all hearts, melt them into one,—the heart of the world, the heart of beings noble and just;—into one united family of workers.

In the streets of the dead city, created by slaves, in the streets of the city where cruelty reigned, faith in humanity and in victory over self and over the evil of the world grew and ripened. And in the vague chaos of a dull and troubled existence, a simple word, profound as the heart, shone like a star, like a light guiding toward the future: COMRADE.

ALEXANDER BERKMAN.

By E. G.

ON the 18th of this month the workhouse at Hoboken, Pa., will open its iron gates for Alexander Berkman. One buried alive for fourteen years will emerge from his tomb. That was not the intention of those who indicted Berkman. In the kindness of their Christian hearts they saw to it that he be sentenced to twenty-one years in the penitentiary and one year in the workhouse, hoping that that would equal a death penalty, only with a slow, refined execution. To achieve the feat of sending a man to a gradual death, the authorities of Pittsburg at the command of Mammon trampled upon their much-beloved laws and the legality of court proceedings. These laws in Pennsylvania called for seven years imprisonment for the attempt to kill, but that did not satisfy the law-abiding citizen H. C. Frick. He saw to it that one indictment was multiplied into six. He knew full well that he would meet with no opposition from petrified injustice and the servile stupidity of the judge and jury before whom Alexander Berkman was tried.

In looking over the events of 1892 and the causes that led up to the act of Alexander Berkman, one beholds Mammon seated upon a throne built of human bodies, without a trace of sympathy on its Gorgon brow for the creatures it controls. These victims, bent and worn, with the reflex of the glow of the steel and iron furnaces in their haggard faces, carry their sacrificial offerings to the ever-insatiable monster, capitalism. In its greed, however, it reaches out for more; it neither sees the gleam of hate in the sunken eyes of its slaves, nor can it hear the murmurs of discontent and rebellion coming forth from their heaving breasts. Yet, discontent continues until one day it raises its mighty voice and demands to be heard:

Human conditions! higher pay! fewer hours in the inferno at Homestead, the stronghold of the "philanthropist" Carnegie!

He was far away, however, enjoying a much needed rest from hard labor, in Scotland, his native country. Besides he knew he had left a worthy representative in H. C. Frick, who could take care that the voice of discontent was strangled in a fitting manner,—and Mr. Carnegie had judged rightly.

Frick, who was quite experienced in the art of disposing of rebellious spirits (he had had a number of them shot in the coke regions in 1890), immediately issued an order for Pinkerton men, the vilest creatures in the human family, who are engaged in the trade of murder for $2 per day.

The strikers declared that they would not permit these men to land, but money and power walk shrewd and cunning paths. The Pinkerton blood-hounds were packed into a boat and were to be smuggled into Homestead by way of water in the stillness of night. The amalgamated steel workers learned of this contemptible trick and prepared to meet the foe. They gathered by the shores of the Monongahela River armed with sticks and stones, but ere they had time for an attack a violent fire was opened from the boat that neared the shore, and within an hour eleven strikers lay dead from the bullets of Frick's hirelings.

Every beast is satisfied when it has devoured its prey,—not so the human beast. After the killing of the strikers H. C. Frick had the families of the dead evicted from their homes, which had been sold to the workingmen on the instalment plan and at the exorbitant prices usual in such cases.

Out of these homes the wives and children of the men struggling for a living wage were thrown into the street and left without shelter. There was one exception only. A woman who had given birth to a baby two days previous and who, regardless of her delicate condition, defended her home and succeeded in driving the sheriff from the house with a poker.

Everyone stood aghast at such brutality, at such inhumanity to man, in this great free republic of ours. It seemed as if the cup of human endurance had been filled to the brim, as if out of the ranks of the outraged masses some one would rise to call those to account who had caused it all.

And some one rose in mighty indignation against the horrors of wealth and power. It was Alexander Berkman!

A youth with a vision of a grand and beautiful world based upon freedom and harmony, and with boundless sympathy for the suffering of the masses. One whose deep, sensitive nature could not endure the barbarisms of our times. Such was the personality of the man who staked his life as a protest against tyranny and iniquity; and such has Alexander Berkman remained all these long, dreary fourteen years.

Nothing was left undone to crush the body and spirit of this man; but sorrow and suffering make for sacred force, and those who have never felt it will fail to realize how it is that Alexander Berkman will return to those who loved and esteemed him, to those whom he loved so well, and still loves so well,—the oppressed and downtrodden millions—with the same intense, sweet spirit and with a clearer and grander vision of a world of human justice and equality.

THE WHITE TERROR.

I.—The Flogging af a Student.

(BY AN EYE-WITNESS—M. KIRILOV, OF THE "RUSS.")

December 18th. Near the Gorbaty Bridge, Moscow. A group of soldiers of various arms and an officer. Great animation, jokes, cries, gesticulation, contented faces. A student has fallen into their hands.

"Well, boys, make room," says the officer. "The performance begins!"

"Take off your trousers," says the officer, turning to the student. The latter is pale, silent, and does not move.

"Trousers off!" cries the officer, in rage; but the student, without a drop of blood in his face, whiter than the snow, does not move, but only looks around in silence with horrified eyes and meets everywhere the triumphant faces of his tormentors. He drops his head and remains silent as before.

"Well, then, boys, we must assist our dear student; his hands, poor thing, are frost bitten and do not obey."

The voice of the officer changes; it becomes sweet and smooth. He looks at the student with pleasure.

DECIDES TO EXPEL BURTON.

Senate Committee Informal Agreement—No Action on Smoot.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—In secret session the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day informally decided that Senator Burton of Kansas should be expelled from the Senate before this Congress had expired.

No definite action looking to this end was taken, but the matter was referred to the Chairman, Mr. Burrows, with instructions to submit a plan of action to the full committee. There were eight members of the committee present, and there was no dissent from the proposition that the Senate owed it to itself to act before Congress convened for the short session.

The meeting of the committee was called for the purpose of taking action on the Smoot case, but the two important propositions pending before the committee, both involving the expulsion of Senators, became hopelessly tangled and resulted in no action.

Senator Knox, who as Attorney General at the time of the first Burton trial, was thoroughly familiar with the case, was just as insistent upon quick action in the Burton matter as were Senators Dubois and Burrows in the Smoot case. Senator Knox holds views which are identical with those entertained by Senator Bailey in regard to Burton. The Texas Senator was absent from the meeting, but it was known that upon his return to the city he would cooperate with Senator Knox and Senator Hale, and that the influences which can be brought to bear will be too strong to be resisted.

Senator Dubois to-day was indignant because nothing was done in the Smoot matter, and told the committee that the country would not accept action in the Burton case as satisfying the public demand in regard to the moral question involved in the two cases. He agreed that Senator Burton should be expelled, but insisted that there was a greater public demand for the exclusion of Smoot.

$32,000,000 IN CONTRACTS.

Fuller Company Will Build the New Pennsylvania and McAdoo Terminals.

The contract for the construction of the Pennsylvania terminal has been awarded to the George A. Fuller Company. No announcement of the amount of the Fuller Company's successful bid was made yesterday, but it is said that the project will involve about $25,000,000.

The terminal building will cover the two blocks bounded by Seventh and Eighth Avenues, Thirty-first and Thirty-third Streets. All the plans for the work have been prepared and the erection of the building will be begun as soon as the excavation has been completed.

It was also announced yesterday that the Fuller Company had secured the contract for putting up the immense office and terminal buildings for the downtown McAdoo tunnels from Jersey City. These two buildings will cover the two block fronts on the west side of Church Street, from Cortlandt to Fulton Street. Their estimated cost is about $7,000,000. Both blocks have already been cleared of old buildings.

The George A. Fuller Company is owned by the United States Realty and Improvement Company, of which it is virtually the construction department.

LEOPARDS FIGHT AT LUNA.

Third Training Session Results in Damage to Both.

There was a ten-minute fight yesterday in the Monday animal arena at Luna Park between two leopards while they were being introduced to their trainer for the third time. They were captured only a few months ago.

Mme. Morelli was instructing the leopards in jumping. They were in bad temper and rebelled. An attendant holding the chain attached to one of them gave it too much slack, and it sprang at its companion. The historic fight between the Kilkenny cats was but a mockery to that which followed. Over and over the leopards rolled, snarling, biting, and clawing each other.

Mme. Morelli whipped the whip and fired her revolver loaded with blank cartridges into the mass of animated fur. Quite ten minutes elapsed before the animals were separated. Hoarse and disgusted they were returned to their cages to meditate in solitude and recuperate without the aid of salve or bandages.

ALI NOT THOUGHLY KILLED.

NEW YORK AUTO DEALER FIRES ON 3 DEPUTIES

R. J. Leavitt, in York Harbor, Me., Defeats Efforts to Arrest Him.

INTRENCHED ON A LAUNCH

He Is Charged with Jumping His Bail Here—Martin Engel One of His Bondsmen.

YORK HARBOR, Me., May 25.—Ralph J. Leavitt, formerly of New York, and President of the Leavitt Motor Car Exchange, of that city, for whom Deputy Sheriffs of New York County have a warrant charging him with being a fugitive from justice, has succeeded in eluding the officers since Wednesday. To-night Leavitt was aboard his launch in the harbor here.

According to Sheriff A. Thorne of York County, Me., who went out to consult Leavitt, the fugitive announced that he would shoot at sight any man who attempted to arrest him.

The New York deputies arrived here Wednesday with warrants charging Leavitt with jumping bail which had been furnished by a bonding company and by a friend, Martin Engel, of New York. Leavitt was arrested in that city, it is said, charged with several fraudulent transactions in connection with the purchase of automobiles. Herbert Beardsley, an officer of the bonding company, and a Deputy Sheriff of New York County, visited Leavitt's country home here and were entertained at dinner. At the close of the dinner, Leavitt excused himself and disappeared.

Leavitt went to the waterfront, boarded his swift launch. The two men temporarily abandoned the attempt to arrest the fugitive and returned to New York. They came here again to-day, however, accompanied by two additional deputies. Leavitt learned of their arrival, and he once more fled to his launch to escape the deputies. The latter, determined to capture the man if possible, put out in a rowboat and gave chase.

According to the deputies their progress was stopped by Leavitt, who drew a revolver and fired a shot which struck the side of the rowboat. Leavitt has a reputation of being a crack shot with a revolver, and his pursuers decided to return to shore.

In the meantime Leavitt sent a message to Sheriff Athorne of York County, calling upon him to protect him from men who, he asserted, were bent upon kidnapping him. The Sheriff went to consult Leavitt, who had anchored his craft to a buoy, and he returned early to-night and reported that Leavitt had threatened to shoot the first man who attempted to apprehend him.

Leavitt's boat is well stocked, and he intends to remain on board indefinitely, or put out to sea if the New York deputies decide to pursue him again.

AN ANARCHIST HONEYMOON.

Emma Goldman and Berkman Hold Hands on a Park Bench.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 25.—While the Chicago police were searching high and low for that terrible pair of "Reds," Alexander Berkman and Emma Goldman, the two Anarchists were on a bench in Lincoln Park to-day, holding hands and talking.

A reporter found them there, and they made no attempt to evade him.

"What shall I call you—Miss Goldman, Mrs. Goldman, or Mrs. Berkman?" the reporter asked.

"I am Emma Goldman, and I will live and die with that name," said the woman.

"But are you two married?"

"We are Anarchists and don't believe in marriage, because marriage insults the tyranny of government, and government means force," they replied almost in unison.

"But you are living together."

"Yes," said Emma Goldman, "and the love that still leaves free scope for individuality. That means companionship. But whenever one Anarchist ceases to love another more than any one else in the world, then he is free to go his way."

Berkman smiled fondly upon her.

DYNAMITE BEHIND TARGET.

400 Pounds Exploded by Rifle Bullet—One Dead, Several Hurt.

SHREVEPORT, La., May 25.—A special from De Ridder, La., says that H. H. Johnson was killed, A. Keating fatally injured, and several others slightly injured by a dynamite explosion at a railroad camp twelve miles from here to-day.

The men were out at target practice with rifles, when one of the bullets struck a 40-pound pile of dynamite, causing a terrific explosion. The camp was destroyed by the fire which followed.

SHIPS AVOID ICEBERGS.

So Many Are Reported That the Big Liners Change Their Course.

Because of the many reports of icebergs on the Atlantic, the prominent Transatlantic steamship companies have agreed to send their ships over a course that is considered free from icebergs.

The officials of the White Star Line, those of the American Red Star, Dominion, and Leyland Lines have notified their commanders to cross the ocean at longitude 47, in latitude 40.10, beginning to-day.

D. J. SULLY SELLS HIS HOUSE.

$275,000 Said to be the Price—Purchaser's Name Withheld.

Daniel J. Sully, the cotton operator, has sold his residence at 9 East Sixty-second Street. The house, which is six stories in height, of the Anne [illegible] basement type, was offered at auction about two weeks ago, with an upset price of $275,000, but there was no bid. It is understood that the price in the present sale by private contract is in the neighborhood of that figure. The name of the buyer could not be learned yesterday.

Mr. Sully bought the house in December, 1903, and gave it to his wife as a Christmas present. Title to it has since stood in her name. The contents of the house were sold at auction last week.

PIERS OF HIS BUILDING GONE.

Contractor Wouldn't Settle a Strike—Then Supports Vanished.

Ed Land J. Allen, a Jersey City contractor, notified the police that four iron piers had been taken from the corners of the first story of a building he was erecting at Sixth Avenue and [illegible] Street.

Mr. Allen said there had been a strike and the men he was working on the building had been called off.

On Thursday afternoon he was accosted, he said, by a man who did not give his name but who professed to be a walking delegate of the Structural Ironwork[illegible]. He asked Mr. Allen if all of the men could not be made to settle the matter, called off intact return to work without the knowledge of the union. Mr. Allen said he declined to be a party to any such arrangement. The piers were removed [illegible]

Blows were struck in a lusty fashion and cries of "Police!" "They're murdering them!" "Help!" rang out.

Finally the two disturbers made as if to get out, and the arrival of a watchman in uniform quieted them and their pursuers. It was, however, with ill grace that the disturbers of the meeting were allowed to leave, and as they passed through a door, cursing the law, the country, and God, a girl, still in her teens, broke through the crowd and turning to Havel, said:

"That's all right, father."

Ben Bansig saved Chicago,—there can be no dispute about that. As to Sercombe, the editor of To-Morrow, he deserves recognition. I suggest that he be awarded a tooth brush at the expense of City Hall.

Our three friends, Terence Carlin, Havel, Mary Latter —who, as I can authentically prove, is not the daughter of Hyppolite Havel—can console themselves with the fact that their protest has done the names of Whitman and Spencer more honor than the gas of the Baptist preacher.

That the suspiciously-red noses of the newspaper men should have smelt the "immoral conduct" of Maxim Gorky, was really very fortunate for the latter. He is now relieved from the impertinence of interviewers and prominent personages. He must feel as if he had recovered from some loathesome disease. Immorality has after all many desirable qualities. What if chickens gaggle, pharisaic goats piously turn up their eyes, and the dear little piggies grunt!

Well-meaning people are horrified that justice is making use of such creatures as Orchard and McParland against Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone. There is nothing unusual in that. The record of the American government in its persecution against Socialists and Anarchists is by no means so clean that one need be astonished that it employs spies and perjurers as its helpmates.

A LETTER.

Chicago, June 2nd, 1906.

Dear Editor:—I hope you have not been trying to relieve your feelings by using language dangerous to your soul's salvation. I can sympathize with you, though. However, it was impossible for me to send the promised article for "M. E." Who, indeed, could expect a bride of two weeks to waste time upon magazine articles?! I hope you have read the reports of my marriage, though your silence would indicate that you have either neglected to read the important news, or that your usual lack of faith in the truth and honesty of the press has not permitted you to credit the story.

It is high time, dear friend, that you get rid of your German skepticism; you know, I esteem your judgment, but when it comes to doubting anything the newspapers say, I draw the line. What reporters do not know about Anarchists, and especially about your publisher, is not worth knowing. According to their great wisdom I not only incited men to remove the crowned heads of various countries, but I have done worse—I have incited them to marry me, and when they proved unwilling to love, honor and obey the order of our secret societies to blow up all sacred institutions, I sent them about their business.

Much as I realize the importance of my articles for MOTHER EARTH, you cannot expect me to sacrifice my wifely duty to my lord and master for Earth's sake.

I have always held to the opinion that there must be absolute confidence between publisher and editor on all matters except the receipts; therefore I have to confess that my newly-wedded husband, who has just graduated from the University of the Western Penitentiary—the curriculum of which is lots of liberty, leisure and enjoyment—objects to the drudgery of an agitator and publisher. In justice to him, I dare not do more than write letters all day, address meetings every evening, and enjoy the love and kindness of the comrades till early morning hours. Where, then, shall I find time to write articles for MOTHER EARTH?"

But to be in keeping with the serious and dignified tone of our valuable magazine, and especially with you dear Editor, I want to say that my meetings were very successful, and that MOTHER EARTH is being received with great favor in every city. Nearly 500 copies were sold here.

After reading the brilliant reports in the Chicago papers and seeing the handsome, refined policemen at the various meetings, I am not surprised that our magazine is being appreciated. Apropos of the Chicago police, just fancy, I have actually forced them out of their uniforms. I hope this will not conjure up the horrible picture of Chicago's finest parading the city in Adam's costume. Not that! Only, Chief of Police Collins was so outraged over my gentle criticism of his dear little boys at one of the woodworkers' meetings, that he gave strict orders, "No officer should again appear at a public meeting in uniform where that awful Emma Goldman is humiliating and degrading the emblem of authority and law."

After this, I hope you will never again doubt the importance of public meetings and the great and far-reaching influence of my speaking.

I shall soon be with you, if I survive my tour, the police, and the press. I shall then try to make up for my sins, in the July number of MOTHER EARTH, provided you will let me recuperate in your editorial care and affection.

LIBERTARIAN INSTRUCTION.

By EMILE JANVION.

AMONG the important duties of Anarchists libertarian instruction should occupy the first place. As revolutionary propaganda it is the most effective.

Tolstoi in Yasnaia-Poliana, Reclus at Bruxelles, Paul Robin at Cempius, the group of the Free School at Paris have inaugurated attempts during the period of daring we have witnessed of late years.

Far from mixing education with instruction, the former should be considered as the natural consequence of the latter.

Our ideas should never be imposed by an education too specialized, narrow or sectarian, but by means of full and all-round instruction which opens the mind to criticism and makes it accessible to the power of truth which is our strength and which will complete the forming of the character.

Our instruction should be integral, rational, and mixed.

Integral—Because it will tend to develop the whole being and make a complete, free ensemble, equally progressive in all knowledge, intellectual, physical, manual and professional, and this from the earliest age.

Rational—Because it will be based on reason and in conformity with actual science and not on faith; on the development of personal Freedom and independence and not on that of piety and obedience; on the abolition of the fiction God, the eternal and absolute cause of subjection.

Mixed—Because it favors the coeducation of the sexes in a constant, fraternal, familiar company of children, boys and girls, which gives to the character of their manners a special earnestness.

To the scientific instruction must be added manual apprenticeship, instruction with which it is in a constant connection of balance and reciprocity, and also esthetic instruction (music, art, etc.), which in point of view of an integral development has certainly not a small importance.

To turn our attention towards the child, to encourage the development of its initiative, to impress it with a sentiment of its dignity, to preserve it from cowardice and falsehood, to make it observe the pros and cons of all social conceptions, to educate it for the struggle, that is the great work, scarcely yet begun, which awaits us.

That will be the task of the nearest future if we will act logically and firmly.

...tigkeit das Schmettern der Siegesfanfaren der wahren Humanität, dass dieses keine kleinliche, triviale Palliative dulde. Darum sind wir überdrüssig all jener politischen Gurkenkurrezepte, welche uns Reformen und Verbesserungen innerhalb der bestehenden Gesellschaftsordnung versprechen, mit den Worten des Franzosen Lagrange – „Stimme der Hungersnot" – sagen wir zu all den zahlreichen Lakaienseelen der öffentlichen Staatsgewalt: „Redner der Linken, der Rechten und des Centrums, ihr seid Schwätzer! Jene die euch mit anhören, haben zu Mittag gegessen und können sich schlafen legen. Aber die Lebensmittel sind teuer, das Brot ist zu Preise und wir gewahren auch die Kraft unserer Lungen und der Tränen unserer Kinder, die verschiedenen Stimme sei, die Hungersnot spricht gewaltiger mögen als ihr Alle!..." Auch wir sprechen von der Möglichkeit von Reformen, jedoch unsere Reformen sind prinzipiell andere, sie sind das konsequente, positive Hinan-schreiten des neuen Rahmen der bestehenden Ordnung; jeder Vorwärtsstoss unserer Reform ist eine Bresche an den künstlich gestutzten Pfeilern der herrschenden sozialen Schmach.

Uns liegt nicht daran, an dieser Stelle ein Programm zu entwerfen. Unser Programm ist das Leben mit seinen tausendfachen Problemen, die nicht in oder gekünstelten Wortformel erhaben dastehen. Das Leben selbst, das wir mit Liebe und Hoffnung umfassen wollen, das will uns mit sich fortreissen, hinein in den Kampf gegen seine Widersacher, die auch die unsrigen sind. Und jeder Wort- und Gedankenstrich, jedes ernste Wort des Rechtens und Argumentierens, jede Frage stellung und Antwort, die diese Blätter bringen werden, müssen und werden der Schrei des Lebens selbst sein, eines gequälten, bedrückten Lebens, das da kämpft um die Lösung seiner Rätsel, um endlich in Wahrheit sich schmücken zu können mit der Schönheit seiner eigenen Fruchtbarkeit.

Einen Programmgrundsatz haben wir doch wohl: Wir wollen die unbedingte Befriedigung aller menschlichen Bedürfnisse auf dem Wege des kommunistischen Besitzes; wir lachen jeder Autorität und verkünden das Recht des neugeborenen Kindes, eines jeden erwachsenen Menschen, den drückenden Geboten von Staat, Kirche und konventioneller Moral entsagen zu können. Solange dieser Zustand nicht erreicht ist, werden wir immer in voller Rüstung bereitstehen zum Kampfe aufgerufen, erscheinen. Wir gehören all denen an, die gehören uns an, die für die Freiheit sinnen, trachten, kämpfen und sterben. Diese internationale freie Generation bildet die Grenzpfähle unseres Vaterlandes, des einzigen, das wir lieben und anerkennen. Erst in ihm wird die Freiheit aus dem Bereich staubiger Philosophasterfolianten in den Innenkreis jener grossen, herrlich schönen Kampfesphalanx der Völker aller Länder gehoben, die ihre feste, positive Grundlage, ihr Ziel in der anarchistischen Bewegung aller Richtungen erblickt.

Möge es der „Freien Generation" vergönnt sein, eine Waffe der Erkenntnis und Tat in ihr zu bilden, möge sie wachsen und gedeihen, unermüdlich bestrebt, im Stande sein, die Fauststeine zu jenem stolzen Gerüst mit herbei zu tragen, dessen Grundstein Freiheit, dessen First Menschenglück heisst!

Die Tragödie der Frauenemanzipation

Emma Goldmann.

Ich beginne meinen Artikel mit einem Gemeinplatz: Die Verschiedenheit aller politischen und ökonomischen Theorien, welche die Ungerechtigkeit zwischen den verschiedenen Gruppen und Klassen der Menschheit behandeln, ungeachtet aller Klassen- und Rassenunterschiede, ungeachtet aller künstlich gezogenen Demarkationslinien zwischen den respektiven Rechten des Mannes und der Frau, ist ich der Meinung, dass es eine Etappe gibt, wo selbst all diese Verschiedenheiten sich begegnen und zu einem farblosen Grau verschmelzen.

Keinen Friedensvertrag will ich hier vorschlagen. Der allgemeine soziale Antagonismus, welcher unser ganzes öffentliches Leben gegenwärtig erfüllt und welcher eine Folge der kraftvollen, von einander feindlichen und widersprechsvollen Elemente ist, wird ohne Zweifel in Stücke zerfallen, wenn die Reorganisation unseres sozialen Lebens, basiert auf den Prinzipien ökonomischer Gerechtigkeit, eine Wirklichkeit geworden ist.

Friede und Harmonie zwischen den Geschlechtern und Individuen hangen nicht notwendiger Weise von einer oberflächlichen Gleichmacherei aller menschlichen Geschöpfe ab, auch erfordern sie keineswegs die Ausscheidung von individuellen Charaktereigen oder Eigenheiten. Das Problem, welches uns heut zu Tage konfrontiert, und das die nahe Zukunft lösen muss, ist ja gerade, wie und auf welche Art der Mensch sich selbst, sein eigen Ich sein soll und kann, gleichzeitig

Zukunft lösen muss, ist ja gerade wie und auf welche Art der Mensch sich selbst, sein eigen Ich sein soll und kann, gleichzeitig

nur auch sich eins fühlen kann mit seinen Mitmenschen, wie so er tief und innerlich empfinden mit allen menschlichen Wesen, zur selben Zeit seine eigenen, ihm innewohnenden Eigentümlichkeiten sich bewahren kann. Dies allein erscheint mir als die Grundlage, auf welcher Masse und Individuum, der wahre Demokrat und die echte Individualität, Mann und Weib einander ohne Widerstreit und Gegensatz begegnen dürfen. Das beide Teile belebende Motto darf nicht lauten: „Verzichte eines dem anderen!", es muss ihnen sein: „Verstehen alles das andere". Der oft zitierte Satz von Madame de Staël: „Alles zu verstehen, heisst Alles zu vergeben" hat niemals grossen Eindruck auf mich gemacht, er hat den Beigeschmack der Beichte und der Absolution, einem Menschen, etwas zu verzeihen, trägt stets mit sich eine gewisse Überhebung, pharisäischer Selbsterhebung. Es gemahnt, wie unsere Klassiker begreifen. Und dieses einheitliche Verstehen, Verlangen durch die Grundansichten meiner Arbeit, meine Auffassung der Emanzipation der Frau, ihre Wirkungen auf das

Die Emanzipation sollte es der Frau ermöglichen, das natürlich Menschliche in ihr zu erfassen. Alles in ihrem Bereiche, das seinen Ausdruck in Kunst und Handlung findet, sollte seinen vollendetsten Ausdruck finden. Künstliche Scheidewände sollten zertrümmert, sollten Pfade zur immer grösseren Freiheit sollten alle jene Spuren von Jahrhunderten der Unterwerfung und Sklaverei wegräumen helfen.

Die Emanzipation, so sprach jene Vorgängerin der Frauenrechtsbewegung, sollte durch Taten und deren Resultate die Frau isoliert und selbständig machen. Grundbedingung des wahren Glückes bedeutet, welche von grösster Wirksamkeit für sie sind. Eine falsche äusserliche Emanzipation hat aus dem normalen Weibchen ein künstliches Wesen gemacht, das an die Produkte französischer Treibhauskunst gemahnt: arabeskes Laubwerk und Gestrüpp, Hyazinthen, Rosen und Kränze — alles, nur nicht jene Früchte, welche die Pflanzen und Bäume durch die Entfaltung ihrer eigenen Triebe erreicht hatten. Solche künstlich gewachsene Produkte des weiblichen Geschlechtes kommen wir in grosser Anzahl, insbesondere in der sogenannten intellektuellen Sphäre unseres Lebens, finden

Freiheit und Gleichheit für die Frau! Welche Hoffnungen und Ausblicke gestalteten jene Worte, als sie zum ersten Mal gehaucht wurden von den Lippen und Denkern eines Tages. Die Sonne mit all ihrem strahlender Licht, ihrer Herrlichkeit sollte einer neuen Welt aufgehen; einer Welt, in welcher die Frau frei ihr eigen Glück bestimmen durfte, gewiss ein Ziel, würdig all des Enthusiasmus, des Mutes, der Ausdauer und unaufhörlichen Anstrengung der enorm grossen Schar von Pionieren beider Geschlechter, welche ihr Alles einsetzten gegen eine Welt des Vorurteils, der Unwissenheit.

Auch meine Hoffnung ist jenes leuchtende Ziel, aber ich bestehe darauf, dass die Emanzipation der Frau, wie sie augenblicklich dargelegt und praktisch ausgeführt wird, dieses Ziel nicht erreicht hat. Die Frau befindet sich jetzt der Notwendigkeit gegenüber sich von der Emanzipation emanzipieren zu müssen, wenn sie wirklich darnach Verlangen trägt, frei zu sein. Wohl mag dies so Manchem paradox klingen, aber es ist nichtsdestoweniger nur zu wahr.

Was hat die Frau durch ihre sogenannte Emanzipation erreicht? Gleiches Wahlrecht in manchen Staaten. Hat dies unser politisches Leben, seine Atmosphäre gereinigt, wie viele wohlmeinende Prätendenten dieser Reform verkündeten? Ganz gewiss nicht auch die wahlberechtigte Frau bietet keinerlei Garantie für eine zu mögliche Reinigung, Aufbesserung des politischen Lebens, das nach Heine ein garstig Lied ist. Die Emanzipation hat der Frau des weiteren die gewünschte Gleichheit mit dem Manne gebracht, weil sie das Recht besitzt, nach eigenem Belieben, ihr Geschäft zu wählen. Doch da wieder ihre verzogene noch gegenwärtige physische Erziehung sie mit der nötigen Stärke ausstattete, mit dem Manne konkurrieren zu können, weil sie sehr oft genötigt, ihre ganze Lebensenergie zu erschöpfen, jeden Nerv ihres Wesens anzustrengen, um nur wenigstens den durchschnittlichen Marktpreis erringen zu können. Wenige sind erfolgreich, denn es ist eine Tatsache, dass Frauen-Ärzte, Advokaten, Architekten und Ingenieure weder das gleiche Vertrauen geniessen noch auch die gleiche Entlohnung empfangen wie ihre männlichen Genossen. Und diejenigen, welche schliesslich diese entzückende Gleichheit doch erringen, tun dies im Allgemeinen auf Kosten ihres physischen und psychischen Wohles. Was aber gar die grosse Masse von Arbeits-Mädchen und Frauen anbelangt, so frage ich nur, wie viel persönliche Unabhängigkeit wird gewonnen, wenn die Enge, der Mangel an Freiheit im Elternhause oder eigenen Heim um die Enge und den Mangel an Freiheit in der Fabrik, in der Schwitzbude, im Geschäftsladen oder Bureau vertauscht wird? Dazu kommt noch das für so viele Frauen in Betracht kommende Missgeschick die Aufsicht über ein „Heim, o du süsses Heim" — kalt, monoton, ungeordnet obtosend — führen zu müssen, nachdem sie von der Tretsfrohn nach Hause zurückkehrten. Eine herrliche Unabhängigkeit! Es ist natürlich gar kein Wunder, dass so viele Mädchen so schnell wie es sind, das erste beste Heiratsangebot mit beiden Händen zu ergreifen, von den Edelsten und Kühnsten jener Tage. Die Sonne mit all ihrem strahlenden Licht, ihrer Herrlichkeit sollte einer neuen Welt aufgehen: einer Welt, in welcher die Frau frei ihr eigen Glück bestimmen durfte, ist natürlich gar kein Wunder, dass so viele Mädchen so schnell willens sind, das erste beste Heiratsangebot mit beiden Händen zu ergreifen, nur damit sie der ihnen zur Last gewordenen Unabhängigkeit hinter dem Ladentisch oder der Nähmaschine entkommen können. Solche Mädchen sind ganz ebenso begierig zu heiraten, wie es Mädchen aus den Kreisen der Millionäre sind, welche den Zeitpunkt kaum erwarten können, da es ihnen möglich sein wird, das Joch ihrer Abhängigkeit von den Eltern abzuwerfen. Eine sogenannte Unabhängigkeit, welche nur gestattet, die nötigsten Subsistenzmittel sich zu erwerben, ist keineswegs ein begehrenswertes, ein so schönes Ideal, dass sie zu der Erwartung berechtigte, die Frau würde um ihretwillen alles opfern. Denn diese ganze Leere, wenn und hier gepriesene Unabhängigkeit ist ja schliesslich nichts anderes als ein langsamer Prozess der Abstumpfung und Ertötung der weiblichen Natur, ihrer Liebesfähigkeit und mütterlichen Gefühle.

Demgegenüber ist die Position einer Arbeiterin bedeutend natürlicher und weniger sich selbst Entfremdet, als jene ihrer scheinbar glücklicheren Schwestern in den gesellschaftlichen Berufssphären des Lehrens: der Lehrerinnen, Verkäuferinnen, Beamtinnen, Händlerinnen, usw., welche den Schein der Würde, Selbständigkeit und des Selbstvertrauens anzunehmen haben, während ihr Herz allmählich immer leerer wird und stirbt.

Ein Hindernis erwächst in der üblichen Auffassung des Begriffes der Unabhängigkeit der Frau und ihrer Emanzipation; die Furcht vor der Liebe zu einem Manne, der ihr sozial nicht gleichgestellt ist, bestehe die Angst, dass die Liebe ihre Freiheit und Unabhängigkeit vernichten würde, das Entsetzen vor der Erkenntnis, dass die Liebe oder die Wärme der Mutterschaft sie in der Ausübung ihrer Berufstätigkeit behindern würde — all dies macht aus den Frauen Zwangs-Vestalinnen, die welchen das Leben mit seinen grossen, klärenden Leiden, seinen tiefen, bezaubernden Freuden dahinfällt, ohne ihre Seele berührt zu haben.

Die Frauenpartei, wie sie von der Majorität ihrer Anhänger verstanden wird, strebt einzig und allein in ihren Zielen, um jene grenzenlose Freiheit und Elastizität zu gestatten, welche in den tiefen Gefühlen einer jungen Frau, Geliebten, Mutter im Zustande der Freiheit liegen. Eine tragische Sentimentalität eigen sich selbst erhaltenden und ökonomisch freien Frau zu suchen, zu wollen, sondern in zu wenigen Erfahrungsmöglichkeiten. Es ist wohl wahr, sie übertrifft die Generationen der Vergangenheit an weltlichen Kenntnissen und ungezwungenerem Auftreten, aber gerade deshalb fühlt sie desto empfindlicher den Mangel jedes lebensnotwendigen, welcher allein sie imstande ist, die menschliche Gefühlswelt bedeutend zu bereichern und ohne welchen die meisten Frauen blosse professionelle Automaten werden.

Dass eine solche Sachlage kommen musste, wurde vorausgesehen von Jenen, welche begriffen, dass es im Reiche der Ethik noch viele verfallene Ruinen aus der Zeit unwidersprochener männlicher Oberherrschaft gäbe; Ruinen, die man noch als natürlich betrachtete. Und die Traurigste und Wichtigste dabei ist es, dass eine hübsche Anzahl sogenannter Emanzipierten tatsächlich unfähig ist, jene auszuharren. Jede Bewegung, welche als Zweck die Vernichtung bestehender Institutionen, und ihre Substituierung durch solche, welche mehr im Einklange mit dem Geiste des Fortschrittes stehen, besitzt, hat Anhänger, welche in der Theorie für die extremsten radikalen Ideen eintreten, in ihrer alltäglichen Praxis aber ganz dem nächsten besten Philister ähneln, wo dieser Anständigkeit vorspiegeln und nach der guten Meinung ihrer Gegner angeln.

Ganz derselbe Philister befindet sich auch im Lager der Frauenemanzipation. Sensationsjournalisten, Milch und Wasserliteraten haben sich bemüht, das emanzipierte Weib in Bildern darzustellen, welche die Herzen des ehrbaren Bürgers und seiner dummen Kumpane zu Berge stehen machen. Eine jede Teilnehmerin an der Frauenrechtsbewegung ward dargestellt als eine George Sand in all ihrer wilden Verachtung der Moral. Nichts war ihr heilig, die emanzipierte Frau bestand in den Augen und Darstellungen jener pornographischen Schriftsteller keine Achtung vor den idealen Beziehungen zwischen Mann und Weib. Kurz, die Emanzipation war das Synonym für ein sorgloses Leben der Wollust und Sünde, sehr kümmert um die Gesellschaft, Religion, Moral. Natürlich waren die Apostel der Frauenrechte ihrerseits heftig erbittert angesichts solcher Entstellungen; und — da sie des Humors ermangelten — strengten sie ihre ganze Energie dafür und darauf an, zu beweisen, dass sie im Gegenteil gewiss nicht so schlecht waren, als sie geschildert wurden. Gewiss, solange als die Frau der Sklave des Mannes war, konnte sie nicht gut und tugendhaft sein; doch nun, da sie frei und unabhängig, würde sie schon zeigen, wie brav sie in ihrem Betragen sein könne, welch eine läuternde Wirkung ihr Einfluss auf alle Gesellschaftseinrichtungen haben müsse. . . Wirklich, es muss gesagt werden, die Frauenrechtsbewegung hat viele alte Fesseln zerrissen, aber sie schmiedete auch neue. Diese grosse Bewegung wahrer Emanzipation begegnete unglücklicher Weise keiner grossen Gattung von Frauen, kühn und konsequent genug, um der Freiheit ins Antlitz zu blicken. Ihre kleinlichen, puritanisch frömmelnden Visionen verbannten den Mann als Störenfried und zweifelhaften Charakter aus der Tiefe ihres Gemütslebens. Der Mann als Geschlechtswesen durfte nicht geduldet werden, höchstens als Vater eines Kindes, da es schlechterdings nicht angeht einem Kinde das Leben zu schenken, ohne vorher einen Mann gehabt Kleinlichkeit trennt, Weite des Horizontes vereinigt. Wir wollen freimütig, grossmütig werden. Wir wollen vitale Angelegenheiten nicht übersehen, vielleicht deshalb, weil eine Masse von Kleinigkeiten und Trivialitäten sich vor uns aufthürmt. Die wahre, edle Auffassung der Beziehungen zwischen den Geschlechtern gestattet keine Sieger oder Besiegte. Sie erkennt bloss eine Sache an: sich grenzenlos zu geben, um sich wieder zu finden — reicher, voller, besser. Nur dies kann die gähnende Leere im Leben der Frau ausfüllen, kann die Tragödie der Frauenemanzipation verwandeln in Freude, grenzenlose Freude.

von

„L'Internationale. Documents et Souvenirs (1864-1878)." Par James Guillaume. Vol. I. Paris, 1905. IX, 302 pp. gr. 8vo. 4 francs.

Diejenigen, welche sich nur für grosse Bewegungen, bestimmte Resultate, praktische Politik interessieren, brauchen in dieses Buch nicht zu blicken, welches in jeder Weise dem üblichen Wunsche nach prompter, wenn auch oberflächlicher Information über das Wesen der „Internationalen Arbeiter-Association" entgegen kommt. Diejenigen jedoch, welche nachsinnen, historische Untersuchungen, die die Grundlage selbst der kleinsten historischen Tatsachenkenntnis bilden, zu würdigen wissen, werden diesen Band von James Guillaume's Memoiren mit Vergnügen lesen, ihn als einen der wenigen, ernst zu nehmenden Beiträge betrachten, die wir zu einer wirklichen Geschichte des Sozialismus besitzen.

Vierzig Jahre sind vergangen, seitdem die „Internationale" in St. Martins Hall in London, am 28. September 1864 gegründet wurde, und viele Züge der Organisation dieser Association erscheinen uns heute fast veraltet. Wer würde gegenwärtig an einen Generalrat denken, dessen Sitz sich in London befindet, dessen Aufgabe es wäre, die verschiedenen nationalen Gruppen zu vereinigen, ihre taktischen Schritte zu überwachen, usw.? Über diesen Generalrat bestehen zwei Legenden; die bourgeoise Legende, welche ihn die geheimnisvolle Macht einer Verschwörerzentrale besitzen lässt, die sozialdemokratische Legende, welche das Erbrecht von Karl Marx den Generalrat beherrschen, durch dieses Zwischenglied die gesammte Arbeiterbewegung der sechziger und des Anfangs der siebziger Jahre ihm unterworfen sein lässt. Die Wahrheit kann nur durch die vorsichtige Forschung gefunden werden, und das Resultat ist dann allerdings in Einklang mit dem gesunden Menschenverstand.

Von 1861-1869 mischte sich der Generalrat nicht in irgend wie bemerkenswerthem Massstabe in die kontinentale Bewegung und wurde aus diesem Grunde von der ganzen Association wohlwollend toleriert. Von 1869-1872, als seine Machtbefugnisse erweitert wurden, um dem Dinge doch etwas mehr Ansehen und Leben zu geben, missbrauchte der Generalrat seine Autorität, wie schliesslich zu erwarten war; da durch veranlasste er eine allgemeine Revolte innerhalb der „Internationale". Dieser Revolte ist unendlich viel Gutes zu danken, denn durch sie lernten die Mitglieder die Übel der Autorität erkennen, welche sogar dann unvermindert sind, wenn der Hebel der Autorität von Sozialrevolutionären angesetzt wird, denen das grösste Vertrauen entgegengebracht wurde. Der Anarchismus als eine Volksbewegung war die direkte Frucht dieser Revolte, welche ihre Mittelpunkte in den historischen Figuren von Marx und Bakunin fand, jedoch viele progressive Anhänger auf beiden Seiten besass. Als einer der ersten in den Vordersten Rängen der mit Bakunin gegen die Autorität in der „Internationale" kämpfenden Reihen, stand James Guillaume, unser gegenwärtiger Verfasser obigen Buches.

Die Einzelheiten dieses Kampfes sind von grösserem Interesse als die blosse interne Geschichte der Association. Dieses Kampfgetümmel drängt eigentlich wie die Erzählung über eine weit entlegene Utopie, welche ihre Darstellung im wirklichen Leben finden. Ich meine damit das Fallen der Die „Internationale" manifestierte alle die verschiedenen Typen der Sozialisten und Anarchisten jener Periode; und allgemein wurde geglaubt — anfangs von allen Parteien — dass irgend eine Art einer gerechten, endlichen Autorität, wie etwa jene des Generalrats, bestehen und gewahrt Sozialisten und Anarchisten daher notwendig und nützlich sei. Die tatsächliche Erfahrung bewies das Gegenteil und im Laufe des Widerstandes, später der Revolte gegen diese Autorität des Generalrates, wurden die Ideen des Anarchismus immer deutlicher und klarer ausgearbeitet und — in der Form einer freien Association, wie sie der internationale Kongress zu Gent, 1873, annahm — wirklich praktisch ausgeführt; einige Jahre später umschlossen die ganze Organisation sogar noch leichtere und freiere Vereinigungsbeziehungen. Der autoritäre Generalrat hingegen wurde im Jahre 1872 nach den Vereinigten Staaten verlegt. Dort schrumpfte er sehr bald zu einem absoluten Nichts zusammen, zu einer winzigen Mumie, die imstande zu irgend welcher ernsten Arbeit wurde und nur noch zum Zwecke interner Streitigkeiten und phantastischer Exkommunikationsschleudereien gegen den Rest der „Internationale", welche kaum etwas von seiner Existenz ahnte, weiterbestand, bis sein kleines Licht im Jahre 1876 vollständig erlosch. Es ist dies die interessanteste, lebendigste Utopie — die Widerlegung jeder Beherrschung durch tatsächliche Erfahrung.

Bis hierher konnte die Geschichte der „Internationale" aus dem „Memoire", einer Denkschrift, welche die jurassische Föderation den übrigen Föderationen — verfasst von James Guillaume im Jahre 1873 —

RUSSELL SAGE.

By EMMA GOLDMAN.

WHAT an indictment against Society! Impure and poisonous, indeed, must have been the soil that nurtured such a plant.

The champions of the capitalistic system assert that the majority will ever have to live in poverty and misery, and that millions of backs are to remain forever bent, to sustain the magnificent structure called civilization.

Were we all to toil to produce the mere necessities of life—they say—who would foster art, poetry, and literature? Surely, there must be a select few. By their culture and æstheticism, by their refinement and beauty, they illuminate and elevate those predestined to a life of darkness and despair.

Such is the philosophy of capitalism. But even this philosophy, absurd as it is, will fail to justify the life of Russell Sage. It would search in vain for even the faintest reflex of himself, or of his tremendous wealth, in the lives of those that dwell in the abyss.

Russell Sage! Accumulation, with him, was not a means, but rather the sole aim of life. The notion that the social mission of wealth is philanthropy and charity was brutally caricatured by the personality of this man. Not even his own life derived any benefit from his riches, let alone the lives of others. Indeed, he serves as the most striking proof of our social insanity, which suffers thousands to starve, that a few calculating human machines may pile dividends upon dividends.

Russell Sage undoubtedly considered himself indispensably valuable to society. Several years ago a man, crazed by poverty and exposure, came to his office with the intention of taking the valuable life of the great benefactor of the human family. Does a Sage outweigh the countless lives his greed has crushed?

When Uncle Russell realized the character of his visitor's mission, he acted in a truly Christian spirit. He called his secretary and placed him between himself and the attacker. Naturally, the bomb did not strike the right person. Sage was saved and continued to indulge in his criminal proclivities; the secretary remained a cripple for life. The most humble human being would have felt indebted to the savior of his life, but dear Russell would have reproached himself for the rest of his existence, were he to waste money on his poor victim. The latter carried the case to the courts. But where are the men in American Halls of Justice that would dare to decide against a Russell Sage?

He left a hundred million dollars, but the case of his victim is still pending in the courts.

Sage was the most worthy, most consistent representative of our system of robbery and theft. Unlike the dilettant philanthropists, such as Carnegie and Rockefeller, he never feigned any hypocritical humanitarianism. In this respect, at least, Sage was superior to the Oil King of Sunday-school fame, and to the Homestead slave-driver, immortalized by libraries and the blood-bath of July 6, 1892. He never donned the garb of beneficence. Had he undertaken the building of the Panama Canal, for instance, he would not have called it a work of progress and civilization. His keen eye would have beheld only the long row of figures and the profits.

If an artist had suggested a great masterpiece as a memorial, Russell would have shown him the door. Why this nonsensical enthusiasm for art and science? There is only one thing of consequence in life, and that is to "earn" the highest interest on money safely invested.

He was not far from the truth, with regard to his co-gamblers, Morgan, Rockefeller, and Carnegie. Probably he suspected that their pretended interest in art and science was but a feeble attempt to quiet their con-sciences. At least his attitude was more frank, more honest. And he was more self-centred. He was not so stupid as Morgan, who invests fortunes in poor copies of great masters, to the amusement of European artists and art connoisseurs.

This character-study of Russell Sage is, in a small measure, a portrayal of our social economy,—cold, cruel, heartless; with no other purpose than the accumulation of fortunes by the few, the grinding to death of the many.

JAMES'S VINDICATION OF ANARCHISM.

AN APPEAL.

Comrades and Friends:—

It has been the earnest desire of many of the former readers of Free Society to see the work entitled, "Vindication of Anarchism," by C. L. James, issued in book form. The comrades of Philadelphia, whose original suggestion was in a measure the occasion which called forth the work, have steadily kept this purpose in view ever since its serial appearance in Free Society, regarding it as one of the serious contributions to a fundamental literature of Anarchism. The creation of such a literature is, in our opinion, the most definite task we can assign ourselves under present material and intellectual conditions in America.

We, therefore, appeal to all who agree with us in this matter to help raise the funds necessary for the publication,—between $450 and $500. We suggest that wherever picnics, socials, or similar affairs are held, a proportion of the receipts be set aside for this purpose; and we feel assured that the undertaking can be accomplished in a comparatively short time, if all will concentrate their efforts to that end.

Send all contributions to N. Notkin, 2630 E. Lehigh street, Philadelphia. Acknowledgment will be made through the Demonstrator, Freiheit, and MOTHER EARTH; and as soon as the commencement of the work is justified, report will be given.

THE PROCURER'S ASSISTANT.

By A. T. HEIST.

WITH the progress of intellectual evolution in the individual, there comes a time which marks the budding perception of those wider human relations—which perception we inaccurately call the "social consciousness." By this ever broadening view of interdependence in human existence we come to look upon the courtesan as a victim of most cruel circumstances, and her business we regard as a direct attack upon womanhood and manhood. It follows almost naturally that the procurer who induces the final step, which is often but an escape from "virtuous" martyrdom to open shame, is regarded by us as the worst enemy of the social organism. In the feverish excitement of hysteria-inducing methods of reform agitation we often totally lose all our sense of perspective, and under the influence of the professional reformer's ranting we denounce the procurer as though he were the only reprehensible factor in the final wrong against society. We act as though, given a woman, all that is necessary to make a harlot is the addition of a procurer. When the proposition is thus stated, we all recognize its absurdity and the necessary existence of other conditions before the evil result is producible. The professional reformers are always ready to devise means, political or otherwise, by which they will earn a good living (more than $5.00 per week) through their, usually futile, efforts at restoring to "virtuous" living the "fallen" woman; but what methods more sane than hollow exhortation have they devised for destroying the producing cause of that hopeless state of mind which in most women is a condition precedent to their being listed among those who are about to "fall"?

We all read with absorbing interest the newspaper accounts of how a woman can be decent, dress well, pay car fare and live on five dollars a week. We may be entirely convinced that it is not only possible, but that many thousands actually accomplish that most difficult task, but the exacting conditions of such a life will sooner or later induce these unfortunate women to se-whole bearing child after child, as thousands of wives are doing all over the world. I should consider it a crime against my children.

If a woman associates in any way with any man who has so little respect for her and for her truthfulness that he cannot believe her word in regard to the paternity of her child, she should, if a truthful and self respecting woman, be anxious to break off such association immediately. No man, either in marriage or out, can have any assurance of his paternity other than his confidence in the truthfulness of the mother. And marriage by no means always gives that assurance. Many married men accuse their wives of attempted deceit, and yet the children continue to come!

If you have an impulse to help yourself to gloves when on shopping expeditions, and only the fear of being "caught" causes you to refrain from doing so, there will surely come a day when you will think no one is looking and you will "fall." There must be a higher and a better reason for self control than the fear of being "found out." That reason will often be ineffective. I have never told my child that god, ghost, devil, bugaboo or policeman would get her if she helped herself to the belongings of others. But if I thought there existed any good reason for any certain line of conduct I gave her that reason. For instance, there is a law against plucking flowers in the public parks. I have never even mentioned to her the existence of that law. But I told her that while it would be very pleasant if there were enough flowers in the parks for all to carry away all they cared for, yet, as there were not, the only way in which all could enjoy them is to leave them growing. By so doing we can all enjoy their beauty and fragrance, whereas if a few, in thoughtless selfishness, helped themselves, soon there would be none for any of us to enjoy. A policeman is not always in sight, but the inner sense of reason and justice can be always with us, and should be cultivated instead of the fear of bugaboos and policemen which is so universally instilled in the minds of little children, and of men and women children of larger growth as well.

As to your question regarding father's indorsement of E. V. Lamb's letter: He has not seen it, nor any issue of LUCIFER since last February. But it is not to be assumed that he agrees with everything which appears in LUCIFER, even when he is at home. One of his fundamental principles is his advocacy of the right of every one to "have his say in his own way," and he believes in making LUCIFER, so far as is possible in its small space, a free platform where all sides may be heard, leaving the reader free to choose that which may seem most reasonable. He has never been prosecuted for any of his own writings. Many people have gone to prison in defense of their right to express their own opinion, as the pilgrim fathers endured the privations of emigration in order to worship their god in their own way and force all others to do the same,- but I do not know of any one besides my father who has gone to prison for the right of others to express opinions at variance with his own.

As to the Japanese story, it was merely a picture of life as it is in Japan. It seemed to me of interest, showing as it does the evils which may result from the customs of parental choice and control of mating, and the abominable restrictions of caste, which prevent the open recognition of love relations between members of different castes. If I have on my walls a picture of a flame swept prairie it does not necessarily imply that I approve of the fire for burning. The engineer from whose engine the spark flew that ignited the grass may not be to blame. Yet the picture may be of interest, and we may moralize on the ways in which the catastrophe might have been prevented. And the Japanese picture will certainly arouse thought, or thereby its purpose will be served.

Reverting to the question of "impulse" again: I may feel impelled to make a trip to California with a woman friend. Certainly there is no law to prevent my yielding to that desire. But I would, of course, consider the circumstances and count the cost before starting. And if one should do so in regard to a matter so relatively trivial, why not be at least as prudent in relations which may invoke into being a new life, with its immeasurable possibilities of good or ill? It was Paul, the great law giver for women, was it not, who said, "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient"?

It is my opinion that "thirty impulses" should be eliminated. Do not forget that it is law which grants "license." And I maintain that if an impulse is in itself "dirty" it cannot be purified by the license of marriage.

In conclusion, and in regard to my name: My father and my mother gave me the name Lillian Harman when I was born, and it has pleased me sufficiently to leave me no desire to change it. My father was named George Harman, and he has kept his name, also though married." When people address him they have no doubt he has reached maturity, and so call him "Mr. Harman," and do not feel it necessary to ask if he is married and therefore entitled to the prefix "Mr." instead of "Master." Personally, I do not care whether I am called "Miss" or "Mrs.," but I think matters would be greatly simplified if all women were called "Mrs.," just as all men are called "Mr."

LILLIAN HARMAN.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR IN PRISON.

From a bundle of letters recently received from Leavenworth I select the following. Many others are equally interesting, and I would gladly print them if space would permit. The friendly writers may be sure that each letter is received and read with great pleasure, and that they do much to lighten the imprisonment:

My Dear Mr. Harman: I think we have the public mind well started. Shaw, Hurky and Comstock are doing great work in calling attention to the stupid prudery of our time. There is no weapon like ridicule against that sort of thing.

I hear you spoken of everywhere with the greatest admiration and affection, which I heartily share.

There was a splendid article, with cuts, in a late Evening Sun, New York, laughing at the raid on the Art School. Pleydell sent it to Lillian. These are great times to live, even in prison. Your friend,

BOLTON HALL.

The article referred to by Mr. Hall appeared in No. 1073 under the heading, "The Comstockian Renaissance." It was erroneously credited to the Sun instead of to the Evening Sun.

THE DAY OF REBELLION.

BY J. A. ANDREWS.

In the night of oppression and anguish,
When the hosts of the tyrants rule wide,
And the people but shudder and languish,
As they crouch from the furies of pride,
Comes a word of Revolt, whispered grimly,
Through the chaos of discord and fear,
Till the slaves and the despots feel dimly
That the Day of Rebellion is near.

They know not the day nor the year,
Yet soon shall its standards appear;
With defiance to rules and to rulers,
The Day of Rebellion is near.

It will come as the lightning from heaven;
As the wrath of the skies it will fall;
It will shatter, like bolt of the levin,
Harsh Monopoly's fortified wall;
It will dash down to dust and perdition,
With a crash that shall echo through time,
The twin monsters of Rule and Submission,
That have festered the world in their slime.

The Day of Rebellion is near,
With omens for tyrants to fear,
And defiance to rules and to rulers,
Wherever its standards appear.

THE TRAGEDY AT BUFFALO.

Reprinted from "Free Society," October, 1901.

For they starve the little frightened child
Till it weeps both night and day:
And they scorge the weak, and flog the fool,
And gibe the old and gray,
And some grow mad, and all grow bad,
And none a word may say.

—Oscar Wilde.

Never before in the history of governments has the sound of a pistol shot so startled, terrorized, and horrified the self-satisfied, indifferent, contented, and indolent public, as has the one fired by Leon Czolgosz when he struck down William McKinley, president of the money kings and trust magnates of this country.

Not that this modern Cæsar was the first to die at the hands of a Brutus. Oh, no! Since man has trampled upon the rights of his fellow men, rebellious spirits have been afloat in the atmosphere. Not that William McKinley was a greater man than those who throned upon the fettered form of Liberty. He did not compare either in intellect, ability, personality, or force of character with those who had to pay the penalty of their power. Nor will history be able to record his extraordinary kindness, generosity, and sympathy with those whom ignorance and greed have condemned to a life of misery, hopelessness, and despair.

Why, then, were the mighty and powerful thrown into such consternation by the deed of September 6? Why this howl of a hired press? Why such blood-thirsty and violent utterances from the clergy, whose usual business it is to preach "peace on earth and good will to all"? Why the mad ravings of the mob, the demand for rigid laws to curtail freedom of press and speech?

For more than thirty years a small band of parasites have robbed the American people, and trampled upon the fundamental principles laid down by the forefathers of this country, guaranteeing to every man, woman and child, "Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." For thirty years they have been increasing their wealth and power at the expense of the vast mass of workers, thereby enlarging the army of the unemployed, the hungry, homeless, and friendless portion of humanity, tramping the country from east to west and north to south, in a vain search for work. For many years the home has been left to the care of the little ones, while the parents are working their life and strength away for a small pittance. For thirty years the sturdy sons of America were sacrificed on the battlefield of industrial war, and the daughters outraged in corrupt factory surroundings. For long and weary years this process of undermining the nation's health, vigor, and pride, without much protest from the disinherited and oppressed, has been going on. Maddened by success and victory, the money-powers of this "free land of ours" became more and more audacious in their heartless, cruel efforts to compete with rotten and decayed European tyrannies in supremacy of power.

With the minds of the young poisoned with a perverted conception of patriotism, and the fallacious notion that all are equal and that each one has the same opportunity to become a millionaire (provided he can steal the first hundred thousand dollars), it was an easy matter indeed to check the discontent of the people; one is therefore not surprised when one hears Americans say, "We can understand why the poor Russians kill their czar, or the Italians their king, for think of the conditions that prevail there; but he who lives in a republic, where each one has the opportunity to become President of the United States (provided he has a powerful party back of him), why shoul he attempt such acts? We are the people, and acts of violence in this country are impossible."

And now that the impossible has happened, that even America has given birth to the man who struck down the king of the republic, they have lost their heads, and are shouting vengeance upon those who for years have shown that the conditions here were beginning to be alarming, and unless a halt be called, despotism would set its heavy foot on the hitherto relatively free limbs of the people.

In vain have the mouthpieces of wealth denounced Leon Czolgosz as a foreigner; in vain they are making the world believe that he is the product of European conditions, and influenced by European ideas. This time the "assassin" happens to be the child of Columbia, who lulled him to sleep with

"My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty," etc.,

and who held out the hope to him that he, too, could become President of the country. Who can tell how many times this American child has gloried in the celebration of the 4th of July, or on Decoration Day, when he faithfully honored the nation's dead? Who knows but what he, too, was willing to "fight for his country and die for her liberty"; until it dawned upon him that those he belonged to have no country, because they have been robbed of all that they have produced; until he saw that all the liberty and independence of his youthful dreams are but a farce. Perhaps he also learned that it is nonsense to talk of equality between those who have all and those who have nothing, hence he rebelled.

"But his act was mad and cowardly," says the ruling class. "It was foolish and impractical," echo all petty reformers, Socialists, and even some Anarchists.

What absurdity! As if an act of this kind can be measured by its usefulness, expediency, or practicability. We might as well ask ourselves of the usefulness of a cyclone, tornado, a violent thunderstorm, or the ceaseless fall of the Niagara waters. All these forces are the natural results of natural causes, which we may not yet have been able to explain, but which are nevertheless a part of nature, just as all force is natural and part of man and beast, developed or checked, according to the pressure of conditions and man's understanding. An act of violence is therefore not only the result of conditions, but also of man's psychical and physical nature, and his susceptibility to the world surrounding him.

Does not the summer fight against the winter, does it not resist, mourn, and weep oceans of tears in its eager attempt to shield its children from the icy grip of frost? And does not the winter enshroud Mother Earth with a white, hard cover, lest the warm spring sunshine should melt the heart of the hardened old gentleman? And does he not gather his last forces for a bitter and fierce battle for supremacy, until the burning rays of the sun disperse his ranks?

Resistance against force is a fact all through nature. Man being part of nature, he, too, is swayed by the same force to defend himself against invasion. Force will continue to be a natural factor just so long as economic slavery, social superiority, inequality, exploitation, and war continue to destroy all that is good and noble in man.

That the economic and political conditions of this country have been pregnant with the embryo of greed and despotism, no one who thinks and has closely watched events can deny. It was, therefore, but a question of time for the first signs of labor pains to begin. And they began when McKinley, more than any other President, had betrayed the trust of the people, and became the tool of the moneyed kings. They began when he and his class had stained the memory of the men who produced the Declaration of Independence, by the blood of the massacred Filipinos. They grew more violent at the recollection of Hazelton, Virden, Idabo, and other places, where capital has waged war on labor; until on the 6th of September the child begotten, nourished and reared by violence, was born.

That violence is not the result of conditions only, but also largely depends upon man's inner nature, is best proven by the fact that while thousands loath tyranny, but one will strike down a tyrant. What is it that drives him to commit the act, while others pass quietly by? It is because the one is of such a sensitive nature that he will feel a wrong more keenly and with greater intensity than others.

It is, therefore, not cruelty, or a thirst for blood, or any other criminal tendency, that induces such a man to strike a blow at organized power. On the contrary, it is mostly because of a strong social instinct, because of an abundance of love and an overflow of sympathy with the pain and sorrow around us, a love which seeks refuge in the embrace of mankind, a love so strong that it shrinks before no consequence, a love so broad that it can never be wrapped up in one object, as long as thousands perish, a love so all-absorbing that it can neither calculate, reason, investigate, but only dare at all costs.

It is generally believed that men prompted to put the dagger or bullet in the cowardly heart of government, were men conceited enough to think that they will thereby liberate the world from the fetters of despotism. As far as I have studied the psychology of an act of violence, I find that nothing could be further away from the thought of such a man than that if the king were dead, the mob will cease to shout "Long live the king!"

The cause for such an act lies deeper, far too deep for the shallow multitude to comprehend. It lies in the fact that the world within the individual, and the world around him, are two antagonistic forces, and, therefore, must clash.

Do I say that Czolgosz is made of that material? No. Neither can I say that he was not. Nor am I in a position to say whether or not he is an Anarchist; I did not know the man; no one as far as I am aware seems to have known him, but from his attitude and behavior so far (I hope that no reader of "Free Society" has believed the newspaper lies), I feel that he was a soul in pain, a soul that could find no abode in this cruel world of ours, a soul "impractical," inexpedient, lacking in caution (according to the dictum of the wise); but daring just the same, and I cannot help but bow in reverent silence before the power of such a soul, that has broken the narrow walls of its prison, and has taken a daring leap into the unknown.

Having shown that violence is not the result of personal influence, or one particular ideal, I deem it unnecessary to go into a lengthy theorctical discussion as to whether Anarchism contains the element of force or not. The question has been discussed time and again, and it is proven that Anarchism and violence are as far apart from each other as liberty and tyranny. I care not what the rabble says; but to those who are still capable of understanding I would say that Anarchism, being a philosophy of life, aims to establish a state of society in which man's inner make-up and the conditions around him, can blend harmoniously, so that he will be able to utilize all the forces to enlarge and beautify the life about him. To those I would also say that I do not advocate violence; government does this, and force begets force. It is a fact which cannot be done away with through the prosecution of a few men and women, or by more stringent laws—this only tends to increase it.

Violence will die a natural death when man will learn to understand that each unit has its place in the universe, and while being closely linked together, it must remain free to grow and expand.

Some people have hastily said that Czolgosz's act was foolish and will check the growth of progress. Those worthy people are wrong in forming hasty conclusions. What results the act of September 6 will have no one can say; one thing, however, is certain: he has wounded government in its most vital spot. As to stopping the wheel of progress, that is absurd. Ideas cannot be retarded by restraint. And as to petty police persecution, what matter?

As I write this, my thoughts wander to the death-cell at Auburn, to the young man with the girlish face, about to be put to death by the coarse, brutal hands of the law, walking up and down the narrow cell, with cold, cruel eyes following him,

"Who watch him when he tries to weep
And when he tries to pray;
Who watch him lest himself should rob
The prison of its prey."

And my heart goes out to him in deep sympathy, and to all the victims of a system of inequality, and the many who will die the forerunners of a better, nobler, grander life.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

A REMINISCENCE.

By ALEXANDER BERKMAN.

If they would but linger awhile, these last rays of the sinking sun. I'll press my face closely to the cold bars—shine on me a little, caress me a bit—there is warmth, there is cheer in these rays.

Yet they look so pale, so unsteady; oh, they are fading—like the hope of one condemned to die.

To die? Yes.... Is it really so hard to die? Hard? Are these walls not harder? And this barred door less cruel than death? And is not either more merciful than this life with its terrible cruelty, the cruelty of suffocating sameness. It stifles me, it chills my being. They have built these walls on my heart; the iron bars pierce my soul. I cannot bear it, I cannot....

Unconsciously my look wanders through the cell; my eyes take in every sickly-familiar detail—the iron bed, the table, the chair. Oh, not even the freedom of death is left me....

Nothing but walls. Oh, but beyond this rocky silence there is life; there are voices, there is activity, there is motion—there's freedom, life there! Yes, and they struggle, they breathe, they live there. ....If I were only there! I would show them a Man, a man of blood and muscle, palpitating flesh, energy, action. How I would fight and struggle, fight and fight. Joyfully I would welcome the mountain in my path, that I may climb it; and if it be steep, I should rejoice in it; and if I slip and fall,—in rising lies my strength; and I shall, I will climb on and on. That means life; to struggle with Titans; no, not to conquer, but to struggle.

If I were but there! Yet here, solid rocks of gray and moving rocks in blue that deaden the quick and torture the dead. Beyond this barred silence the sky is blue and songbirds thrill the woods, and the redbreast calls his mate. Yet I remember, once I saw a bluebird imprisoned in a cage. Some thoughtless boy had put it there, unmindful of its pain. Poor little bird! Desperately it fluttered from side to side, vainly beating against the cruel bars. The look of despair that shone in those eyes. . . . . That night I woke from sleep, crying.

stellung hatte, dieser Hölle müsse irgendwo eine unversöhnliche Kampfgenossenschaft gegenüber stehen, die entschlossen sei, ihrem Teufelswerk, das die Menschen schändete und irre führte, ein Ende zu machen.

Er sehnte sich nach dem Anschluss an Gleichgesinnte, fand aber in den verschiedenen Gruppirungen der Arbeiterbewegung, denen er sich näherte, Zerwürfnisse, persönliche Zwistigkeiten, Kleinlichkeit, Mangel an Muth und Initiative. So reifte in dem Alleinstehenden der Wille zu eigenen freien That, die seiner Empfindung Laut und Ausdruck schaffen würde und von der er sich vielleicht auch eine Aufrüttelung der trägen Massen versprach.

Ausser diesen Gründen gab es noch andere Ursachen, die ein intimeres Eingehen auf seinen Charakter und seine Motive verhinderten.

Was nach der Gefangennahme von Jesus passirte, dass Petrus, der sonst ein Eiferer war, den Meister verrieth und dessen Feinden versicherte, dass er diesen Staatsverbrecher nie gekannt habe, das hat Jeder zu erwarten, der sein Leben für die Erfüllung eines grossen Gefühls oder für die Verwirklichung eines grossen Gedankens hinwirft.

Diese Erfahrung mit dem Menschlich Allzumenschlichen wiederholte sich auch nach dem Schuss in Buffalo. Nur wenige Versuche wurden gemacht, die That aus der Zeit heraus zu erklären, sie als die Explosion eines unter dem Druck unerträglicher Zustände zuckenden Menschenherzens zu verstehen. Viel leichter war es, die Frage zu beschwatzen, ob sie von einem „normalen Menschen" oder von einem Wahnsinnigen begangen worden sei. Es ist wohl selten vorgekommen, dass ein Mensch so völlig verlassen vor kalten Richtern, die das Todesurtheil schon in die Sitzung mitbrachten, gestanden ist, wie Leon Czolgosz. Das hat ihn nicht gehindert, sich aufrecht und einfach zu halten bis an's Ende.

In einem Artikel der „Free Society", den Emma Goldman schrieb, wurde damals das Menschlichste und Muthigste zur Sache gesagt. Es verdient dies hervorgehoben zu werden, weil die Horde der Staats- und Press-Detektives auf's Eifrigste bemüht war, gerade die Verfasserin mit dem Schuss in Buffalo in engste Verbindung zu bringen. (Die Leser finden eine Uebersetzung des Artikels als einer Reminiscenz aus jenen Tagen in dieser Nummer der „Freiheit".)

Auf mich hat die That von Czolgosz immer gewirkt, wie die Zerreissung eines Schleiers, der die Wahrheit trügerisch verhüllen soll. Lange wurde die Illusion gepflegt, dass die Ver. Staaten-Republik als ein „Land der Freien" über den Kämpfen zwischen Reich und Arm, zwischen dem alten und neuen socialen Ideal stehe.

Den leisen Mahnungen aus der Tiefe, dass da unten grausiges Elend der Leiber und Seelen herrschte, dass Millionen Hände sich um Rettung erheben, wurde die Formel entgegengesetzt: „Hier hat Jedermann die gleiche Möglichkeit zum Vorwärtskommen; eine Arbeiterfrage giebt es in diesem Lande nicht." Auf jedes sociale Geschwür wurde die leerer und leerer werdende politische Freiheitsphrase geklebt. Als ein Verbrecher an den „freien Institutionen" wurde derjenige betrachtet, der behauptete, die politische Freiheit sei nichts weiter als ein elender Betrug, wenn sie von socialer und ökonomischer Sklaverei begleitet sei.

Das klang aus dem Echo des Schusses in Buffalo heraus. McKinley fiel als der erste Repräsentant einer Republik, die es als ihre vornehmste Aufgabe betrachtet, mit ihren Mitteln der Gewalt die Herrschaft, den Besitz der Wenigen gegen die darbenden Vielen zu vertheidigen.

Diese Mission des Staates, die Ansprüche von unten her brutal niederzuschlagen, trat mit einer grösseren Deutlichkeit zu Tage, je gieriger sich die Rentenmacher der Finanz und Industrie auf das Land stürzten, um seine Reichthümer an [illegible] zu raffen.

In den achtziger Jahren wird eine Bewegung unter den Arbeitern zur Erringung des Achtstundentages [illegible] Haufe Männer, die unter den Arbeitern [illegible] tierisch [illegible] in Chicago zum Tode [illegible] verurtheilt.

Unter dem Pr[illegible]schaft [illegible] die Bundes[illegible] ganz [illegible] als Gr[illegible] gegen streikende Arbeiter verwandt. Kapitalisten telegraphiren nach Washington, man solle ihnen Bundesmilitär gegen the Streikenden senden, und man beeilt sich im Kapitol, ihren Wunsch zu erfüllen. Der letzte wirkliche Demokrat in der amerikanischen Politik, John Peter Altgeld, protestirt als Gouverneur von Illinois gegen den Einmarsch von Bundestruppen in das Streikgebiet von Chicago und Pullman, was viel mit dazu beiträgt, dass er später von beiden grossen Parteien mit dem politischen Bann belegt wird. Was, der Staat soll nicht der blutige Handlanger der Monopolisten à la Pullman sein? Unsinn, dann hätte er ja ganz und gar seinen Beruf verfehlt. Das McKinley-Regime erwies sich noch zuvorkommender gegen die Geldmacht. Metzeleien unter streikenden Arbeitern, von Bundesschergen verübt, wurden fast etwas Alltägliches. Die Republik demaskirte sich schamlos. Desto mehr gestärkte und geplättete Würde und Salbung zeigte ihr Präsident McKinley. Die Corruption und servile Kriecherei vor dem goldenen Götzen steckte unter dem feierlichen schwarzen Staatsrock, wie denn überhaupt dieser Präsident der ideale Repräsentant der heimlichen Könige der Republik war. Das Pfaffische in seinem Wesen eignete sich ausnehmend gut zur Bedeckung der inneren Fäulniss der Republik. Er glich einem jener würdigen Portiers, die in strammer Haltung und Livree vor den Palästen reicher Leute auf- und abgehen, die Respektabilität — oft nichts als verdeckte Gemeinheit — ihrer Herrschaft schon von Weitem ankündigend.

Aus diesem Milieu heraus sind Czolgosz und seine That zu verstehen. Das hat vor fünf Jahren auch Mancher gefühlt, es aber nicht ausgesprochen. Rein im Wollen und in den Motiven tritt seine Gestalt aus der stickigen socialen Atmosphäre heraus. Reiner, wie seine Ankläger und Richter es wünschten. Es ist nichts unversucht gelassen worden, ihn als eine niedrige Creatur erscheinen zu lassen. Der „Nation" musste doch der Glaube beigebracht werden, dass nur ein Auswurf der Menschheit solche That begehen konnte. Man hat mit schmutzigen Händen in seinem Innersten herumgewühlt, um ihn zu verächtlichen Aussagen zu bewegen. Es wurde gelogen, er habe ausgesagt, eine Rede von Emma Goldman habe ihn zu der That angespornt. Mit jämmerlichem Behagen erzählten die Blätter, dass man dem von der Aussenwelt völlig Abgeschlossenen gesagt habe, die erwähnte Genossin habe von ihm mit Verachtung gesprochen, ihn Tramp, Schwindler geheissen.

Diese Spitzel- und Reporter-Lügen fallen in sich selbst zusammen. Hätte Czolgosz auch nur mit einem Wort gesagt, dass ihn zu der That ein Vortrag Emma Goldman's „angestiftet" habe, es wäre damals vollauf genügend gewesen, die Genossin der intellektuellen Urheberschaft, der Theilnahme an einem Mord anzuklagen und zu verurtheilen. Aber das war ja gerade der Aerger der gierigen Jäger, dass aus dem Verhalten von Czolgosz nicht der kleinste Beweis dafür geschöpft werden konnte, dass er in Verbindung mit Anderen seine That vollbrachte.

Auch haben Augenzeugen, die der Gerichtsfarce beiwohnten, versichert, dass Czolgosz nichts ausgesagt habe, das irgendwie die gemeine Insinuation der Polizei bestätigt hätte. Seine Worte waren etwa: „Ich kümmere mich nicht darum, was über mich gesagt wird. Ich habe die That allein begangen, ich habe es für das Volk gethan." Zu den meisten an ihn [illegible] schwieg er. Eine Dame, [illegible] Bekannte in der Verhandlung [illegible] war, hat später erzählt, [illegible] sie von [illegible] Anblick Czolgosz's so [illegible] keine Ruhe [illegible] fand. Er sei vor seinen Richtern [illegible] gestanden, der von [illegible] nicht mehr berührt werden kann.

Er mag in der Fe[illegible]morgenröthe gesehen haben, die den neuen Tag verkündet, der die Menschheit zu neuen Ufern lockt.

Mit leiser Freundeshand legen wir heute einen Strauss Immortellen auf sein Grab.

Mit Hunger strafen sie das Kind,
Dass es weinet immerfort,
Die Blöden, Schwachen peitschen sie,
Und Keiner sagt ein Wort.
Der krankt vor Groll, und der wird toll,
Und schlecht wird Jeder dort.

Oscar Wilde.

Nie vorher hat in der Geschichte der Regierungen der Knall eines Pistolenschusses die Selbstzufriedenen, Gleichgültigen und Indolenten so aufgeschreckt, aus ihrer trägen Ruhe geschleudert, als der Schuss von Leon Czolgosz es that, der William McKinley, den Prasidenten der Finanzkönige und Trustmagnaten dieses Landes, niederstreckte.

Nicht, dass dieser der erste Cäsar war, der durch die Hand von Brutus fiel. Oh, nein! Seit es Menschen giebt, welche die Rechte ihrer Mitmenschen mit Füssen treten, weht der Geist der Rebellion durch die Welt. Auch nicht, dass William McKinley ein grösserer Mann war, wie jene Tyrannen, die uber der gefesselten Gestalt der Freiheit ihren Thron errichteten, verursachte das Entsetzen. Weder durch Geist, Fähigkeit, Persönlichkeit, Charakterstarke zeichnete er sich aus. Auch wird die Geschichte wenig von seiner Herzensgüte oder von seiner Sympathie mit Jenen zu berichten haben, die Unwissenheit und Gier zu einem Leben in Elend, Hoffnungslosigkeit und Kummer verurtheilen.

Warum denn also wurden die Mächtigen und Sedbstzufriedenen durch die That vom 6. September so in Aufregung versetzt? Warum dieses Berserker-Geheul einer käuflichen Presse? Warum diese blutdürstigen, wutherfüllten Racheschreie der Priesterschaft, deren Beruf es angeblich sein soll, Frieden und den Willen Gottes auf Erden zu verkündigen? Warum dieses wahnsinnige Gebahren des patriotischen Pöbels, dieses brutale Schreien nach Blutgesetz und Henker, nach Erdrosselung des etwa noch vorhandenen Stückchens der Rede- und Pressfreiheit?

Seit länger als dreissig Jahren hat eine der Zahl nach geringe Bande von Parasiten das amerikanische Volk geplündert, auf jene von den Vätern der Republik niedergelegten Prinzipien gespuckt und getreten, die jedem Mann, Frau und Kind das Recht auf Freiheit und Lebensglück garantiren. Seit dreissig Jahren hat diese Bande unerhörte Reichthümer aufgehäuft und sich eine tyrannische Gewalt über die arbeitenden Volksmassen zugeeignet. Die Armee der Arbeitslosen, der Obdachlosen und Hungrigen nimmt jedes Jahr an Umfang zu. Sie ziehen von Nord nach Süd, von Ost nach West in vergeblicher Suche nach Beschäftigung und Brod. Zahllose Heimstätten sind verwahrlost. Für elenden Lohn arbeiten Mann und Frau in den Knochenmühlen und müssen mit blutendem Herzen den Kindern die Sorge für die Bestellung des Hauswesens überlassen. Die starken Söhne der amerikanischen Erde werden auf dem Schlachtfeld der Industrie hingeopfert, während die Töchter in der korrumpirenden Atmosphäre der Fabriken und Verkaufshäuser den Niedrigkeiten des Lebens preisgegeben sind. Und dieses Alles vollzieht sich, ohne dass die Enterbten und Unterjochten starken Protest dagegen erheben. So wird die Geldmacht in „unserem freien Lande" frecher und frecher, herzloser und skrupelloser. Sie arbeitet darauf hin, die Zustände in dieser Republik den Zuständen in den verfaulten, absterbenden Tyranneien Europas gleichzumachen.

Die Köpfe der Jugend mit einer verlogenen patriotischen Ueberhebung und mit der falschen Vorstellung angefüllt, dass in diesem Lande Alle gleich sind und die gleiche Möglichkeit haben, Millionäre zu werden (vorausgesetzt, dass es gelingt, die ersten hunderttausend Dollars zu stehlen), war es leicht, die Unzufriedenheit des Volkes nach falschen Richtungen hin abzuleiten. Daraus wird es verständlich, Amerikaner etwa sagen zu hören: „Wir verstehen es, wenn die armen, geknechteten Russen dem Zaren an's Leben wollen, oder die Italiener ihren König hassen, denn die dort herrschenden Zustände machen das verständlich. Aber wir leben in einer Republik, in der jeder Bürger Präsident werden kann (vorausgesetzt, dass er eine starke Partei hinter sich hat). Hier haben die Akte der Gewalt keine Berechtigung. Hier ist das Volk sein eigener Herr, hier giebt es keine Tyrannen mit Gewalt zu beseitigen."

Und nun, da das anscheinend Unmögliche doch stattgefunden hat, da auch Amerika den Mann hervorbrachte, der den König der Republik niederstreckte, hat man den Kopf verloren und weiss sich keinen anderen Rath, als sinnlose Rache gegen die Leute zu schnauben, die schon vor Jahren darauf hinwiesen, dass auch hier die Zustände unerträglich werden müssen, wenn dem Despotismus kein Halt zugerufen wird.

Vergeblich haben die Wortführer der herrschenden socialen Ungerechtigkeit Leon Czolgosz als einen Ausländer zu stempeln versucht; vergebliche Mühe, dass sie die Welt glauben machen wollten, er sei ein Produkt europäischer Verhältnisse. Diesmal geschah es, dass der „Attentäter" ein Sohn Columbias ist, die ihn mit dem Vers einlullte:

"My country, 'tis of thee,

und ihm auch die Möglichkeit, Präsident zu werden, in die Wiege legte. Wer kann sagen, wie oft dieses Kind Columbias sich an dem Feuerwerk des glorreichen Vierten Juli, oder an den Feierlichkeiten des Gräberschmückungs-Tages begeistert hat? Wer weiss, ob es sich nicht auch das Versprechen gegeben hat, „für das Land und seine Freiheit zu kämpfen", bis ihm eines Tages die Erkenntniss aufging, dass die Gesellschaftsschicht, zu der er gehörte, kein Vaterland hat, dass man ihr geraubt hat, was sie hervorbrachte. Da mag er begriffen haben, dass die Freiheit und Unabhängigkeit, von welcher er in jugendlichem Enthusiasmus geträumt hatte, nichts weiter war als eine Farce. Dann wurde es ihm auch klar, dass es eine gleissnerische Lüge ist, von Gleichheit zwischen denen zu reden, von welchen einige Alles und die meisten nichts besitzen. War es ein Wunder, dass er zum Rebellen wurde!

„Aber die That ist wahnsinnig und feige," sagen die Vertreter der satten Moral; „sie ist kindisch und unpraktisch," stammeln die kleinlichen Reformer, die Socialisten und sogar Anarchisten.

Wie absurd! Als ob eine That, wie diese, nach ihrer Nützlichkeit, nach ihrem praktischen Ergebniss bemessen werden kann! Wir mögen mit demselben Recht nach der Nützlichkeit eines Donnersturmes fragen. Wie dieser die natürliche Wirkung natürlicher Ursachen ist, die wir in vollem Umfange vielleicht noch nicht kennen, so ist auch diese That als eine Wirkung bestimmter socialer Ursachen zu betrachten. Sie ist gleichzeitig begründet in des Menschen physischem und seelischem Wesen, in der groben oder feinen Art, wie die Dinge, seine eigene und die allgemeine Lage seiner Mitmenschen auf ihn wirken.

Kämpft nicht der Frühling gegen den Winter, widersteht dieser nicht mit aller Kraft seiner Entthronung, weint die Erde dabei nicht Thränen und trauert sie nicht, bis endlich die warmen Sonnenstrahlen den Schnee und den eisigen Ring um ihren Körper zum Schmelzen bringen?

Der Widerstand gegen Gewalt ist in der ganzen Natur verbreitet. Der Mensch ist ein Theil der Natur, und so ist auch ihm die Kraft zum Widerstand gegeben, dass er sich gegen die Unterjochung seiner Menschlichkeit wehrhaft vertheidigen möge. Das auch ist Gewalt und sie wird solange sich Luft verschaffen, wie ökonomische Sklaverei, sociale Hirarchie, Ungleichheit, Ausbeutung und Krieg bestehen bleiben.

Dass die ökonomischen und politischen Zustände dieses Landes die Gier nach Ausbeutung, Despotie des Besitzes und Geldes erzeugt haben, kann Niemand bestreiten, der denken und beobachten kann. Es war nur eine Frage der Zeit, wenn diese Bastarde Allen sichtbar, das helle Tageslicht erblicken würden. Das geschah unter McKinley's Präsidentschaft. Sie täuschte grob das Vertrauen des Volkes und erwies sich offener, wie je ein Präsidium vorher, als ein Werkzeug in den Händen der Finanzkönige. Was einst in der Unabhängigkeits-Erklärung festgelegt worden war, wurde in Fetzen zerrissen. Der Raub der Philippinen, das Abschlachten der widerstrebenden Insulaner bezeichneten den Beginn der kapitalistisch-imperialistischen Aera. Blutbäder, unter streikenden Arbeitern angerichtet, wie die bei Hazelton, Virden, in Idaho, zeigten die rothen Spuren dieser Aera. So wurde durch Gewalt und Niedertretung der Menschenrechte die That vom 6. September geboren.

Allerdings, die Gewalt, die von unten herauf der Gewalt von oben antwortet, ist nicht allein die Folge äusserer Verhältnisse; sie hat ebenso viel mit dem inneren Wesen des Menschen zu thun. Tausende fluchen der Tyrannei, aber nur Einer führt den Schlag gegen den Tyrannen. Was ist es, das ihn zu der That treibt, da doch hundert Andere in Passivität verharren? Dieser Eine ist in seinem Wesen zarter organisirt; er fühlt das Unrecht schärfer, das Leiden intensiver wie die Anderen.

Es ist nicht Grausamkeit, nicht Blutdurst, oder irgend eine andere Art „verbrecherischer Tendenz", die ihn zu dem Schlag gegen die organisirte Gewalt treiben. Im Gegentheil, das Motiv ist ein starker socialer Instinkt, eine Ueberfülle an Liebe und Sympathie mit den Leiden der Mitmenschen; eine Liebe so stark und die ganze Persönlichkeit durchdringend, dass sie die Berechnung verschmäht, ihr Wesen nur in einer That enthüllen kann, die den Einsatz des Lebens fordert.

Gewöhnlich wird angenommen, dass Menschen, die sich entschliessen, einen Dolch oder eine Kugel in das feige Herz der regierenden Gewalt zu senden, zu diesem Entschluss getrieben werden durch den Gedanken, dass sie damit die Welt von den Fesseln des Despotismus befreien werden. Soweit ich die Psychologie solcher Thaten durchschauen kann, liegt ihnen die Annahme, dass nach der Beseitigung eines Königs der Mob nicht mehr schreien wird: „Der König ist todt; es lebe der König," völlig fern.

Die Ursachen liegen tiefer, so tief, dass die Vorstellungskraft der hirnarmen Menge sie nicht erfassen kann. Sie liegen in der Disharmonie begründet, die zwischen dem sensitiven, selbstbewussten Individuum und den unerträglichen socialen Zuständen entstehen muss. Diese Disharmonie führt in manchen Fällen unvermeidlich zu einer rebellischen Erhebung der Individualität gegen die Gesellschaft.

Sage ich, dass Czolgosz eine solche Individualität ist? Nein. Ebensowenig wie ich sagen kann, dass er eine solche Persönlichkeit nicht ist. Auch bin ich nicht in der Lage, zu wissen, ob er ein Anarchist ist oder nicht. Ich habe den Mann nicht gekannt, soweit ich sehen kann, hat Niemand ihn gekannt. (Ich hoffe, dass kein Leser der „Free Society" an die Lügen der Zeitungen glauben wird.) Ich fühle nur, dass hier eine Seele in grosser Pein aufschrie, eine Seele, die kein Heim in dieser harten Welt finden konnte; eine Seele, „unpraktisch", ohne Vorsicht (nach der Ansicht der Weisen), aber nichtsdestoweniger Alles für ihr Gefühl wagend und einsetzend. Ich kann nicht anders als mich schweigend vor solcher Seelenkraft zu beugen, welche die engen Mauern ihres Gefängnisses durchbrochen hat, um einen Flug in das Unbekannte anzutreten.

Ich habe gezeigt, dass die Gewalt nicht das Resultat von persönlichem Einfluss ist, oder durch die Bekennerschaft zu einem Ideal hervorgerufen wird. Damit wird es überflüssig, die Frage lang und breit auszuspinnen, ob der Anarchismus die Gewaltanwendung in sich einschliesst oder nicht. Ich kümmere mich nicht darum, was der Geistespöbel sagt, aber zu denen, die verstehen können, möchte ich sagen, dass der Anarchismus, der eine das ganze Menschenleben umfassende Philosophie ist, dahin strebt, einen Gesellschaftszustand zu schaffen, in welchem das innerste Wesen des Individuums in Harmonie mit den äusseren Zuständen sein kann, was einer Emporhebung des Menschen, einer Verschönerung des Daseins gleichkommt. Zu diesen will ich auch sagen, dass ich nicht Gewalt predige. Der Staat brütet die Gewalt aus, und Gewalt zeugt wieder Gewalt. Die Verfolgungen von Männern und Frauen, welche gegen diese Brutstätte der Gewalt die Stimmen erheben, ändern an der Sache nichts, sie können den Kampf nur erbitterter und schärfer werden lassen.

Die Gewalt wird eines natürlichen Todes sterben, wenn die Menschheit begriffen haben wird, dass jedes Wesen in seiner Art einen Platz im Universum hat. Und wenn es auch mit den anderen Wesen solidarisch verbunden ist, so muss ihm doch Spielraum für das eigene Wachsen gewährt werden.

Manche haben gesagt, die That von Czolgosz sei dazu geeignet, den Fortschritt aufzuhalten. Das sind Schlussfolgerungen ohne Grund. Welche Resultate die That nach sich ziehen wird, kann jetzt noch Niemand sagen. Eins aber ist sicher: Der Schuss hat die herrschende Gewalt an ihrer empfindlichsten Stelle getroffen. Der Fortschritt wird dadurch nicht gehindert. Ideen kann man nicht mit Gewalt unterdrücken. Und die kleinlichen Polizei-Machinationen und Verfolgungen, sie können uns wahrlich keinen Augenblick irre machen.

Während ich dies schreibe, wandern meine Gedanken nach der Todeszelle in Auburn, zu dem jungen Menschen mit dem mädchenhaften Gesicht, der kraft der brutalen Gewalt des Gesetzes in den Tod gesandt werden soll. Er geht in seiner Zelle auf und nieder, kalte, grausame Augen folgen ihm:

„Und sonst sass er, von Wächtern scharf
Beobacht', Tag und Nacht,
Beobacht', wenn er weinend stand,
Wenn betend er gewacht,
Beobacht', dass er dem Schaffot
Den Raub nicht streitig macht."

Und mein Herz wendet sich ihm zu in tiefer Sympathie, wie es sich auch allen anderen Opfern dieses furchtbaren Systems der socialen Ungleichheit zuneigt und auch denen, die noch sterben werden als die Vorkämpfer und Verkünder eines besseren, edleren, grösseren Lebens.

POLICE BRUTALITY.

Liberty by the grace of the police and the might of the club was again brought home to us in the most brutal and unspeakable manner. A club of young boys and girls, peaceably assembled Saturday night, October 27th, to listen to a discourse as to whether or not Leon Czolgosz was an Anarchist. At the close of the meeting three of the speakers—Julius Edelson, M. Moscow, and M. Rubinstein—were arrested and placed under $1,000 bail each. Tuesday, October 30th, a meeting was called to protest against the arrest of these boys and the suppression of free speech. Mr. Bolton Hall, H. Kelly, Max Baginski and myself were announced to speak. The meeting proceeded in absolute order, with Julius Edelson, who had meanwhile been released on bail through Mr. Bolton Hall, as the first speaker. He had spoken barely twenty minutes when several detectives jumped on the platform and placed him under arrest, while twenty-five police officers began to club the audience out of the hall. A young girl of eighteen, Pauline Slotnikoff, was pulled off a chair and brutally dragged across the floor of the hall, tearing her clothing and bruising her outrageously. Another girl, fourteen years of age, Rebecca Edelson, was roughly handled and put under arrest, because she failed to leave the hall as quickly as ordered. The same was done to three other women—Annie Pastor, Rose Rogin, and Lena Smitt—for no other reason except that they were unable to reach the bottom of the stairs fast enough to suit the officers. I was about to leave when one of the officers struck me in the back, and put me under arrest.

Fortunately, Mr. Bolton Hall and H. Kelly could not be present at the meeting; they, too, might have been clubbed out of the hall.

Six women and four men were packed like sardines into a patrol-wagon and hustled off to the station house, where we were kept in vile air and subjected to vulgar and brutal annoyance by the police until the following morning; then we were brought before a magistrate and put under $1,000 bail each for assault. Fancy girls of fourteen and eighteen, of delicate physique, assaulting twenty-five two-hundred-and-fifty-pounders!

If we as a nation were not such unspeakable hypocrites, we should long since have placed a club instead of a torch in the hand of the Goddess of Liberty—the police mace is not merely the symbol, but the very essence of our "liberty and order."

back with the comrades. Schäwe, whose term was reduced to twelve years, will have served his time out on November 7. Devoted as ever he returns to us in the same mind, but with his body much weakened by his long and cruel durance. The Berlin comrades have opened subscriptions in his favor. Lists are to be had from Der Anarchist, Grosse Frankfurter Strasse 146, III, Berlin, N. O.

BOHEMIA.

It is gratifying to learn that in this relatively small territory seven Anarchist papers are appearing. Michael Kacha, the editor of Práce (Work), was last June sentenced to six weeks in prison and a fine, for having published a pamphlet of Girault's. Following are the suggestive titles of some of these journals: Without Government, a monthly; The Miners' Paper, weekly; The Proletarian, The Mother of Liberty, The Anarchist Review. Nová Omladina, a strong advocate of unionism as well as anarchy, is a bi-weekly.

CORSICA.

Away down in the famous little island Anarchistic-Communism is being put to the test. The experiment is now some six months old, and a correspondent writes that if they can manage to worry through the coming six months, success is assured. They are in sore straits at present, and ask that aid be sent to Comrade Escalais, Communist Colony, Cognocoli par Pila Canale, Corsica. The difficulty will be over as soon as the first harvest can be gathered, and the entire need is not more than $10.00 a month, living being extremely cheap. It would be a pity that for so small a sum, an attempt which seems to be a moral success and to afford wide future possibilities, should fail.

SPAIN.

Ferrer's Modern School has been reopened, thanks to outside pressure on the government; but Ferrer's fortune has been seized and the endowment of the school is gone. Our comrade will probably receive a several years' sentence for the crime of having been acquainted with Morral.

Tierra y Libertad is once more appearing.

HOLLAND.

On September 23, the Dutch Free Communists held a Congress at Utrecht. Eight groups were represented. Measures for furthering the propaganda were adopted. The existence of the monthly Grond on Vrijheid was assured. Next Congress to be held at Amsterdam in 1907.

TO THE READERS OF MOTHER EARTH.

Those of you who have been startled by the rumor of Comrade Alexander Berkman's disappearance and his supposed kidnapping I want to inform that there was little truth in the story. People never realize that there are worse things in human life than merely external forces. But what made it impossible for our friend to continue his tour lies in the terrible contrast of solitary confinement, enforced silence and monotony and the rush and hurry of our daily lives. Few have stood the years of hell as bravely as Comrade Berkman, but the lack of idealism and enthusiasm in radical ranks and the pettiness and sordidness of our existence were too much for his sensitive nature. He hoped to regain interest in life through a tour, but before he was half through he realized that one can never find the strength to live outside of himself and that to find oneself at all, one needs absolute harmony and peace.

He has therefore decided to retire for a time and hopes those who have been disappointed will understand and appreciate.

Free Country!

È con rammarico che debbo comunicare ai compagni che caddi ammalato durante il mio giro di propaganda. Parlai in parecchie città dell'Est, come a Pittsburg e Cleveland. In quest'ultima città un malore improvviso mi colse, e fui per parecchi giorni impossibilitato perfino a far sapere ai miei amici dove mi trovavo.

I quattordici anni di vita passati in prigione; il repentino cambiamento dalla monotonia di dieci anni di reclusione cellulare alla vita tumultuosa e pazza della nostra "civiltà"; quindi gli sforzi di continui discorsi e il pochissimo riposo preso durante il mio giro, tutto ciò ed altre cause mi obbligano ad interromperlo.

Sono ritornato a New York coll'intendimento di prendere il riposo fisico e mentale che mi è necessario; ma le disgrazie non capitano mai sole.

Altri lavori, altri impegni si impongono. La Progressive library di New York tenne un meeting sabato 29 ottobre per parlare dei motivi e delle condizioni che resero inevitabile, che produssero l'atto fiero di Czolgoz.

Il 29 ottobre, essendo il 5° anniversario della morte di Czolgoz si presentò l'occasione propizia onde riunirci a discutere il lato sociale e psicologico del fatto. Il principale oratore del meeting, Ike Edelson e altri due compagni furono arrestati subito dopo la riunione. Il giorno seguente, tenemmo un un secondo meeting per protestare contro l'arresto di Edelson e compagni. Intanto Edelson fu messo fuori di prigione previa cauzione di 1000 scudi, di modo che potè ancora essere il primo oratore del meeting di protesta; ma gli furono concessi soltanto pochi minuti. Dei detectives saltarono sulla piattaforma e arrestarono di nuovo il compagno Edelson: la polizia creò un tumulto col randellare i presenti, spingendo o gettando a terra persone ed arrestando dicci giovinetti dai 14 ai 20 anni.

La compagna Emma Goldmann fu anch'essa arrestata, quantunque non avesse aperto bocca al meeting.

I prigionieri ebbero un primo interrogatorio a Yorkville nella stazione di polizia, dal magistrato Cornell. Questo borghese sembra avere molti pregiudizii per poter concepire qualsia concetto di libertà: egli favorì in tutto i testimoni dello Stato, i detecti.

Da lungo tempo la leggenda della libertà della repubblica americana, dovrebbe essere svanita. Sarebbe ora che tutti sapessero che questo paese governato colla brutalità ed il gesuitismo non vale più di tutti gli altri. Quì, la tirannia trova spesso usbergo sicuro e si estende, malvagia, sulle classi povere della società, tanto da non smentire i più ripugnanti procedimenti in onore nell'impero degli czar.

Roosevelt, l'imperatore, governante questa repubblica col nome di presidente, non val meglio del suo collega, l'assassino della gioventù russa.

Compagni, non tolleriamo le violenze della sbirraglia, non sopportiamo la sopraffazioni governative; mostriamoci degni dell'alto Ideale che professiamo. Ribelliamoci contro tutte le tirannie! C.

Assolto!

Per contravvenzione alla legge sul porto d'armi, legge severa nel Massachussetts per chè infligge ai contravventori in casi gravi anche un anno di carcere, il compagno Valentino di Pietro, non ebbe che cinquanta dollari di ammenda.

Disgraziati, hanno fatto la spia a ufo.

La Propaganda

DEL COMPAGNO G. PIMPINO

Mentre i signori che imperano alla redazione del Proletario socialista(?), si scalmanan o per far credere che l'opera nostra di propaganda è anzitutto opera di denigrazione socialista, ci piace di riprodurre, per intero, il resoconto delle tre conferenze tenute dal nostro Pimpino in Providence R.I. pubblicato dal giornale la Ragione Nuova, periodico mensile socialista, che si pubblica in quella città. E riproduciamo tanto più volontieri questo resoconto in quanto che viene a dimostrare anche l'esistenza di socialisti sinceri, una rarità non poco apprezzabile in questi paesi.

Ad avversari leali dobbiamo lealtà, ad avversarii sleali dobbiamo.... il motto di Cambronne.

"Gli anarchici di Providence — pochi, ma buoni — vollero regalare tre serate di godimento intellettuale a quanti italiani di qui sentono la necessità di guardar attorno a sè stessi, nel grembo di questa società, per analizzare gli elementi che costituiscono l'ambiente economico in cui viviamo. Coloro che si prendono questa briga son pochi d'avvero ma c'erano tutti ad ascoltare G. Pimpino nelle sere 14, 15 e 16 ottobre.

Ci siamo presi dei larghi appunti delle tre conferenze e se lo spazio ce lo permettesse, non mancherebbe certo la volontà di dare un esteso sunto di ciò che G. Pimpino trattò con calma e simpatica parola che sa legare gli udi'orii in cui predomina l'elemento operaio digiuno di studii.

Non pertanto vogliamo dare i punti capitali, quelli che più s'impongono alla considerazione e alla discussione di noi socialisti.... legalitarii.

Con l'oratore ci troviamo d'accordo certamente nella ormai secolare constatazione che le sofferenze dei lavoratori dipendono dal sistema economico oggi vigente e che si basa sulla proprietà privata dei mezzi di produzione che dovrebbero essere rimessi alla Società per essere esercitati a beneficio di tutti. Quindi espropriazione della classe capitalista.

Ad ottenere questa espropriazione, l'oratore è d'avviso che bisogna procedere rivoluzionariamente ed ammette che tale metodo è creduto inevitabile da molta parte dei

Percorso così il campo delle tattiche diverse seguite dal partito socialista e dagli anarchici, l'oratore che ha saputo toccare qua e là tanti soggetti di contorno al maggior tema, si rivolge all'esame di ciò che avverrà nel momento di spodestare la borghesia capitalista.

E, convien dirlo, anche su questo punto fu lucido, sicuro, convincente.

I socialisti legalitari o di Stato — egli dice — preconizzano il collettivismo basato sulla formula: "A ciascuno l'intero prodotto del suo lavoro".

Così — dice Pimpino — avverrà che i più forti e adatti potranno produrre e godere, in conseguenza, di più dei deboli o meno adatti.

Per ciò — nella parte economica — resta una distinzione di classi mentre il socialismo si ripromette di far sparire le classi; resta più che un'ombra del sistema di salariato intanto che dal lato morale si mantiene il concetto del premio e del castigo.

Gli anarchici oppongono a questa collettivista, la loro teoria: "Dare a ciascuno secondo i suoi bisogni e richiedere dall'individuo secondo le sue forze".

La emanazione proletaria — dice Pimpino — sarà un fatto compiuto solo allora che sarà avvenuta la trasformazione economica della Società, non solo sotto l'aspetto della espropriazione dei privati detentori di ciò che è mezzo a produrre, ma bensì tenendo presente e adottando la massima comunista e non quella collettivista.

Poi — l'oratore — si pone le obbiezioni (e ciò ci dispensa dal parlare di un tal qual contradditorio che seguì alla conferenza) che sorgono di fronte alla formula comunista: "Ognuno abbia secondo i suoi bisogni e dia secondo le sue forze e le sue attitudini". Si dice che l'uomo non avrà volontà di lavorare mentre avrà sempre bisogni da soddisfare.

Io ritengo per fermo — dice — che l'uomo "avrà bisogno" anzi di lavorare.

Quando egli trova conforto alla esistenza, quando sarà nutrito sufficientemente: accumulerà energie che necessariamente dovrà espandere. Se vi saranno delle eccezioni esse verranno ad usura ricompensate dal minor bisogno di produzione, gli arsenali militari, le acciaierie per corazzate, i cantieri militari, i servizii non produttivi, la pubblica sicurezza, gli eserciti, ecc., venendo aboliti, daranno innumeri braccia ai servigi della produzione, sì da compensar ad usura qualche fanciullo ammalato di atavica pi-

Questo borghese sembra avere molti pregiudizii per poter concepire qualsia concetto di libertà: egli favorì in tutto i testimoni dello Stato, i detectives ed i poliziotti che davano prove false contro i nostri compagni,

Ci attendiamo che tutti gli arrestati, giovanetti e ragazze, eccetto la compagna Goldmann ed il compagno Edelson, siano rilasciati dopo il pagamento di una multa; ma le autorità, sembra vogliano dare un esempio con Emma Goldmann ed Edelson. Costoro sono posti sotto le nuove leggi sull'anarchia criminale.

Questa legge è la più oltraggiosa che si conosca; praticamente toglie il diritto di parola agli anarchici. Questa legge chiede 2500 dollari di multa e 10 anni prigione come maximum della pena.

Noi intendiamo di promuovere una lotta accanita per il nostro diritto di libertà di parola, libertà di riunione e di esposizione delle nostre opinioni. Le prove contro la compagna Emma Goldman sono basate sul numero dell'ottobre scorso della Mother Earth, la rivista che essa pubblica.

Il giudice dice che gli articoli su Czolgoz sono "prettamente orribili", mentre codesti articoli, non sono che una pura, razionale e scientifica discussione sulla personalità di Czolgoz, sui motivi e sulle condizioni sociali che producono uomini come Czolgoz.

Le autorità sembrano disposte a voler dare un esempio feroce colpendo i nostri compagni. Ma noi intendiamo di non lasciarci sopraffare e di dare una fiera battaglia per la conquista del diritto alla libertà di parola.

Chiediamo a tutti i compagni ed amici della libertà e della giustizia di aiutarci subito moralmente e finanziariamente in quest'opera umana. Abbisognano immediatamente danari pel fondo di difesa dei nostri compagni. Aiutateci.

Per Nakens e Ferrer

Da ogni parte ci giunge l'eco di una agitazione importante intrapresa, da quanti hanno sentimenti moderni di libertà e giustizia, in favore di Nakens e Ferrer; pubblicista, direttore del Motin di Barcellona, il primo, professore e direttore della Scuola Moderna, il secondo.

Entrambi si trovano, fino dal maggio scorso, rinchiusi nelle carceri spagnuole, accusati di una presunta complicità nel disgraziato attentato compiuto da Matteo Moral contro Alfonso XIII, e minacciati dalle pene più severe da un tribunale feroce, al servizio del clero e del capitalismo.

Oggi, tutti sanno ormai che l'accusa gravante sul capo di Nakens e Ferrer, è priva di fondamento, è un pretesto invocato dagli elementi reazionarii, onde disperdere l'opera educatrice ed intelligente perseguita con tanto amore dai due uomini attualmente captivi.

Ma, la reazione è ostinata; malgrado l'indignazione sollevata in tutti i cuori onesti di tutti i paesi, la reazione non disarma, essa vuole delle vittime, sempre delle vittime da immolare al suo dio feroce, assetato di sangue.

Il proletariato internazionale ha un dovere da compiere, un dovere imprescindibile, al quale non può distogliersi senza apportare una diminuzione morale vergognosa a sè stesso, deve strappare le persone di Nakens e Ferrer dalle mani dei carnefici che tuttora li detengono. Ed a questo scopo noi, consigliamo ai compagni nostri, ai simpatizzanti, agli amici, ai rivoluzionari tutti, di agitarsi continuamente, facendo intendere forte il loro desiderata.

Infine, la monarchia spagnuola sappia che, da questa parte dell'oceano, una folla di lavoratori onesti e coscienti, vuole la liberazione delle vittime dell'intrigo gesuitico-militare, che vuole l'intangibilità del pensiero umano.

Agitiamoci ed agitiamo per la liberazione di Nakens e Ferrer!

Con l'oratore ci troviamo d'accordo certamente nella ormai secolare constatazione che le sofferenze dei lavoratori dipendono dal sistema economico oggi vigente e che si basa sulla proprietà privata dei mezzi di produzione che dovrebbero essere rimessi alla Società per essere esercitati a beneficio di tutti. Quindi espropriazione della classe capitalista.

Ad ottenere questa espropriazione, l'oratore è d'avviso che bisogna procedere rivoluzionariamente ed ammette che tale metodo è creduto inevitabile da molta parte dei socialisti non anarchici, ma a loro fa colpa d'indugiarsi nelle lotte inefficaci per la conquista dei pubblici poteri.

Non vale — dice — affermare che le campagne elettorali siano una giunastica di educazione politica e una coltura dello spirito di rivendicazione dei diritti proletarii.

Il proletario non ha bisogno di educarsi politicamente per conquistare ed amministrare i pubblici poteri da poi che è utile e necessario che sparisca lo Stato se non si vuole eternare l'esistenza di classi in antagonismo di interessi.

In quanto all'educazione nell'amministrar ciò che sarà della comunità, il proletariato lo potrà fare assai meglio in seno alle organizzazioni operaie.

Se è utile che scomparisca lo Stato, è, intanto, assolutamente necessario che la classe sfruttata non mandi i suoi rappresentanti — o pretesi rappresentanti — a collaborare nei Parlamenti, nei Consigli Provinciali e Comunali con la borghesia.

Lo Stato resta il gendarme della borghesia e non potrà mai agire in nome del proletariato. Il quale deve organizzarsi internazionalmente e attaccare l'ente Stato con queste tre armi principali:

a) sciopero degli elettori;
b) sciopero dei contribuenti;
c) sciopero generale.

Restando nel campo delle lotte economiche — aggiunge l'oratore — si lotta ogni giorno: nel campo delle lotte lotte politiche si lotta — per sport — ogni 4 anni: raggiungendo zero in efficacia da poi che la protesta politica in parlamento, è sterile ed inutile.

Lo Stato sa di essere un sovverchiatore e non ha bisogno di sentirselo dire dai rappresentanti del proletariato.

Le masse vanno educate per la rivoluzione.

Il germe di questa, l'intenso malessere economico, esiste; manca — e può pronunciarsi da un momento all'altro — l'occasione che darà la spinta.

E allora il popolo dev'essere pronto a far da sè e non bisognoso di mettersi in balìa di condottieri.

Io ritengo per fermo — dice — che l'uomo "avrà bisogno" anzi di lavorare.

Quando egli trova conforto alla esistenza, quando sarà nutrito sufficientemente: accumulerà energie che necessariamente dovrà espandere. Se vi saranno delle eccezioni esse verranno ad usura ricompensate dal minor bisogno di produzione, gli arsenali militari, le acciaierie per corazzate, i cantieri militari, i servizii non produttivi, la pubblica sicurezza, gli eserciti, ecc., venendo aboliti, daranno innumeri braccia ai servigi della produzione, sì da compensar ad usura qualche fannullone ammalato di atavica pigrizia.

E con ciò abbiamo riassunto quel tanto di più interessante che dalle tre conferenze del carissimo G. Pimpino venne mirabilmente dimostrato.

Fu una propaganda compensata da ottimo successo perchè formò delle convinzioni che — educate — difficilmente si offuscheranno.

Una stretta di mano a G. Pimpino, un grazie agli anarchici di Providence che ci regalarono l'occasione di sentire il forte direttore della Cronaca Sovversiva al quale inviamo il nostro saluto tutto di ammirazione".

E per meglio completare questo resoconto crediamo utile aggiungere la narrazione d'un incidente, avvenuto alla terza conferenza, taciuto dalla Ragione Nuova. Cediamo la parola al nostro corrispondente.

Giovanelli (socialista), dimanda di fare qualche obbiezione.

Pimpino. — Si dichiara sempre pronto a discutere di idee; ma si rifiuta di discutere col Giovanelli, perchè, dice, non gode la sua stima.

Giovanelli. — Fa per parlare.

Pimpino. — Aggiunge che non crede alla sincerità politica del Giovanelli. E spiega come, in una riunione avvenuta in Barre, circa due anni or sono, in presenza di oltre una dozzina di persone, il Giovanelli disse di aver mandato al Proletario un articolo ove taccia Pimpino di essere un birraio; ma che edotto poi della menzogna dell'asserto, si decise a far sospendere, per telegramma, la pubblicazione dell' articolo. Qualche tempo dopo, tornato il Giovanelli in Providence, l'articolo in parola apparve sul Popolo Cattolico e fu in parte riprodotto da altri giornali.

Giovanelli. — Dichiaro di avere mentito per rappresaglia sul conto Pimpino.

Pimpino. — Soddisfatto di questa dichiarazione, concede la parola al Giovanelli.

GAUDEAMUS IGITUR.

By WILLIAM MOUNTAIN.

Then fill the goblet to the brim,
The brave will drink it to the lees;
To-morrow merry eyes will dim
And loving hearts in silence freeze.
The past is burning through our veins,
And lives a moment in our cry;
'Tis ours to joy in spite of pains,
To live a happy hour and die.

For all has been that we might live
And quaff this hour divine in bliss;
Whate'er the past of life can give
Is ours—a coffin or a kiss.
Is ours, ah! let the wine run red,
And let us drink while drink we may;
The weary? they are well abed,
And we? alas! must soon away.

The best we know is not to fear,
To live each moment as the last,
Be bravest when the foe is near,
And weak, if e'er, when danger's past;
If beaten, not to weep or sigh,
Or feebly curse a hapless fate;
To feel we do not vainly die
If life is lived in love's estate.

With cosmic disregard of care,
Our glory is we will not try
To placate fate with craven prayer
And ease our conscience with a lie;
Nor hide with words a common fear,
Nor seek some cheap unworthy aid,
But wait for death in honest cheer,
Or go to meet him unafraid.

TO MY READERS.

The birth of "Mother Earth" was an eventful day for me. For years I longed to create a medium through which I might express myself in words more durable than oral language. The necessity was not merely subjective; conditions, too, called for the clarification of much-befogged ideas,—not merely from the narrow party standpoint, but on the broad basis of a better and nobler life.

The outlook for such a magazine seemed very favorable. An artist friend promised a theatrical performance, the proceeds of which were to establish a solid financial foundation for the undertaking. Alas, the conspiracy of circumstances! Owing to many unforeseen obstacles and difficulties, the performance was only a partial success, and the greater part of the proceeds was swallowed up by the necessity of changing the original name, "Open Road," to that of "Mother Earth."

Immediately on its appearance, however, the magazine enlisted the interest of a large circle of sympathizers and friends. All prospects pointed to success.

Then came the Summer, with its hot and sultry weather. Somebody has said that a Revolution would be impossible in July—"Mother Earth," too, suffered from the same cause, the revenue of the magazine largely depending on the sales at the various radical and liberal meetings, which are quite inactive during the Summer months.

Thanks to the active interest of a few friends, however, I was enabled to fertilize the soil, hoping that with cooler weather would come the harvest.

My expectations were amply justified. August, September and October brought a host of new subscribers and a great demand for single copies.

Then the Police Department got busy. What on earth is there for them to do, but to hound Anarchists?! Thus it happened that they raided two meetings, clubbed the audiences, arrested twelve persons and confiscated a considerable part of the October issue of "Mother Earth."

Not satisfied with this arbitrary and highhanded proceeding, the police have since kept up their brutal persecution, closing radical meetings, terrorizing hallkeepers and audiences, and threatening them with arrest.

"Mother Earth" depends largely upon the sale of single copies, averaging monthly about eighty dollars; the action of the authorities has resulted in almost extinguishing that source of revenue. Some of our liberals, ever courageous in fighting dead gods, have been so frightened by the sight of a detective that they have entirely withdrawn "Mother Earth" from sale at their meetings. And yet the postal authorities continue to pass the magazine through the mails!

Through all this unwonted activity of the police can be plainly seen the determination to suppress the spreading of Anarchism, and particularly of "Mother Eearth." Even our masquerade ball, a simple social affair, was invaded by the presence of uniformed Comstocks who left nothing undone to create a disturbance. Fortunately, nothing happened; but the depressing effect made enjoyment impossible, resulting in financial loss.

All this, however, shall not influence in the least my determination to continue the magazine. Neither shall police persecution nor personal danger deter me from voicing my ideas. Are the readers and friends of "Mother Earth" willing to assist me?

A Sustaining Fund for the magazine has been suggested, and a number of friends have already contributed towards it. I should ask all those desirous to aid to come forward soon, that I may know what to expect.

At this writing I am unable to say what the charge against me will result in. In case of my conviction and imprisonment, "Mother Earth" will continue. Comrades Alexander Berkman and John R. Coryell, aided by Voltairine De Cleyre, Max Baginski and other able contributors have consented to publish the magazine.

But whatever the future may bring, a Sustaining Fund is an immediate nccessity.

THE EDITOR.

AS TO "CRAMMERS OF FURNACES."

(A Reply to E. C. Walker's Article in No. 46 "Truth Seeker.")

It requires a very brave mind to be just to one's opponent. We are apt, only too often, to misstate facts in order to gain victory in an argument or discussion. But the really honest man, the truly broadminded, scorns such tactics; to him the triumph based on falsehood is bitter fruit.

This was the thought that persisted and kept obtruding itself at our perusal of Mr. E. C. Walker's article "Crammers of Furnaces and Sitters on Safety Valves." Perhaps the article might have never been written had Mr. Walker realized that sincerity in literature and honesty towards opponents are as desirable as good weight and full measure in the matter of groceries. Or may be that, the opportunity being given, the temptation to lecture Anarchists on Anarchism was very, very strong and—Mr. Walker weak? Has he again succumbed to the passion for reiterating the claim—as ancient as it is stupid—that the Anarchist-Communists have no right to be called Anarchists.

Mr. Walker waxed eloquent over the "crime" of holding Czolgocz memorial meetings. As a matter of fact, no such memorial meetings took place and none were contemplated. The meeting in question was called for the purpose of discussing whether Czolgocz was an Anarchist or not. We claim the right of discussing—even under the present iniquitous law—whatever subject interests us. If free speech and free press mean anything, they mean freedom of discussion. We, therefore, claim the right to discuss how it is and why it is that a native born American, in this—politically the most advanced—country, the "land of opportunity," enjoying universal adult suffrage, should wish to kill the President of the United States, elected as that official is by a majority of the voting population, in accordance with our political institutions. The Czolgocz act was an entirely new phenomenon on the horizon of our country,—neither sectional feeling nor personal interest played any part in the act. A social phenomenon of this character should, in our estimation, receive our most earnest attention; it should be intelligently discussed in order to help us arrive at a better understanding of causes, and at a solution, if possible, of effects.

An unpopular subject? Granted. Shall freedom of speech, then, mean the discussion of only such subjects as are popular? And is the sex question a popular subject? And yet Mr. Walker has been discussing that question for more years than some of us can boast of since our birth. And we venture to say that the sex question is more obnoxious to the great American public than the McKinley episode.

"When a minority drops the pen of reason," says Mr. Walker, "and draws the sword of physical force, does it expect still to be opposed by reason and waved back by olive branches?" Not at all, Mr. Walker. It is true Czolgocz drew the sword; he paid the penalty without a murmur. We, however, are using the pen of reason. On what grounds, then, should we be persecuted any more than the so-called philosophical Anarchists? And does not Mr. Walker know that eight out of the twelve arrested and held for criminal court were mere spectators, and that one of the chief speakers at the alleged "memorial" Czolgocz meeting—Mr. Moscow—is a comrade of—Mr. E. C. Walker, an Individualist Anarchist absolutely opposed to violence.

We are open and avowed Revolutionists; but we defy any one to produce a single line from any English Anarchist paper or magazine published in this country within the last twenty-five years where assassination is advocated or even implied. And if this be true, can a just and honest man maintain that the followers of the Communist-Anarchist school of Thought should be treated as criminals?

Yes, literary honesty is a rare jewel, Mr. Walker. If you read in an article in "Mother Earth" that "Czolgocz was a soul in pain," you immediately declare the writer to be an apologist for Czolgocz. Is sympathy for an unfortunate man identical with justification of or apology for the man's act? As real Anachists we neither condemn nor justify; our business is to try to understand, understand, understand, Mr. Walker. In view of this, is it not foolish to say, "Yes, the police have acted foolishly, badly; almost or quite as foolishly and badly as the Communist Czolgocz apologists?"

"To return to our examination of the policy of those who stand forth as apologists or quasi-apologists for political assassination in the United States: In the first place, as heretofore intimated"—thus spake Mr. Walker—"they are not Anarchists, for if Anarchism means one thing more than another, it means opposition to the government of man by man. To take a man's life without his consent is the last supreme step in governing him."

Let us see, Mr. Walker. Government is an invasive organization; it taxes people without their consent; it butchers Philippino men, women and children; establishes bull pens at Idaho and sends colored troops to inflame race prejudice, by allowing those troops to obtain liquor and then illtreat the people. Government kidnaps men like Moyer and Haywood; it violates its own laws and then delegates the secretary of war to give his official indorsement to the illegal acts. In short, government and its representatives assassinate liberty at every step. At last a man arises who embodies in himself all the revolt of the people—he strikes down one of the invaders. According to Mr. Walker's logic he invades the invader. Is it not farcical to maintain that two persons can invade each other at the same time? Is this the celebrated "philosophic" logic?

We neither advocate nor advise acts of violence. But those who have come to realize that government is invasive of the liberty of the individual, can object to the assassination of tyrants on only two grounds—sentiment and expediency. Mr. Walker, who summons everything, except his own pet theories, to the bar of reason, would eliminate sentiment. Expediency is a matter of opinion and judgment.

As to that old, hoary chestnut about our not being Anarchists, do not permit it to worry you, Mr. Walker. We shall continue our Communist-Anarchist education of the people, and for the rest, let posterity judge.

POLICE EDUCATION

Our criticism of the police brutality at the arrests on October 30th seems to have done the "Safety" Department some good.

True, the word Anarchism still affects them like the proverbial red rag, but they have at least learned to perform their "duty " in a more or less decent manner.

After dogging our steps for nine weeks, their "perseverance" and "tenacity" have at last been rewarded.

Sunday, January the 6th, the police closed our meeting held under the auspices of the "Mother Earth" Club, and arrested the Chairman, John R. Coryell, Alexander Berkman and myself.

The Criminal Anarchy of the Chairman consisted in a five-minute talk on the educational aims and purposes of the "Mother Earth" Club. Comrade Berkman was guilty of even a more heinous crime—he had not spoken at all, but he is known to have enjoyed for many years the paternalism of Pennsylvania.

A criminal Anarchist, aged 15, who happened to be at the door when the detectives passed, was taken along to complete the quartet.

Three weeks previously I had delivered the same lecture—Misconceptions of Anarchism—before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association. And though the heroes of the American Third Section—the newly created Anarchistic Squadron—were present, no arrests followed. Even detectives are not so stupid as not to understand that their Cossack tactics at Anarchistic meetings could not be profitably applied to non-anarchistic elements. It might wake the law-abiding citizen to a realization of the true state of affairs.

Our hearing before the Police Court Magistrate resulted in our being held for further "examination."

Comrades Coryell and Berkman were held in $1,000 bail each, while my bond was set at $2,000.

Inspector McLaughlin asked me, quite naively, whether I did not intend to cease my agitation. On being told that I would not change my course, the wise man informed me that I am hereafter to be arrested every time I speak upon a platform.

We, too, have learned a lesson. 'Tis no more a question of free speech. It is a conspiracy against the spread of Anarchism.

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS.

The death of Ernest Crosby came as a great shock to all those who realize the lack of strong personalities in the world of thought and literature. To be true in the latter requires courage—we have but few Crosbys.

The trial of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone has again benn postponed, following the decision of the Colorado Supreme Court that the forcible kidnapping of those men from Colorado was perfectly legal. The laws are rather elastic in the hands of power. Of course, the defendants' counsel will have recourse to the law. We wish them success. However, if the American workmen wishes to prevent the slaughter of their champions on the altar of Mammon, they will have to meet plutocratic with their economic force. Answer the conspiracy of the money power with the general strike.

Barre, Vermont, has recently come into prominence through the arrest in that city of Luigi Galliani, an Italian Anarchist, who is accused of participation in the Weaver strike of 1902, at Paterson, N. J. As some of

For the reasons here outlined, I feel it my duty to protest against all laws which punish the mere expression of unpopular opinions, not having resulted in other acts prohibited by law. Every such abridgment of the freedom of speech or of press is a dangerous precedent from which will grow other like abridgments, until we enjoy any liberties only as a matter of permission and not as a matter of right.

Every such law is destructive of the fundamental equalities of human opportunity, and violative of the rights guaranteed by our constitutions. By these considerations I am impelled, at the risk of being misunderstood, or of deliberate misinterpretation, and of great unpopularity, to insist on both the legislative and judicial annulment of all anti-Anarchist laws, and every other law abridging even in the slightest degree the means of inter-communication between sane adult humans.

I intend to go on a lecture tour, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the "Mother Earth" Sustaining Fund. I have already been invited by the San Francisco comrades, and, on my way to the Coast, I am prepared to lecture in the larger cities.

Those wishing to arrange meetings will please communicate with me at once.

"EVENTS ARE THE TRUE SCHOOLMASTERS."

By VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

I count it as one of the best fortunes of my life that in my early days as an anarchist it was my privilege to know Dyer D. Lum. These thirteen years he is in his grave, and yet whenever editors and contributors of anarchist journals fall to denouncing the actions of the unwise, the ebullitions of the mass, I hear his voice, as yesterday, saying in his short, brusque way: "Events are the true schoolmasters."

There was in his day, as there is now, a certain percentage of propagandists who think that they possess the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth (a perhaps enviable condition of mind, but certainly an intolerant one). They appear to think that by the application of certain abstract principles they have been able to chalk-line the course of progress, and that if it be strictly adhered to an unquestionable triumph of these principles lies straight ahead. They are essentially reasonable, cool persons, somewhat over-impressed with their lack of sentimentality, having definite "plans of campaign" in their heads. The trouble is that when the plan is put in action, it meets with the difficulties the mathematical builders of Laputa met when they put up a wall. The planners never look to right or left of the chalk-line to measure the quantities with which they are dealing, or get a relative estimate of their own forces compared with the forces they are endeavoring to guide so straightly. All at once some one of these unreckoned, undisciplined forces flies right across the well-laid-out path; helter-skelter, topsy-turvy goes all the patient work, and the "plan of campaign" is smitten in the house of its friends. Do the campaigners give a look around, now, and take in the situation? Do they begin to recognize that their little labored ant-track was just a bit of a groove bearing relation to the path of progress, about as the rut of a toy cart-wheel to the whole road; that the road is by no means straight, but full of hills and holes and curves and angles according to the obstacles met and the powers of the moving quantity? Not they! The plan is all right; so much the worse for the campaign if it disregards the chalk! The planners adjust their blinkers, give a look in their pocket-mirrors

American freethinkers who are always agreeably surprised on visiting France to notice the absence of puritanic Sabbath restrictions, read with mixed feelings of amusement and disgust of the recent Sunday-rest law enacted at the request of the organized workingmen, and their attempt to enforce it upon refractory employers. It is the old story: if they are able to compel their employers to give them one day's rest they do not need the law, and if they are not able the law is of no avail. Already the workers have several times put themselves in the humiliating position of asking the officials to enforce the law, and been properly insulted for it. We in America have had all manner of experience with freak Sunday laws enacted from religious motives by a dead generation and remaining as a pestiferous tool for the living one, with the result that the law generally fines some insignificant candy-store keeper, barber, milk-dealer or newsdealer, while the great corporations steadily ignore it. Our brethren in France may expect like results; with this added sting, that while our workers may be excused for trying to make the best of a bad legacy, they have voluntarily created an obnoxious restriction, of no benefit to themselves as workers, and a nuisance to themselves and everybody else in other capacities.

As the result of the active anti-militarist propaganda, which has been at much pains to ferret out and expose abuses in the French army, the inevitable party of amelioration has arisen, as is evidenced by the present attempt of Minister Picquart to reform the Courts-martial. If the proposed reform is accepted, military offenders against the civil law in time of peace will no longer be tried by court-martial. Offenses against discipline alone are to be tried by court-martial; offenses against the civil law, even if commanded by a military superior, are to be tried in the common courts. "Anarchism is not necessarily violence, though some of the younger comrades have from time to time committed various acts of violence. Anarchists like myself would not be too hasty, but if an act of violence was committed by some person because he was not able to control himself and his feelings would burst within him, and would commit an act of violence upon some tyrant or another, and upon investigation, I thought this act justified, no matter how unnecessary or foolish the act may seem, I for one would extend to him my hand of friendship and tender him my sympathy and assistance. x x x x x x x

"A few years ago a foolish law was enacted, and as a consequence some of our comrades are afraid of this law, and so have become self respecting and law abiding citizens, but I for one do not fear this law, for you cannot be a self respecting and law abiding (as Society and State look upon it) and also be a good Anarchist" x x x x x x

"There has been something said about it being too bad that a test case of this law is to be made with Emma Goldman in it, because as some one said I was too unpopular, I myself am glad that I am so unpopular, for if it was otherwise and I was really popular, I could not be true to myself, and therefore I shall continue to be unpopular, so long as I am able to think and act, and I shall always be opposed to government. x x x

If you stop supporting the Government, the Government is bound to fall. x x x x x x x

WOMAN'S ARREST A 'MISTAKE.'

She Paid For a Suit and When It Came C. O. D. Kept It—Court Indignant.

Mrs. Harriet Mortimer, 30 years old, of 201 Columbus Avenue, well looking and stylishly dressed, was indignant when arraigned in the West Side Court yesterday, over a comedy of errors relating to the delivery to her of a costume marked "C. O. D.," which led to her arrest and detention in the West Thirty-eighth Street Police Station on Saturday night, from 8 to 11, when she was bailed out.

When John Maher, 17 years old, of 15 Manhattan Avenue, a department-store delivery boy, stepped forward to make a complaint against Mrs. Mortimer, Magistrate Whitman characterized the detention of the woman under the circumstances to be questionable.

"If your employer wishes to make a charge against this woman he must come to this court or send some responsible person to do so," said the Magistrate, "as I cannot accept a serious charge from an irresponsible person like this boy, and hold this woman on what appears to be a mistake."

The story of Mrs Mortimer, as she related it to the Magistrate, was to the effect that she had ordered a costume costing $26, and gave in payment $16 in cash and an order from her father for $10, but that the package was sent C. O. D. Believing that there had been some mistake, she told the boy to go back and tell the clerks that she had paid in full for the suit. Then she took the package and shut the door.

"The order for $10 was sent to me by my father from Plattsburg, N. Y.," explained Mrs Mortimer. "My father had an account in that store, and sent me the order as a Christmas present."

Policeman Mahoney, who made the arrest on complaint of Maher, the delivery boy, said Mrs. Mortimer showed him a receipt for $16 made out on a blank bearing the name of the firm, as evidence of having paid the money, but there was no receipt for the order for $10 from her father. Samuel Rohan, who appeared as counsel for Mrs Mortimer, told the Magistrate that his client had been locked up three hours, because some one had blundered, and that it was a very cruel thing for a respectable woman.

Magistrate Whitman discharged Mrs Mortimer. Then he told her to appear in court on Tuesday afternoon, at 2 to see if any further complaint be made. The court was particular, however, to impress on her that she was not under arrest, and that her discharge on the arrest was unconditional, because no charge had been accepted against her.

SPOKE THE MISSING PONCE.

Ship Reports Her All Right on Dec. 28—Now a Week Overdue.

The first word received from the missing New York & Porto Rico Company steamship Ponce since she sailed from Ponce, Porto Rico, on Christmas Day was brought in yesterday by the big sailing ship Shenandoah, which made port from Port Blakely. The Ponce is now one week overdue, and it is certain that she has broken down, if nothing more serious has happened to her.

Capt. Chapman of the Shenandoah sighted the Ponce in north latitude 27.48, and west longitude 70.48, on Dec. 28. At 11 A. M. Capt. Chapman made out the Ponce headed to this port and proceeding with fair speed. Believing that the liner would arrive here several days before the Shenandoah, Capt. Chapman signalled to her, asking to report having passed him. The Ponce acknowledged the signals. The vessels passed within a quarter of a mile of each other.

When sighted the Ponce had not covered half the distance between Ponce and this port. She was about 550 miles north of Porto Rico and 250 miles from the Bermuda Islands. Consequently she was still well to the south of Sandy Hook. The weather was good and remained so until the Shenandoah reported Dec. 28, except for a strong blow on Jan. 4.

Capt. Chapman says that in his opinion the Ponce has been disabled to an extent that her machinery and drifted out of the course of steamships. Anxious inquiries for news of the Ponce came all day to the friends and relatives of those on board. A friend of T. H. Reid, a passenger, said that Mr. Reid was a purchasing agent for Swift & Co. and lived with his family at Westwood, N. J.

EMMA GOLDMAN ARRESTED FOR TALKING VIOLENCE

Anarchist Berkman Also in a Cell as an Accessory.

POLICE STOPPED HER SPEECH

She Had Just Said That the Reds Would Some Day Use Force to Overcome the Government.

Emma Goldman, who has been arrested many times in this and other cities for uttering anarchistic sentiments, was taken into custody late yesterday afternoon while in the midst of an address before an audience of 600 persons at Clinton Hall, 151 Clinton Street.

Alexander Berkman, the anarchist who was liberated from a Pennsylvania prison last Summer after having served a term of fourteen years for having attempted to take the life of H. C. Frick, was arrested along with the Goldman woman. Berkman was put in a cell at Police Headquarters, and Miss Goldman, after having been interrogated by Inspector McLaughlin, was sent to the Mercer Street Station, where there is a matron.

The charge against the Goldman woman is violation of that section of the Penal Code which makes it a felony to give utterance from a public platform to "incendiary" sentiments. Berkman is charged with being an accessory.

The police gathered in along with the two principal prisoners, John R. Coryell of 61 St. Nicholas Place. Coryell acted as Chairman of the meeting. Still another prisoner was a 15-year-old boy of the name of Schwartz. He gave his address as 110 East 146th Street.

The arrests were made by Detective Sergeant Braun, assisted by Roundsmen Buck and Werzansky, and Policemen Rafsky and Schwartz. They form a squad the duty of which is to suppress all anarchistic meetings on the east side.

The meeting at Clinton Hall had been advertised, and the "anarchist squad" determined to attend in force, with several stenographers, in order to make an arrest if any seditious talk was indulged in. Evidently Miss Goldman was not particularly averse to arrest. She could plainly see the stenographers at work, and obliged them by talking in excellent English.

The utterance which is given as the basis for the arrest is as follows:

"It is ridiculous to think that society cannot get along without government. We will soon say to the Government, 'Give us what belongs to us in peace, and if you don't give it to us in peace we will take it by force.'

"As long as I live and am able to explain myself I will be opposed to government. And as I live, and as my brain dictates, I will use force against government."

When Detective Braun heard this he first summoned the reserves from the Delancey Street Station, and then went up to Miss Goldman and arrested her. Berkman objected, saying that nothing of an unlawful nature had taken place, whereupon he was arrested also. Then Coryell was informed that he must go along. Later, as the prisoners were being taken from the hall, the boy Schwartz is said to have refused to leave. His reluctance resulted in a trip to Headquarters, and later a night in the rooms of the Gerry society.

The audience did not like the interruption. There were cat calls and hisses, but no serious disorder. The crowd was composed for the most part of Russian Jews, but there were several negroes and a scattering of Americans in it.

Berkman and the Goldman woman took their arrest coolly. As they were leaving the hall they asked Braun if he would not call a cab at their expense. Braun replied that if they did not like the idea of riding in a patrol car he would take them away in his own conveyance a patrol wagon.

The prisoners all said they preferred the car, and rode peaceably to Headquarters. A crowd of men and boys followed the car for about a block, but made no demonstration.

Inspector McLaughlin questioned Berkman and the Goldman woman in his office when they were brought in. Both said to him that they did not believe in a government of force. The Goldman woman said she intended to keep on stating just such matters as that which she had stated in the afternoon. She gave her address as 210 East Twenty-seventh Street, and Berkman gave the same number.

ANTI-DRYDEN MEN STICK; MAY BE DISCIPLINED

Say They Won't Attend Caucus If His Name Is Presented.

SENATOR'S FRIENDS ANGRY

Gov. Stokes May After All Be a Candidate—Jersey Lawmakers Begin Work To-morrow.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 6. The news that the Union County Executive delegation will refuse to enter a caucus for United States Senator unless the name of Senator John F. Dryden is withdrawn was first received here with incredulity, but was confirmed to-day by Tim Times correspondent, who called on each member of the Union County Executive delegation and received the positive assurance that, while the declaration made by them last night did not state specifically that they would refuse to go into the caucus if Dryden's name was presented, they would not do it.

But the end is not yet, the Dryden men say. The Dryden leaders say they do not like the attitude of a small county seeking to dictate to the whole Republican party, and will continue to do so.

The State leaders, who are back of Dryden, believe that the fight against Dryden has been worked up by the Valley people. They say the talk about Supreme Court Justice Mahlon Pitney being in favor of Baird was sprung to embarrass Dryden. They say they were told Robert Stocker of Union county that he did not want the Senatorship and would not accept it if it was tendered him.

It is whispered here that Gov. Stokes would not resign the governorship to succeed Dryden if he were elected by a split caucus, but would serve the entire term.

to this country or what. Some responsible person to do so,' said the Magistrate, 'as I cannot accept a serious charge from an irresponsible person like this boy, and hold this woman on what appears to be a mistake.'

The story of Mrs. Mortimer, as she related it to the Magistrate, was to the effect that she had ordered a costume costing $20, and gave in payment $10 in cash and an order from her father for $10, but that the package was sent C. O. D. Believing that there had been some mistake, she told the boy to go back and tell the clerks that she had paid in full for the suit. Then she took the package and shut the door.

The order for $10 was sent to me by my father from Flatbush, N. Y.," explained Mrs Mortimer. "My father had an account in that store, and sent me the order as a Christmas present."

Policeman Mahoney, who made the arrest on complaint of Muller, the delivery boy, said Mrs. Mortimer showed him a receipt for $18 made out on a blank bearing the name of the firm, as evidence of having paid the money, but there was no receipt for the order for $10 from her father. Samuel Bohan, who appeared as counsel for Mrs. Mortimer, told the Magistrate that his client had been locked up three hours, because some one had blundered, and that it was a very cruel thing for a respectable woman.

Magistrate Whitman discharged Mrs. Mortimer. Then he told her to appear in court on Tuesday afternoon at 2 to see if any further complaint be made. The court was particular, however, to impress on her that she was not under arrest, and that her discharge on the arrest was unconditional, because no charge had been accepted against her.

SPOKE THE MISSING PONCE.

Ship Reports Her All Right on Dec. 28 —Now a Week Overdue.

The first word received from the missing New York & Porto Rico Company steamship Ponce since she sailed from Ponce, Porto Rico, on Christmas Day was brought in yesterday by the big sailing ship Shenandoah, which made port from Port Hickely. The Ponce is now one week overdue, and it is certain that she has broken down, if nothing more serious has happened to her.

Capt. Chapman of the Shenandoah sighted the Ponce in north latitude 27 48, and west longitude 73 48, on Dec. 28. At 11 A. M. Capt. Chapman made out the Ponce headed in this port and proceeding with fair speed. Believing that the Ponce would arrive here several days before the Shenandoah, Capt. Chapman signaled to the steamer to report having passed him. The Ponce acknowledged the signals. The vessels passed within a quarter of a mile of each other.

When sighted the Ponce had not covered half the distance between Ponce and this port. She was about 320 miles north of Porto Rico and 250 miles from the Bahama Islands, the nearest land. She was about 200 miles south half a point east of Sandy Hook. The weather was good and remained so until the Shenandoah reached port, except for a strong blow on Jan. 4.

Capt. Chapman says that in his opinion the Ponce has been disabled by an accident to her machinery and drifted out of the course of steamships. Anxious inquiry for news of the Ponce came all day from the friends and relatives of those on board. A friend of T. H. Kidd, a passenger, said that Mr. Kidd was a purchasing agent for Swift & Co., and lived with his family at Westwood, N. J.

PLANNING A HEN TRUST.

Concern Formed to Have Big Chicken Farms Near Large Cities.

The Amalgamated Poultry Farms, an incorporated concern, designed to form a Hen Trust, was sprung upon breeders at the Poultry Show in Madison Square Garden last week.

The plan contemplates establishing immense poultry farms near the principal large cities of the country. Among the promoters is Charles Cyphers, who is to furnish the incubators. All the breeders in the Garden admitted that there was no question as to the hens being prolific, and that the idea looked to be alluring.

Those who looked favorably upon the plan said that with scientific methods and unity of purpose, big farms for raising poultry would pay handsome dividends. Whether the fun stock will be sold on the curb or on the Stock Exchange remains to be decided by the promoters.

SKYSCRAPER MAKERS' CLASS.

Y. M. C. A. to Start Its School for Builders.

The Winter term of the school of structural engineering, sometimes known as "the school for skyscraper builders," will begin at the West Side Young Men's Christian Association, West Fifty-seventh Street, to-day.

On Jan. 15 the night school of plan reading will be reopened. Together these schools have an attendance of 300 the majority carpenters, contractors, builders, and others interested in architectural and engineering work.

The [illegible] Committee of the Association includes H. W. Hodge is Chairman; Henry F. Hornbostel, and R. Hunt Lowe.

[illegible] upon while in the midst of an address before an audience of men persons at Clinton Hall, 161 Clinton Street.

Alexander Berkman, the anarchist who was liberated from a Pennsylvania prison last Summer after having served a term of fourteen years for having attempted to take the life of H. C. Frick, was arrested along with the Goldman woman. Berkman was put in a cell at Police Headquarters, and Miss Goldman, after having been interrogated by Inspector McLaughlin, was sent to the Mercer Street Station, where there is a matron.

The charge against the Goldman woman is violation of that section of the Penal Code which makes it a felony to give utterance from a public platform to "incendiary" sentiments. Berkman is charged with being an accessory.

The police gathered in, along with the two principal prisoners, John R. Coryell of 60 St. Nicholas Place. Coryell acted as Chairman of the meeting. Still another prisoner was a 15-year-old boy of the name of Schwartz. He gave his address as 110 East 146th Street.

The arrests were made by Detective Sergeant Braun, assisted by Roundsmen Bock and Werzansky, and Policemen Rafsky and Schwartz. They form a squad the duty of which is to suppress all anarchistic meetings on the east side.

The meeting at Clinton Hall had been advertised, and the "anarchist squad" determined to attend in force, with several stenographers, in order to make an arrest if any seditious talk was indulged in. Evidently Miss Goldman was not particularly averse to arrest. She could plainly see the stenographers at work, and obliged them by talking in excellent English.

The utterance which is given as the basis for the arrest is as follows:

"It is ridiculous to think that society cannot get along without government. We will soon say to the Government: 'Give us what belongs to us in peace, and if you don't give it to us in peace we will take it by force.'

"As long as I live and am able to explain myself I will be opposed to government. And as I live, and as my brain dictates, I will use force against government."

When Detective Braun heard this he first summoned the reserves from the Delancey Street Station, and then went up to Miss Goldman and arrested her. Berkman objected, saying that nothing of an unlawful nature had taken place, whereupon he was arrested also. Then Coryell was informed that he must go along. Later, as the prisoners were being taken from the hall, the boy Schwartz is said to have refused to leave. His reluctance resulted in a trip to Headquarters, and later a night in the rooms of the Gerry society.

The audience did not like the interruption. There were cat calls and hisses, but no serious disorder. The crowd was composed for the most part of Russian Jews, but there were several negroes and a scattering of Americans in it.

Berkman and the Goldman woman took their arrest coolly. As they were leaving the hall they asked Braun if he would not call a cab at their expense. Braun replied that if they did not like the idea of riding in a street car he would take them away in his own conveyance—a patrol wagon.

The prisoners all said they preferred the car, and rode peaceably to Headquarters. A crowd of men and boys followed the car for about a block, but made no demonstrations.

Inspector McLaughlin questioned Berkman and the Goldman woman in his office when they were brought in. Both said to him that they did not believe in a government of force. The Goldman woman said she intended to keep on giving just such lectures as that which she had delivered in the afternoon. She gave her address as 208 East Twenty-seventh Street, and Berkman gave the same number as his residence.

In giving her pedigree Emma Goldman said she was unmarried. Berkman said he was single.

To the matron at the Mercer Street Station the Goldman woman said the arrest was an outrage. She communicated with friends in the hope of being arraigned before a Magistrate and admitted to bail.

Inspector McLaughlin said last night that among the magazines taken from the hall in which the meeting was held was one containing an article on the late Russell Sage, written by Emma Goldman. The opening paragraph said:

"What an indictment against society before and [illegible] must have been the soil that nurtured such a plant!"

Miss Goldman and Berkman were bailed out late last night by Samuel Edelstein of 140 Henry Street. Bail was fixed at $2,000.

ANTI-DRYDEN MEN STICK; MAY BE DISCIPLINED

Say They Won't Attend Caucus If His Name Is Presented.

SENATOR'S FRIENDS ANGRY

Gov. Stokes May After All Be a Candidate—Jersey Lawmakers Begin Work To-morrow.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J. Jan. 8.—The news that the Union County Democratic delegation will refuse to enter a caucus for United States Senator unless the name of Senator John F. Dryden is withdrawn was first received here with incredulity, but was confirmed to-day by THE TIMES correspondent, who called upon each member of the Union County Executive delegation and received the positive assurance that, while the declaration made by them last night did not state specifically that they would refuse to go into the caucus if Dryden's name was presented, they meant that.

But the end is not yet, the Dryden men say. The Dryden leaders say they do not like the attitude of a small county seeking to dictate to the whole Republican majority of South Jersey. This year, they assert, South Jersey rules the Republican Party, and will continue to do so.

The State leaders, who are back of Dryden, believe that the fight against Dryden has been worked up by the Colby people. They say the talk about Supreme Court Justice Mahlon Pitney being a candidate was sprung to embarrass Dryden. Pitney, they say, told Robert Mecker of Union County that he did not want the Senatorship, and would not accept it if it was tendered him.

It is whispered here that Gov. Stokes would not refuse the election if he could get it. If he were elected he could announce that he would not go to Washington and be sworn in until the expiration of his official term, as did La Follette of Wisconsin. In this way Stokes would be keeping faith with the statement of last week that he intended to serve out his term of Governor.

It was declared here to-day by a State leader of high degree that the kind of ex-United States Senator Jamie Smith, Jr., could be seen in the parting forward of Mr. Pitney for the United States Senatorship. There were rumors last week that he stood ready to give Senator Dryden a few Democratic votes if Dryden could not find enough in the Republican ranks.

The one hundred and thirty-first Legislature opens on Tuesday, and the latest gossip about the formation of the Assembly is that two Democratic members of Passaic County have kicked over the traces and propose to vote for the return of James Parker of Passaic as clerk of the House. Parker is a Republican, and has been clerk for seven consecutive years.

Tomorrow and Tuesday will witness the greatest Democratic jubilee demonstration New Jersey has ever seen. In 1902 the faithful flocked to Trenton to give Voorhees the last Democratic Governor of the State the proper kind of a [illegible] It is a magnificent [illegible] the first

Gohier, "has been its exploitation of the spirit of patriotism. The feudal lords never thought of this. Having established their domination over the land, they accepted the task of defending it against all enemies. During the middle ages it was a generally accepted principle, which was as just as it was logical, that every man owed military service to the country in proportion to his wealth, especially in proportion to his landed wealth. The person who owned nothing had nothing to defend, and so was not expected to do military service. . . . It was the Bourgeoisie, become sovereign, that invented obligatory and unpaid military service. . . . The ancient régime kept in check the working classes by mercenaries, generally Swiss, Germans or Irish. But the bourgeois régime of to-day decimates strikers by the hands of the sons of these very strikers; proletarians are shot down by proletarians, an arrangement which is as economical as it is amazing."

Yes, that's the trick of democracy—to rob, oppress and kill the people in the name of the people.

AMONG BARBARIANS

By Emma Goldman.

The difference between a barbarian and a truly civilized being is this: While the former sets up his own opinion as the universal criterion, the latter recognizes no stagnation in the world of ideas; the barbarian condemns; the civilized man endeavors to understand.

The barbarian says, "We live in the most progressive land; we have achieved all that is possible." He considers contrary opinions as criminal and disturbing the harmony of things.

Barbarism is a stagnant swamp; intellectual liberty is the flowing river, the raging torrent carrying away the riff raff of old, decayed institutions.

This barbarism is the great foe of the libertarian and revolutionary element in America. Not the revolutionists only, but also the innovators in the fields of art and literature have no less to endure from the barbarians, though in different form.

The Anarchists are persecuted by absurd legislation; the revolutionaries in art and literature, by our public opinion and moral standards. Anarchists are the victims of police brutality; the artists, dissatisfied with the art conceptions of parlor estheticists, suffer the condemnation of Mrs. Grundy.

Woe to the American artist who will not be the slave of Puritanic hyprocisy. He would die of starvation were he to depend upon his art for the means of subsistence.

It would be difficult to find a judge in the United States who could see in Anarchistic defendants the representatives of a new conception of life; a new world-philosophy, intimately related with the social, scientific, artistic and economic currents of past generations.

In this respect the revolutionists of Europe have the advantage. The authorities of France, Germany, Italy and Russia lack the spirit of the American parvenu, whose most characteristic trait is conceit. Worldly successful, he considers himself perfect; but the self-made man is usually a god-made ass.

European civilization has outgrown the spirit of the parvenu. World-changing revolutions have taken place; and where these lacked, deep-rooted currents developed the consciousness that humanity cannot remain at a standstill.

There, even the powers that be have to some extent fallen under the broadening influence of a higher civilization. Naturally, their interests will determine their inimical attitude towards the heralds of new ideas; still, their antagonism is not of a character to stamp the revolutionists as criminals and degenerates, as is the case in this country.

A Parisian judge, daily passing the site where formerly stood the Bastille, or the Place de la Concorde, the Tuileries Gardens—each and every stone loudly proclaiming the historic mutability of all that is—must necessarily awaken to a clearer appreciation of revolutionary ideas than his American colleague. The latter firmly believes that the path of our social and intellectual growth has been finally and irrevocably marked out by the revolutionary fathers of the republic.

protest; Cantwell and Quinn got six months hard labor for what was considered an incitement to violence. Even the conservative papers ridiculed the conviction and sentence, but once in the hands of the English Government, there is no hope of release until the sentence expires, except by royal pardon. In Great Britain there are no courts of appeal for criminal cases, and a pardon being out of the question, our comrades served their time. The rigors of an English prison affected Cantwell's heart, and he was never the same man afterward. He broke down in 1903, and was taken to St. Paneras Infirmary at the top of Highgate Hill, where I visited him. The air was good and the treatment satisfactory, he said, making no complaints. He was in the danger-ward with a large number of other patients whose cases were considered so hopeless that visitors were allowed at any time during the day. If a patient was able to look out of the window, he was comforted by the sight of the cemetery attached to the infirmary and the cheerful looking gravestones dotting the ground. It must have been a real inspiration to those poor, hopeless mortals to see one after the other passing away, and then look out over that cemetery. Cantwell was made of stern stuff, and after staying there four months he insisted on leaving, much against the advice of those in charge. He was too weak to do propoganda work, but being too independent to live off anyone and wanting something to do, he started a little store in Fulham Road.

Pressed for time, I was unable to see Cantwell again before returning to America. The following is an extract from a letter written by a comrade, a member of "Freedom Group," on January 8th:

"Since you wrote me we have lost poor Cantwell. I saw him a month ago, when he was much as usual, but I suppose that all these months he has been in the infirmary, heart disease was taking firm hold of him, though he suffered no pain. He felt unwell the Sunday before Xmas and stayed in bed; six days later he passed quietly away in his sleep. He suffered greatly for two days, but the pain left before death, I am glad to say. He was buried beside his sister in Edmonton Cemetery —miles away to the N. E.—on the 3rd inst. Only a few of us were able to get to the cemetery, owing to the distance, etc.—it is a pretty, rural spot, and the grave lies in an open, sunny place, just as poor T. C. would have liked. The group sent a wreath, as did the Hydes and one or two other friends. There was a religious ceremony, in spite of Mrs. Hyde's protest (she knows the family well) and Kitz, who was armed with an address to deliver at the grave, had to remain silent, there being too few comrades present. At the burial there was an element of humor which poor C. would have rejoiced in, viz.: A vigorous verbal argument across his coffin before it left the undertaker's, between Mrs. Hyde and C.'s dreadful old missionary uncle, who, as soon as he caught sight of the card on our wreath, went for us like a mad bull, but he was pretty well handled by Mrs. Hyde before calm was restored. They are a queer, hard sort of people. C.'s mother visited him at the infirmary, but his father has never been near him since he gave up the little shop in Fulham two years ago. We shall all miss poor T. C., in spite of his many crochets."

A. D. asked me—a short time ago—to send some picture postal cards to Cantwell, but she forgot to give me his address; its too late now! Farewell, Tom Cantwell! It was worth while meeting you.

they say, about all the Yeoland women being ready to ruin themselves for—love. We are none of us really good, you know, except poor Rosamond, and she was so very plain. I remember once, when I was a little child, hearing some one say that no woman with Yeoland blood ever had any morals, and I suppose it's true.'

"She spoke in a tone of mild speculation not enlightened with amusement, but the old man winced."

Pam, the daughter, who is the heroine of the story, is charmingly frank, unspoiled and natural. In talking with the same old man she says, in answer to his questions: "My name is Pamela, just Pamela. It appears that children whose parents are not married have only one name."

In defense of her mother she says: "It wasn't her fault that father was married. . . . Of course she and father were sorry about Mrs. Kennedy, but they couldn't very well kill her, could they?"

Pam always considers her mother's love life an ideal one (which is one of the weak points in the story), and very early in her own life determines never to marry. When about ten years old she has the following conversation with an old housekeeper:

"I wish that I had twins."

"Perhaps your husband might not be pleased, though, Miss Pam."

"I am not going to have a husband."

"Now what a young lady you are, to be sure! There's no danger of your being an old maid."

"Who said I was going to be an old maid? Of course I shan't. I shall have a lover, and he will adore me as father adores mother; but marriage is a bêtise. Imagine me being an old maid!"

Some years later, in answer to the question why she thought love could not endure in marriage, she says:

"Because marriage seems to me to be so hampered and narrowed by a thousand humdrum cares and superstitions; because married people squabble and get over being in love; because the very fact that one has sworn to keep on feeling a certain way is bound to make one change. Imagine vowing in church to hate and loathe your bitterest enemy all the rest of your life and then trying to do it! It stands to reason that you'd begin to like him before you had got out of the church door! . . . I think people who love each other need no promises."

She falls in love with a man who has promised to marry a titled lady because she will aid him in his political career. His final choice is an obscure life with Pam rather than a brilliant one without her, but she refuses to accept him at such a sacrifice. She argues:

"It—your career—will never get old and wrinkled; it will never be ill; it will never contradict and torment you. And I should do all these things. All this, to say nothing of hurting her so terribly."

"But why should you mind hurting her? You have never blamed your mother for doing what she did—and what she did was more than what you might do."

". . . But now, somehow—perhaps because I know Lady Henrietta, and because I know that she loves you as much as I do—I simply can't do it."

After this they have one happy summer day together in "Arcadia," the name of her parents' home; then they part, presumably forever.

There is another book advertised, "Pam Decides," with, I presume, the same character, in which, I hope, the god of love may be kinder.

"THREE ACRES AND LIBERTY."

This is the title of a new book by Bolton Hall which is now on the Macmillan presses and which will be published March 1. It is intended to open the eyes of the city man of small means, and the working man on precarious wages, to the feasibility of getting a living out of from one to three acres, either with or without giving up his present occupation, and without cutting himself off from near neighbors; also to show the possibilities of intensive culture. The author has endeavored to be absolutely practical, and in all cases to offer proof that the assertions made, if open to question, are justified.

LECTURE TOUR.

I intend to go on a lecture tour, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the Mother Earth Sustaining Fund. I have already been invited by the San Francisco comrades, and, on my way to the coast, I am prepared to lecture in the larger cities. Those wishing to arrange meetings will please communicate with me at once.

WHERE THE POLICE DO NOT INTERFERE.

Other people's inconsistencies are the queerest things in the world. I am led to this reflection by recalling a vaudeville performance I attended the other day. Usually the only amusement I get out of these affairs is in watching, in blasé superiority, an audience moved to merriment by fantastic horse-play, broad jokes and a kind of caterwauling which they innocently believe to be singing. As a rule I go away glad to get a breath of fresh air, and piously thanking God that I am not as other men.

After a disgusted interval of two or three years I went again the other day, and I think vaudeville is getting on. I was highly amused by a quiet monologist who seemed at home before his audience instead of merely brazen; endured with fortitude the usual "negro melodies"; laughed before I knew it at a revamped mother-in-law joke, and held my breath while the balancers did wonderful things with pyramids of lighted lamps and dinner plates set on edge.

I went in at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The playhouse was near the center of the shopping district, but to my surprise three-fourths of the large audience were men. I should have thought I was in the wrong pew if I had not known that the house was entirely "respectable." Hereafter I mean to beware of the so-called respectable. I have been misled by it several times of late, and had my sense of propriety outraged within its hypocritical precincts. On this particular occasion my mind flew to Bernard Shaw and "Mrs. Warren's Profession" for sanctuary!

Because I enjoy showing up other people's inconsistencies I must give a hint of the kind of thing which the police (our theatrical censors) consider harmless from a moral point of view—which is the same as saying that it is the kind of thing they enjoy. Who ever believes in his heart that what he really enjoys is harmful?

At the close of the afternoon a one-act skit was put on which appealed to my esthetic sense because it was well acted; but I confess I am not so well grounded in immodesty but that I blushed for everybody concerned except the women who were not there. I was proud of them, for I concluded they had taken the censorship into their own hands, where it ought to be, and had condemned the performance by staying away.

The scene was a stateroom in a sleeping car. An unmarried couple, strangers to each other, are traveling on other people's passes belonging to a man and his wife. The train conductor, wiser than he should be but not so frank, gives them the same stateroom. From this point on it needs Mr. Shaw himself to write of the play without giving offense to the reader. People who eat meat should never go to such places nor attempt to describe them in mixed company. I refuse myself to go any farther in this direction, and would not have alluded to it at all except in pursuit of the aforementioned inconsistency.

The point I wish to make is this: The blundering, stupid, low-minded police, in whose hands, practically, the censorship is in New York, permit this suggestive, lascivious sketch, nicely calculated to rouse (if I may speak plainly) the already overstimulated instincts of men, to be played in a leading theater every afternoon and evening without a protest.

But they confess themselves horribly shocked at a play like "Mrs. Warren's Profession," in which there is not a salacious word or a suggestive situation, where there is not even a low-necked dress nor a short skirt. The truth is, they are shocked by Shaw's play because they scent danger to their profession. It was written to show the degradation which comes to women who pander to the debased appetites of men, and shows fearlessly the false social condition which drives women into that occupation.

The only inference possible is that in the eyes of the police it is disclosure of the cause of body and soul destroying thoughts and practices which is shocking, not the things themselves. The police get their living because of these practices, and only a simple-minded person saws off the limb on which he is sitting.

I suspect I have made the police out to be not so inconsistent after all. Maybe it is the public, which does not see through their little game, which is really queer.—Bertha W. Howe, in Truth Seeker (New York).

nanimity and gentleness. I had not been mild, and a smaller man would not have felt particularly friendly just then.

His time was short and he left before the meeting was over, refusing to accept his expense money, saying: "Keep that as my contribution." I never met him again.

Of his recent conversion to socialism I have little to say. It did not surprise me. I had recognized before that his mind was of the unstable order which has to be changing. Had he gone into Unitarianism, or Catholicism, that also would not have surprised me. He would not have remained a socialist any more than he remained an anarchist, or a single taxer, because he could not remain anything. But, in the party or out of it, he would always have been a splendid force; and in the summing up of his life, the balance must go to the credit side. For the effective and concentrated efforts of his best years were for progress, humanism, liberty.

Would that he had died sooner, or not so soon.

THE NEWER ETHICS

BY HELENE STOECKER, Ph.D.

"The noble one wishes to create something new, and a new virtue.
"The good one willeth that old things should be preserved."

Nietzsche (Zarathustra).

IF one believes in the eternal growth and continual development of life and sees in struggle the father of all things, then one must also realize that the duty of humanity lies in seeking newer and higher forms of society. The oft-repeated reproach that because one does not pretend to have reached the last goal of human development, one must consequently deny that a newer code of ethics could even be created, cannot be taken seriously. Then, with Zarathustra, one remembers that the greatest danger for the future development of mankind comes through the "good and just," those who speak and feel in their heart: "We know already what is good and just, we have it; alas, for those who still seek for it!" The "good and just" have since time immemorial crucified those who wrote "new words on new scrolls." Our work does not lie with those who are in contented possession of all virtue and wisdom, but rather with those who seek new and higher goals for humanity.

Nothing is more mistaken than to imagine that because one seeks newer ethics, one would consequently abolish all standards of morality. We cannot be without standards. There only remains the question of establishing their relative values. Life, as it comes with the value of our human consciousness, has grown to have the highest of all values. Everything, therefore, which tends to strengthen and broaden life must be considered as a higher form of social development. On the other hand, everything which depreciates its value must be considered harmful and immoral.

Consequently, customs which may have been considered "good" under a now obsolete form of society, would not be so if measured by the standards of a later development. No one can deny this who believes in the growth of life.

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

With this issue MOTHER EARTH enters upon her second year's journey, with colors flying.

Last year's path was thorny, but not without fruitful results. The first anniversary was celebrated by more than four hundred friends from New York, Brooklyn and New Jersey, while those who could not attend gave evidence of their interest and appreciation by sending contributions.

We are grateful to our friends, and we promise to use our best efforts towards still further improving the educational and literary standard of MOTHER EARTH.

Those whose subscription has expired at the end of the first year will greatly aid us by sending in their renewals, so that we may know on how many of our old friends we may count.

The characteristic features of the Thaw case are: poverty, the power of money, venality of woman's love, man's greediness to possess. The central figure in this tragedy is a young woman—an article of sexual luxury, surrounded by prospective buyers. The purchaser regards her in the light of his private property, as he would his horse.

The young girl soon learns to play her part: the poverty-stricken mother looks upon the beauty of her daughter as a future source of revenue; nothing offers such opportunities for "friendships" with rich men as the chorus.

Such men are seducers; yet still more so, the seduced. Woman's virtue, to them, is a tempting morsel; but while they are lavishing their money, they become the victims of subtle deceit. Priding themselves on their victory over innocence, they are conquered by woman's cunning.

Stanford Whites and Thaws can purchase bodies, but their combined wealth could not buy a single soul. That is the tragedy of such lives, as well as the comedy. Their victim is at the same time the avenger of her sex-slavery. Is she, the marketable thing, to be faithful? The master satiated, the slave is once more on the market. Serving White, she must still look out for another possible buyer. She meets Thaw—a simpleton, whose intellect would not suffice to make him a successful bootblack; but he is rich. He is a more promising catch than White; the latter, a man of "experience," is not so easily tricked. Thaw would guarantee the continuation of the life of luxury, to which she has become accustomed; he would even marry her, that she may realize her dream of an idle, rich, parasitic life.

Some marriages become prostitution; in this case, prostitution became marriage. The latter legalized the woman's swindle and caused the man's violent folly.

But for the wedding, it would have been simply a case of prostitution, like a thousand other similar cases, characteristic of our good, moral society. Marriage, legalizing and complicating things, made the murder possible.

Because of the marriage—and the man's wealth—the girl became the legal property of Thaw; it was the latter's "duty" to guard the "honor" of the woman, not to speak of his own "honor." As lover, his honor was of no consideration; it became operative with the marriage.

Her marriage forced the woman into greater deceit. She must no longer openly market her charms; tact and diplomacy are necessary to preserve marital decorum. She continues her relations with White; perhaps she even cares for him more than for her husband. The latter sees in her virtuous innocence persecuted; he believes implicitly her wild stories of the Bluebeard White. Finally he feels that morality demands vindication. He kills White and imagines that he has delivered his wife from her hated persecutor; he was "instrumental in the triumph of decency over vice."

The hangman condemns; the free-minded man strives to understand. The question here is not who was right or who was wrong; rather, whether it is not necessary and possible to create a social atmosphere, where woman should cease to be a commodity, and mankind in general be delivered from the curse of money-greed and morality.

Why should the rich not rejoice and go to church? The latter teaches that "the rich and the poor we must always have with us," thus serving as the pillar of the parasitic existence of the wealthy.

Why should the rich not love the State? The latter, by cunning and violence, guards their stolen wealth against the hungry producers.

The rich should also love the army; the latter secures to them possession of the Philippines and other islands; it tyrannizes over the natives and presses profits from them—for the rich.

But the poor—why should they care for these institutions? Those who continue to do so are the victims of a false education, misleading teachings and mental inertia.

Karl Marx taught his diciples that economics are the foundation of politics. His modern apostles have, however, reversed his teaching; their motto is, "Let us win political power; then we shall revolutionize the economic conditions." They have endeavored to transplant the center of revolution from the factory to Parliament, from the street to the counting room. Hence the transformation of economic revolutionary Socialism into a political reform-movement. The strength of the latter depends on votes, not on revolutionaries. A parliamentary party must limit its activities to the constitution and laws of the country, thus aiding in upholding existing institutions. It cannot put itself outside of the law, since such a position would stamp all political activity on its part illogical and absurd.

Every government represents the legislative and administrative power of the bourgeoisie; the revolutionary proletarian must oppose it, rather than try to reform it.

Existing institutions can only be strengthened by the use of political power; to believe in their overthrow by such means is utopian. The social revolution begins where the belief in government and the present "order" ceases.

Herein lies the folly of parliamentary Socialists: attempting to smuggle the social revolution under cover of reform, they merely succeeded in turning reformers and politicians.

By such means the German Social-Democracy had achieved great political "success." During many years it was the beacon of all parliamentary Socialists; soon it will serve as a sad example of what a true Labor Party should not be.

The January elections in Germany prove that the Socialistic power of political enlistment is exhausted. They have profited little by compromising with the Philistines, the lower middle class and the Clerical Party. They took good care to keep clear from the revolutionary and Anarchist element; indeed, their leaders were ever busy in keeping the party "pure." The energetic and progressive elements of the proletariat found the atmosphere of the party too stifling—they either left or were expelled. It was that very fear of offending popular prejudices that resulted in the Socialistic failure during the last elections.

The Socialists of Germany are between two fires—the revolutionary proletariat and the bourgeoisie. Gradually they must lose the confidence of the former, since their tactics condemn the working man to continue passively to suffer exploitation and oppression. Neither can they gain the confidence of the bourgeoisie, since the latter naturally prefers the safe representation of the tried parties—the Conservative and the Liberal.

Revolutionary Socialists welcome the débacle of the parliamentary card-house. They have long since realized the fatality of political success; the mass, however, must first experience the reductium ad absurdum, ere it can find the proper solution.

of Russia in thick streams, but the precious fluid serves to strengthen the revolution and to make Tsarism weak and lifeless. Lacking internal vitality, the Russian despotism believes to have found a much-needed stimulant in the Duma. The latter is to save the knout; it should bring "order" out of the existing chaos and rehabilitate an ignominious government.

In case of success, European and American financiers would regain their confidence in the autocracy, and more cash would be forthcoming to aid in suppressing the revolution.

Ideals do not pay. If we happen to possess any remnants of old convictions, we should put them on the shelf with other bric-a-brac, to be occasionally admired in a pensive mood.

Is it not a proof of a "fine soul" to talk of the asininities of one's youthful days? When business is slack, it is rather pleasant to recollect "those wild things." Of course, one must not forget himself so far as to call back to life old ideals and, perchance, become active in their behalf.

Thus philosophise the "wise," the "practical," the matter-of-fact people; they shrug their shoulders, assuring us that life must be taken as it is, not as it should be. But what is life? Life spells hypocrisy; the world is peopled with sneaks, renegades and cowards. A few thousand more or less of this calibre—what does it matter?! The competition among them is constantly growing more intense; soon the ex-idealist realizes that he has been doubly cheated: he has bartered the best part of himself for profit, and now he finds himself sadly disappointed in his expectations.

THE RED MONTH

THERE are days in history that should be prohibited by governments; days of an exciting, destructive character, possessing the power of rousing the elemental forces of men into activity; days apparently unrelated to the rest of the year.

Our immigration laws prohibit the landing of persons who disbelieve in organized government, thus barring Anarchists from our joyful shores. Alas, what an ineffectual method of keeping out "obnoxious elements"!

To properly protect the subjects of this country against the spirit of rebellion, it is necessary to banish the historical dates, when organized governments have been forcibly overthrown.

Ye Legislators, to the front! You have a great task to perform. 'Tis of little avail to expel the John Turners, so long as the lessons of revolutionary history—and their pernicious ideas—are accessible to the people.

March is the red month in the modern history of Europe. America has not as yet experienced such dangerous events;—too dangerous for power and authority. The war of 1776 was, after all, but a territorial, not a national revolution: the refuse of all countries, thrown into the American pot, could hardly be called a Nation. The Monroe doctrine existed before it was conceived by Monroe. "English lords may continue to rob the Irish peasants and oppress the industrial slaves of Lancashire and Manchester, as they please; on American soil we can exploit labor ourselves." Such were the arguments of the newly-baked American patriots, who saw in this country the greatest source of wealth and power.

European revolutions had a different aspect; there the Nations were swept by the fires of social and economic regeneration.

March eighteenth and nineteenth, 1848, are memorable in the history of Prussia. Citizens, students and workmen of Berlin fought the hireling army of the government, on barricades. The throne began to totter. The people carried their fallen dead before the palace and demanded that the king pay his respects to the noble dead. The storm of March had performed a miracle: for once the king obeyed the people.

The Revolution spread through Germany, Austria and France. Unfortunately, however, the revolutionary

È una data che si ricorda sempre con commozione profonda, è un anniversario che nella storia delle affermazioni, delle rivolte e delle ascensioni proletarie, lente ma ostinate, segna l'aurora di troppe speranze nuove, di diritti e di rivendicazioni troppo umane perchè possa ricorrere inosservato.

Il fascino che nella mente dello studioso e dello storico, l'impressione incancellabile che nell'animo del proletariato internazionale, l'orrore che in tutti i pudibondi preconizzatori di cose sante — dalla santa inquisizione alla santa alleanza — esercitò ed imprese, pur effimero e rapido come una meteora, il tentativo comunalista del 1871 non emanando soltanto dalla fierezza eroica con cui, nella diserzione, nell'abbandono, nell'abbiezione di tutti, la santa canaglia raccolse nel suo ferreo pugno i destini e le fortune della Francia tradita, immeschinita

Vibrano echi ben diversi dal movimento comunalista del 1871. Esso dice che la questione non istà tutta nel trasferire da dio all'uomo il diritto di governare; esso dice che il suffragio universale significando delegazione, alienazione, rinunzia di tutti a qualcuno, è frode, è un diritto che esercitandosi si annichilisce: la contesa non è intorno alla forma dello Stato, è sullo Stato, e la federazione dei comuni liberi ed autonomi della Francia, tentata dai lavoratori di Parigi nel Marzo 1871, è negazione dello Stato. E rompendola colla vecchia menzogna convenzionale e democratica dell'alleanza tra lavoro e capitale insegna, coll'esempio e coll'opera che L'EMANCIPAZIONE DEI LAVORATORI SARÀ OPERA DEI LAVORATORI, O NON SARÀ.

Ecco perchè il 18 MARZO 1871 si ricorda sempre con commozione profonda, ecco perchè l'Anniversario della Comune lanca e della menzogna salito unanime tra gli incensi profusi e le lacrime bugiarde l'inno magnifico alle sue virtù!

Tacquero: nessuno mostrò accorgersi che una grande intelligenza ed un nobile cuore si erano spenti per sempre.

Gli è che ERNEST CROSBY era un innamorato del popolo, di cotesta immensa forza umana che lotta angosciata dalla tenebra e dal dolore, ed in mezzo alla quale egli procedeva agitando la fiaccola della speranza e della libertà.

"Ogni araldo d'emancipazione trovava un fratello in lui che si schierava con Tolstoi contro ogni ipotesi, contro ogni concezione dello Stato; che per la libertà del pensiero, del pensiero anarchico sopratutto, aveva combattuto e combatteva con un fervore e con un'energia che nessuno in questa nostra repubblica aveva osato per lo spirito spiegare".

Così, parlando di lui, concludeva

Ed ogni qualvolta io ho cercato di rimuovere il Crosby da questo suo atteggiamento convitandolo alle battaglie del socialismo libertario egli rispondeva che "simpatizzava colle idee nostre ma giudicava il socialismo marxista una minaccia allo sviluppo dell'umanità e della libertà".

Mi scriveva nel corso di queste amichevoli discussioni: "uno stato socialista richiederebbe in tutti i suoi cittadini un'anima d'angeli che soltanto secoli e secoli possono maturare. In quest'attesa parmi che l'attingere un po' di giustizia sia campo abbastanza vasto al lavoro politico; all'infuori della politica noi non possiamo che fomentare una larga corrente di cooperazione. Certo è tentazione grande quella di lavorare ad un movimento internazionale, ma io non posso farlo: che pensereste di me se lavorassi a pro' della chiesa cattolica romana quando sapete che tutti i suoi dogmi ripugnano alla mia ragione? Mi conforta del resto l'essere in buona

Ernest Crosby

La sete di dovizie e di potere do- mina ed urge così sciaguratamente ogni ora della vita nostra, turbandone e corrompendone le fonti vive, che noi la trascorriamo intera senza dedi- care nè un minuto nè un pensiero al carattere, all'intelligenza, ai principii.

Freme in noi un'unica ossessione: arrivare, arrivare ad ogni costo! Se il successo si deve chiedere ad umani olocausti scellerati, se la fortuna deve edificarsi sullo strazio di tenace vite dilaniate nelle fabbriche, se la vitto- ria deve carpirsi tra l'ecatombe, non importa — purchè si arrivi.

Accade così che i cnori più nobili e le menti più elette passino inosservati ed ignorati fra la turba affannosa di cui hanno volnto elevare il tenore di vita, il sentimento della fierezza, il re- taggio della libertà.

Così è accaduto di Ernest Crosby, uno dei più generosi figli che dal grembo di questa America cinica sie- no nati, e che la morte ci rapì ama- ramente or sono sei settimane.

Oh, se egli fosse stato un armeg- gione della politica torbida, un arri- vista senza scrupoli e senza pudore, un ladro avventurato del lavoro e del sudore degli umili, sarebbe dalle co- lonne dei grandi quotidiani della pa- vore e con un'energia che nessuno in questa nostra repubblica aveva osato per lo innanzi spiegare".

Così, parlando di lui, conchiudeva recentemente un altro eletto spirito americano. Leonard Abbott: così noi che l'abbiamo intimamente conosciu- to lamentiamo la perdita di ERNEST CROSBY come quella di uno dei più puri, dei più gagliardi campioni del nostro Ideale.

Perchè il Crosby fu anarchico piut- tosto che socialista, e la sua predile- zione non originava da dispetti, da capricci o da miserie ma da una ra- gione logica e da un esame coscien- zioso delle due dottrine.

Uno studio accurato ed una dili- gente inchiesta aveva egli condotto sulla concezione socialista, e la sua ostilità al socialismo non si era che accentuata. Ciò spiega come egli alla conferenza tenutasi alla Stoke Man- sion di Norotow, lo scorso anno, egli prendesse parte cogli individualisti piuttosto che coi socialisti; e come egli prendesse il suo posto di com- battimento discutendo in contradditorio con Jack London l'ultima volta che questi parlò a New York.

L'ultimo articolo che egli mi man- dò ribadiva i giudizii di Lafcadio He- arn che "il socialismo è una reversio- ne a forme sociali superate"; e con- chiudeva: "I socialisti hanno diritto a tutte le nostre simpatie in quanto lottano contro le iniquità presenti, ma essi seguono una diagnosi sba- gliata quando coteste ingiustizie de- rivano dall'individualismo. A valle delle nostre sommità sociali noi ab- biamo da parte del monopolio e del pregiudizio una vera negazione del- l'individualismo, e, per me, unico effi- cace rimedio sta nel rendere l'indivi- duo sempre più padrone di sè stesso, non nell'assoggettarlo schiavo di or- [illegible] dissepolte dagli ipogei pro' della chiesa cattolica romana quando sapete che tutti i suoi dogmi ripugnano alla mia ragione? Mi con- forta del resto l'essere in buona com- pagnia: nè Tolstoi nè Whitman, ne sono certo, si sarebbero mai ascritti ad un partito, e neppure Carpenter, per quanto posso dai suoi scritti giu- dicarne. Sarei lietissimo di associarmi all'opera vostra tanto più che potrei portarvi un po' della mia esperienza di vecchio repubblicano; la coscienza non vuole. Ma vi sarò grato se mi vor- rete annoverare compagno in questa larga famiglia socialista in cui posso- no stare Edward Carpenter, Eugenio Debs, George Herron e Maxim Gorki.

Il ritratto di William Morris pen- deva alle pareti del suo studio; di Car- penter aveva riassunto e volgarizzate le idee per gli americani, di Debs e di Herron fu amico sincero, e Massi- mo Gorki aveva ripetutamente visi- tato a State Island e nelle vallate di Adirondacks.

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

The expressions of sympathy in certain quarters in favor of Free Russia are occasionally rather surprising. Professional politicians, Wall Street gamblers, reverends, penny-a-liners and other pillars of the capitalistic system grace with their presence protest meetings and become enthusiastic over liberty—for Russia. All of them, of course, agree that in this blessed land of ours we are enjoying the very perfection of freedom; indeed, some of the speakers at those meetings assure us that the sole object of the present Russian revolution is to bring about the very conditions for which this country is "so justly famed": liberty of press and speech, and the equal rights of all.

Indeed, Columbia may boast of her freedom! The five-fold judicial murder at Chicago, in 1887; the present conspiracy to hang the leaders of the Western Federation of Miners; the common occurrence of shooting down starving strikers; the police suppression of meetings all over the country; the all-powerful press censorship at Washington; Comstock outrages and the imprisonment of publishers and editors of radical magazines—not to speak of our abject economic slavery—are these not the best proofs of our vaunted freedom!

A characteristic friend of freedom—for Russia—is Mr. S. L. Clemens, whose business it is to supply the nation with humor. We had the opportunity of observing Mr. Clemens at a recent meeting at Carnegie Hall, where the speakers of the evening very forcibly condemned the brutal régime of the Tsar. It was gratifying to see the venerable white head of our humorist nod approval as the speakers characterised the Tsar as an inhuman beast, unfit to live in the twentieth century. A few days later, however, Mr. Clemens participated in the banquet given by the New York Russian Consul in honor of a certain Spiridonovitch—that infamous Panslavist and Jew baiter, sent to America by the Tsar's government to create public sentiment in favor of his autocratic master. Mr. Clemens, the friend of Russian Freedom, and Spiridonovitch, the red-handed arch reactionary, drinking the health of the Russian Nero—did Mark Twain ever before perpetrate such a capital joke?

One who can write such beautifully anarchistic characterizations of all politics, as Mark Twain did, and then go on the stump for a mayoralty candidate, must be a humorist indeed. We admire such versatility, and we are moved by deepest emotion when we behold a man with a heart spacious enough to take in even the rather respectable proportions of Grover. Familiar as we were with the man's admirable versatility, we were surprised, however, to see our Mark fraternize with the Russian revolutionists and then drink the health of the blood-stained Tsar.

"For ways that are dark, and tricks that are vain, American humor is peculiar."

The trial of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone has again been postponed. The governmental conspirators are mistaken, however, if they hope thus to lull to sleep the interest of the laboring masses. The latter are aroused; they will not be quieted by the empty assurances of political lackeys, mine owners and corrupt labor leaders.

Those familiar with the case and who remember the tactics followed in the prosecution of Adams—the prologue of this tragedy—realize the terrible significance of the appropriations made by the Idaho Legislature and mine owners for the benefit of the prosecution. The intention, all too apparent, is to hang the defendants: the coal barons do not wish to be disturbed any more in their methods of exploitation; they will not shrink back from murder to attain their ends.

We hope that the laboring masses of this country will not suffer themselves to be misled by "the wise counsel of trusted leaders"—if they would prevent a repetition of the judicial murders of 1887.

It is not sufficient to raise defense funds and attend protest meetings. There is but one way to secure justice for Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone—the General Strike. The file and rank of organized labor must take the initiative; let "the leaders" follow. May the success of this weapon in gaining repeated victories for our European brothers prove a salutary lesson for America.

Having swallowed the Beef Trust and sent up the flue the Oil Trust, and after having saved the country from half a dozen other monsters, the White House Don Quixote tightened his armor and was ready to wreck the Railroad Trust.

In vain did his faithful Sancho Panza—Cortelyou—warn and lament; the brave Don Ruzvelt was not to be trifled with. "I must liberate the peepul!" he cried, while the dear peepul awaited the great deed with bathed breath.

But alas! Don Ruzvelt found his windmill. It was a beautiful sunny morning when Sir Pierpont appeared before the Don. What happened history doth not tell. But the Don threw away his lance, and the dear peepul are still awaiting the liberating deed.

One year ago the radical movement lost a pioneer of freedom—John Most.

His life in America was a tragedy, a continuous battle with the stupidity of the "free" citizens and the brutality of the authorities. Here his path was strewn with far greater obstacles than in Europe. Persecuted though he was in the Old World, he yet found there a far more congenial atmosphere than in this free country: the revolutionary spirit has won recognition in Europe; here it is still to be conquered. There, the soldier of Revolution is looked upon as the representative of a new philosophy of life; though persecuted, he is never treated as a thief or highwayman, as is the case in free America. It is characteristic of the alleged progress of the two most "civilized" countries that Comrade Most suffered the greatest persecution in England and America; in the prisons of the latter he first learned that "there are no political prisoners in a free country"; and he was treated accordingly.

America is the best proof that social tyranny and economic despotism are safest under the mask of political phrases. Never before in all history has a nation been so successfully oppressed and exploited in the very name of liberty, in the name of its own fictitious sovereignty.

How make the blind see? That is the difficult problem that propagandists must face, as did John Most. The attempt to solve it constitutes the great tragedy in the life of the active revolutionist.

Comrade Most drained the bitter cup to its dregs. Neither persecution nor misunderstanding, however, could break his spirit. He died, as he had lived, carrying the torch of Freedom.

The thousand flickering torches but dimly lighted the broad Parisian boulevard. Great was the indignation over the unexpected strike of the electrical workers: fashionable Paris longed for the opera; but the temple of art was darkened and in the dim candle-light the cashiers could be seen counting the money to be returned for already purchased tickets. Finding the theatres also deserted, "society" hastened to the fashionable cafés and restaurants. Alas! The usually so gay and brilliant resorts were enveloped in darkness and gloom. Disappointed and desperate, they order their chauffeurs to drive to their clubs. But, oh horrors! Not a single electric light there to gladden their hearts!

Naturally, they raged and fumed. They could not enjoy unilluminated life. Vanity fair needs light, light, light. Living in the seeming, not in the being, they need electric splendors. How dared the proletarians deprive the elect of the brightness of their salons! Have not they —the international flaneurs of the Parisian boulevards—been generous to the rabble? Are they not liberal contributors to philanthropic enterprises? Are they not capable of shedding copious tears at witnessing misery—on the stage? Are they not liberal in giving their old clothes to their chambermaids? Is it not heartless, brutal and selfish to deprive them so suddenly of their accustomed pleasures?

Elegant Paris fumed and the parasites of all lands sympathized with them. What! Has the rabble grown so bold as to become more indispensable than machines? Do they dare to play a rôle in the life of the élite?

The anger of the chosen is quite explicable. Today Paris, to-morrow Newport; yesterday the opera, and then the race-track. And all of a sudden the realization is forced upon them that their very life is dependent on the silent consent of the millions. They lounge about in brilliant

ON THE ROAD

By EMMA GOLDMAN.

THE road, the open road! What grand inspiration it gave the "gray poet," what wonderful vistas it disclosed to him, of space, color, beauty, opportunity, wisdom. "The secret of the making of the best person, the room for a great personal deed, the test of wisdom, the strength that will overwhelm all law and mock all authority." All that, and more, the open road meant to the great American poet, and to all those who, like Whitman, could walk along the open road, strong-limbed, careless, child-like, full of the joy of life, carrying the message of liberty, the gladness of human comradeship.

But what of society's outcasts, the tramps, the homeless, shelterless, worn and weary? Does the road mean to them what it meant to the great Walt? Does it not rather mean to them a desert, cold, dreary, aimless? Hated and feared; everywhere hounded; hungry, wretched, with bleeding feet; walking, walking, walking—can the road inspire them to great deeds and liberating thoughts?!

And the workingman, tramping from town to town in search of a master, can he rejoice in the beauties of the open road? The cries of his starving little ones make him deaf to the music of the birds and the sweet symphony of rustling leaves; not for him the enchanting beauty of a spring day's birth, nor the color symphony of the setting sun. For him, relief is but within the gloomy walls of factory or mill, and the sweetest music in the whirring wheels.

Or to the immigrant, forced to leave his native soil, the cradle of his youthful dreams, plans and aspirations; in a strange land, dragged along with wife and child—what does the open road mean to him but fear and dread and anxiety.

The English tourist, tall, lean and arrogant; the German with his typical green clothes and cap, and his Gretchen, fat, heavy and dull, the very embodiment of the monarchical three K's—Kirche, Kaiser, Kinder—what do they see in the road? Herded in an excursion party, intent upon the guide who, trumpet and watch in hand, shouts the names of historical places and events—ah, one has but to see them along the country roads, or in New York, Paris and London—worn, dusty, perspiring —the very incarnation of stupidity and boredom. What means the road to them?

And the carrier of a new message, the pioneer of the new thought, the singer of liberty, what does the road mean to him or her? Contumely, slander, hatred, lack of understanding, disappointments, persecution, imprisonment.

These and other thoughts filled my mind as the train rushed along in the darkness of the night.

Cleveland. The same dark, gloomy, filthy Union Depot, the same terrible contrast between the rich and the poor, as in the days prior to the Single-Tax Mayor's régime. Euclid Avenue with its magnificent mansions and spacious lawns, and the squalid dens where the poor are herded—all just as before.

Our Cleveland groups of young boys have done their utmost within the last few years to spread the ideas of Anarchism. Now they have built up a nice little library of Russian, German, Jewish and English literature. The bright, inviting spot serves as the headquarters for the thinking, groping working people of the neighborhood.

The boys spared no efforts to make the meetings successful; as a result I had large, appreciative audiences.

The most pleasant and interesting surprise in Cleveland proved my host and hostess, a young couple recently transplanted from the revolutionary soil of Russia to a miserable, squalid American cottage. Both fanatical opponents of Anarchism; yet generous, attentive and hospitable to an Anarchist. It is well for humanity that the mainsprings of life are not called into play by mere theories; else my hosts would have erected for me a social-democratic scaffold, as they seriously admitted would be the case when Socialism becomes triumphant: "Anarchistic disturbers of public welfare will have to be strung up."

Columbus. The capital of Ohio, the seat of the law's lawlessness. The State House, where the straitjackets for human thought and activity are forged, is indeed an imposing structure. Some day, after it has been cleared of the last vestige of stupidity and crime, the Capitol will serve as a music and lecture hall. At present it harbors too many public thieves to be of any use.

The Johnstown flood or the San Francisco disaster could not have caused greater consternation among the official pillars of society than my arrival here. Orders were issued to every hallkeeper to keep out "the evil spirit." The police and saloon keepers are very closely related; orders were obeyed and the doors closed to us. Having accepted our rent-deposit, the hallkeepers were legally bound to permit the use of their halls; contracts and good faith, however, are of little consequence to "the law-abiding" when free speech is to be strangled.

It is quite astonishing to see intelligent people still cling to the myth of the existence of free speech; experience should have taught them ere this that we have just as much freedom as the club of the average policeman and our own great respect for the latter's authority will permit. Some well-meaning citizens of Columbus called on the Mayor and Chief of Police, naively demanding redress. Alas! These worthies did not even possess the courage of the ordinary thief or burglar. Both assured the citizens that they had nothing whatever to do with stopping my meetings, while their subordinates went about spreading terror among the hall-keepers.

Police, laws and lawmakers are very costly articles; no wonder that the working people of Columbus have such a starved appearance. I have met men here who work for 5—6 dollars per week—about as much as the Chief spends for his cigars. They are suposed to "live," and support their families on six dollars a week. Yet cleanliness is rather expensive, you know. Where is one to get the means, or even the ambition, to keep clean on six dollars a week?

Rare plants sometimes grow in the poorest soil. Dr. C. S. Carr, of Columbus, is certainly such a plant. He is a spiritualist, I am told. But whether spirits exist or not, the doctor seemed to me a spirit from another world when he called to invite me to his home. Though worn out by persistent reporters and other callers, I could not resist the temptation of that sweet personality, that rose-cheeked youth with the snowy white hair. Sitting in his large, beautiful study, I could readily understand Dr. Carr's philosophy of simplicity.

"Why should people not try to beautify even the least they have? Why should they want that which they do not have?"

"Why not, dear Doctor?! Why should man not aspire to greater heights than those in which unjust and cruel institutions have placed him? The theory of contentment, of a simple life of beauty may be all right for those who have comfort, beauty and sunshine. But how about the people doomed to live on five dollars a week? Cleanliness and beauty are too costly for them. The parks, the libraries? Ah, my dear Doctor, the ragpickers of Columbus find no time to breathe the fresh air in the parks, nor to read books in the libraries. And if they really could enjoy the parks and libraries, could they return contentedly to their squalid, miserable hovels?"

I was glad to be the Doctor's guest; it gave me an opportunity to set the ladies of the house right on "that man Gorki," who, as the outraged mock modesty of the Puritans would have it, forsook his wife and is now living with a Russian Evelyn Nesbit. Such was the opinion of the ladies about that pure, noble woman, Mme. Andreieva. If such views are entertained in a liberal home about the most beautiful and sacred relation —made sacred by the power of love and not by the ridiculous mumbling of a priest—what can we expect from the average, unthinking person?

I assured the ladies that there can be no comparison between Mme. Andreieva and Evelyn Nesbit Thaw. Not that I condemn the latter: she is the product of a perverted system of morality; the victim of a stupid institution, called education; the dupe of a vicious thing, called religion; the two having degraded woman to a sex commodity. Mme. Andreieva, however, is of a different type. I do not know her personally; but I know that she is one of that great host of Russia's daughters who have freed themselves from the fetters of conventionality and have declared their right to choose the man they love in perfect freedom; to be his companion, his comrade, at home as on the barricades.

Would, to goodness, that America's daughters should follow the example of their Russian sisters! Then, and not till then, will Columbia stand erect and the voice of Liberty be heard even in Columbus, Ohio.

Toldeo. Happy Golden Rule Jones! It is well that you cannot know that your successor is a gentleman who claims to be a Tolstoyan, a philosophic Anarchist, a friend of Labor—everything, except a lover of free speech.

About to negotiate the strike of the automobile workers of Toledo, this good man was easily frightened by the newspapers: he could not afford to have the terrible doctrine of Communist Anarchism interfere with his negotiations. Poor, poor Labor! I fear me much it has become weak-kneed and bloodless from the sentimental love of its "friends." 'Tis time you'd send those pseudo-friends about their business; walk out in the open, out of the political traps, out of the mayors' offices, out of the halls of legislatures and Congress! Out into the daylight, into the broad, open road of an independent, strong economic self-reliance!

Thanks to the efforts of a few truly big spirits, a meeting was held in Toledo Tuesday, March 12th; the local press conveniently ignored the matter, while the suppression of the meeting on the preceding day was heralded all over the country.

It was an unusually interesting gathering, that at Zenoba Hall. Workingmen, doctors, lawyers; earnest men and women in all walks of life came to the lecture and I was glad of the opportunity to explain to them the true meaning and object of Anarchism.

The most interesting feature of my Toledo visit, however, was the gathering of a few truly free spirits, exceptionally bright and noble souls, with the fire of their revolutionary forbears still buoyantly coursing in their veins. It was my good fortune to meet Mrs. Kate B. Sherwood, one of America's grandest mothers; a mother not merely because of some physiological process, but rather in that wider sense of broad understanding, of comradeship, of oneness with all that which strives for recognition. And Mrs. Pyle, the daughter of Mrs. Sherwood, and Dr. John Pyle, with their enlightened, broad sense of human fellowship, made my hours passed in that true home of liberty an evergreen memory. Dr. J. Pyle, I understand, was once the Socialistic candidate for Congress. He failed to get elected. Fortunate man! He, man of simplicity and affection, with his large vision of human liberty, would have soon withered in the poisonous atmosphere of politics. And Mrs. Laurie Pyle, my sweet hostess, the true comrade and companion, the Anarchist of the soul, that sheds so much love and beauty over that wonderful home on Ashland Avenue.

The road of the pioneer is sown with misunderstanding, obloquy and hatred, yet so long as there are such homes, so long as such spirits live and work—and no doubt there are others, if one were but fortunate enough to find them—there is satisfaction and joy in the labor of Liberty and Love.

"Allons! After the great companions, and to belong to them!
They, too, are on the road—they are the swift and majestic men—they are the greatest women!"

Toronto. Queen Victoria stores and Prince of Wales saloons notwithstanding, Toronto could teach our "Republic" salutary lessons in freedom. I addressed here three meetings, and not a policeman in sight! In Toronto they seem to employ the police at dangerous street crossings, for the protection of children and cripples, while our "finest" are protecting the gambling resorts in Wall Street and suppressing free speech. I suggest that we raise a fund to send our free democratic police to school in Toronto.

Detroit, you have proven a traitor to the memory of that sweetest lark of liberty—Robert Reitzel—whose influence permeated the entire life of the city. Meetings stopped by the brutal arm of the law.

Where are ye, men and women, that have once worshiped at the shrine of "Der Arme Teufel"? Ye, that have celebrated feasts of song, flowers and wine in the sanctum of the great, inimitable Reitzel? All ye who were lifted out of the mire of money-making and have wandered under the palms with that arch-rebel against all sham, law and hypocrisy; where are ye? The spirit of Reitzel is gone; else Detroit would never submit to the brutal rule of Captain Baker.

Robert Reitzel, arise and sweep the city with your cleansing storms; let us hear again the reverberating thunder of your voice, your protests and your condemnation of all cowardice and slavery.

suppression of the meeting on the preceding day was heralded all over the country.

It was an unusually interesting gathering, that at Zenoba Hall. Workingmen, doctors, lawyers; earnest men and women in all walks of life came to the lecture and I was glad of the opportunity to explain to them the true meaning and object of Anarchism.

The most interesting feature of my Toledo visit, however, was the gathering of a few truly free spirits, exceptionally bright and noble souls, with the fire of their revolutionary forbears still buoyantly coursing in their veins. It was my good fortune to meet Mrs. Kate B. Sherwood, one of America's grandest mothers; a mother not merely because of some physiological process, but rather in that wider sense of broad understanding, of comradeship, of oneness with all that which strives for recognition. And Mrs. Pyle, the daughter of Mrs. Sherwood, and Dr. John Pyle, with their enlightened, broad sense of human fellowship, made my hours passed in that true home of liberty an evergreen memory. Dr. J. Pyle, I understand, was once the Socialistic candidate for Congress. He failed to get elected. Fortunate man! He, man of simplicity and affection, with his large vision of human liberty, would have soon withered in the poisonous atmosphere of politics. And Mrs. Laurie Pyle, my sweet hostess, the true comrade and companion, the Anarchist of the soul, that sheds so much love and beauty over that wonderful home on Ashland Avenue.

The road of the pioneer is sown with misunderstanding, obloquy and hatred, yet so long as there are such homes, so long as such spirits live and work—and no doubt there are others, if one were but fortunate enough to find them—there is satisfaction and joy in the labor of Liberty and Love.

"Allons! After the great companions, and to belong to them!
They, too, are on the road—they are the swift and majestic men—they are the greatest women!"

three meetings, and not a policeman in sight! In Toronto they seem to employ the police at dangerous street crossings, for the protection of children and cripples, while our "finest" are protecting the gambling resorts in Wall Street and suppressing free speech. I suggest that we raise a fund to send our free democratic police to school in Toronto.

"QUEEN OF ANARCHISTS"

ANARCHY AND SNUFF AT GOLDMAN MEETING

THE "QUEEN OF ANARCHISTS" SPEAKS AT HOLCOMB'S HALL.

She Contends That Anarchy Means Peace and Not Bloodshed; That Society Rests on Human Instinct and That Instinct Can Not Be Destroyed.

The Emma Goldman who spoke in Holcomb's hall last evening on "Misconceptions of Anarchy," was not the Emma Goldman who has been popularly pictured as waving the red flag of revolt and bloodshed.

"I am opposed to man killing," she said, "but I do not condemn the individuals who take the law in their own hands. That is for the judge."

Radical ideas on free love and armed revolt were conspicuously absent in Miss Goldman's address, and if any among the 200 persons who comfortably filled the hall expected to hear a rabid appeal to passion they were disappointed. Economic conditions, governmental and industrial, were de-

[illegible] educational systems were ridiculed, but there was no talk of bombs or infernal machines. In fact the only opportunity of the evening for the city detectives who were scattered thru the hall, came when an unknown miscreant scattered quantities of Chinese snuff. Miss Goldman was not disconcerted by the sneezing which followed and the detectives were unsuccessful in their search for the culprit.

Prefacing her remarks with the assertion that government and anarchism have nothing in common, Miss Goldman stated that her object would be to correct current misrepresentations and misconceptions of the anarchists' belief. American anarchism, said Miss Goldman, is not of foreign origin, and she named Thoreau, Emerson, Whitman and Garrison as among the Americans who had founded the anarchistic sect.

Society Is Stable.

"The main opposition to anarchism," said Miss Goldman, "rests in the belief that it tends to destroy society. Society rests on human instinct and the human instinct cannot be destroyed."

Laws, she asserted, are unnecessary. "If it is natural for human beings to obey the law, why have policemen and judges? It is unnatural and therefore against human life to obey human laws. Therefore the government surrounds itself with law enforcers. Don't tell me that this is a country where man makes the law. Parties make the law and money controls the parties.

"Only the foolish man suffers the penalty of the law. The rich men are never punished. The man who robs you of your muscle and your brain is a greater criminal than the man who robs you of your money. I am opposed to man killing, but is it quite right that people should howl at a man like Thaw and sit quiet in the midst of horrible accidents due to the greed of the rich?"

In concluding her address Miss Goldman predicted that the time would come when the people would realize that they could take care of themselves and the principles of anarchism would prevail with peace.

Denounced as a Dreamer.

Immediately following Miss Goldman's address a young man sprang to his feet and proceeded to harangue the crowd in the interests of socialism. He denounced Miss Goldman as a "dreamer" and for a time it looked as the the meeting might assume some of the traditional aspects of an anarchistic gathering. The crowd, however, stood with Miss Goldman and had it not been for her interposition in behalf of the young enthusiast, he would have been hooted down. As it was, he, with several other men of socialistic tendencies, were allowed to ask questions which Miss Goldman answered. In the course of her answers she pleaded for the emancipation of women, ridiculing President Roosevelt's ideas on race suicide. She also asserted that she felt no especial dislike for John D. Rockefeller. "He is result of the system" she said "Why attack him more than others?" Abolishment of government was in her opinion the only way to correct conditions and she said that abolition of government could only come about thru education of the people.

BOYS FIRE LOAD OF HAY TO SEE FIRE RUN

Too Quiet in North Minneapolis for the Kids, but Today They'll Be Busy Dodging.

Red fire wagons and dashing horses failed to excite the small boys around Plymouth and Washington avenues as they expected last night, but the boys made a real fire which caused trouble for the department and themselves.

Fires have been so scarce in North Minneapolis recently that even a run to a small blaze is a novelty to the boys and they began relieving the monotony Friday night by turning in a false alarm from the box at Plymouth avenue and Second street N. The fire department answered with the usual racket and the youngsters were so highly pleased that they tried the trick again last night.

The second run seemed to them to lack the spectacular and the boys looked on with disgust from an old shed a little distance away.

Then the boy minds began to work. A real fire would make the department deliver the goods and would bring the crowds. Nearby in the haymarket was the material and they hastened to the largest load of hay in the place. A flare followed the vigorous scratching of matches and the boys trampled on each other for the honor of turning in the alarm. Again the rattling wagons came and the firemen had enough work in other loads.

Today the boys will have to dodge Fire Marshal Charles Ringer, who has learned their names and has planned to give the boys all the excitement they want in juvenile court.

looked after by the probation officers, because the law was in such shape that punishment of the real offender, the parent, was impossible. The penalty for the parental offence of contributing to the dependency or delinquency of children will be not less than 90 days in the workhouse and not more than 100.

In the case of a family, headed by a father who is just too lazy to work to support the children who have come under the notice of the Humane society of the Associated Charities, the judge will from now on have the satisfaction of being able to impose a fine upon his shiftlessness, forcing him to find work and care for his family.

In the states where the juvenile court work has been carried on most successfully, notably Colorado, Pennsylvania and Illinois, the power to punish parents for the nonsupport of children has always been with the court, and the passing of the new law in Minnesota will materially broaden the scope of the "crime-preventing" work among children.

Begining today, the juvenile court will be in session all day Monday in each week, instead of two afternoons of the week, Monday and Thursday, as formerly.

LAMENT BISHOP'S DEATH

METHODIST PREACHERS OF TWIN CITIES TAKE NOTE OF PASSING OF BISHOP FITZGERALD.

Dr. George S. Innis, professor of history at Hamline university, today read a paper on "Paul, the Evangelist," before the joint session of the Methodist ministers of St. Paul and Minneapolis. The joint session is an annual affair, and the ministers met this morning in the Hennepin Avenue Methodist church.

A committee appointed by the joint preachers' meeting of St. Paul and Minneapolis to draft resolutions regarding the death of Bishop James N. Fitzgerald and of his daughter, made the following report:

"Whereas, In the providence of God this great loss has come to the church, we, the Methodist preachers of St. Paul and Minneapolis in joint session desire to convey to Mrs. Fitzgerald and her family our deep sympathy. We join with the universal Methodist church in prayer that God will sustain her in this great and overwhelming sorrow. We recommend that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Mrs. Fitzgerald. (Signed) Samuel P. Long, W. A. Shannon, Richard N. Avison.

After the general discussion following the reading of the paper by Dr. Innis, Dr. Stevens of St. Paul spoke of the Methodist revival services that have just been concluded in the Central Park church.

A dinner was served in Dayton's tea rooms at the close of the meeting. About thirty were present.

tion that there will not be a good crop. The wheat in Kansas looks splendid and is in an advanced stage of growth, and were it not for the dry top soil, that state could be said to be looking fine. What is needed to promote the growth and check the fears of the farmers is one good soaking rain.

Watching the Crop.

The whole southwest is watching the crop. Wheat, and the green bug, and dry weather are the topics. Constant repetition of reports of damage, admittedly bad in places, has led to some assumption of a general situation more serious than really exists, for, while the dry weather is general, there is nothing as yet warranting the use of the word "drought," while the insect damage has affected only a small part of the entire southwest winter-wheat area.

HOW 'ANARCHY'S QUEEN' WOULD TRAIN CHILDREN

Emma Goldman, anarchist, last evening delivered her second lecture in Minneapolis at Kistler's hall. She spoke in German and an audience of about 300 persons, mainly men, women and children of the Jewish race, gathered to hear her.

"The Education of the Child" was the subject of Miss Goldman's lecture. She asserted that the child should be left alone to work out its own education; that it should be allowed to endure all that it is capable of enduring.

"Let the child understand that it is an individual as soon as possible. When parents work for their children, feed their children, clothe their children, think for their children, settle their questions of right and wrong, after the children are capable of doing this for themselves, they are simply stunting the growth of the children's character, on the same principle that you would destroy the usefulness of a muscle by binding your arm to your side. The muscle would wither away."

There was little savoring of violence in Miss Goldman's remarks. Her last lecture in Minneapolis will be delivered tonight in a hall at 26 Washington avenue S.

"CHAMBER" CASE TUESDAY

Use of the Minneapolis Chamber Quotations at Issue.

The taking of testimony in the suit of the Chamber of Commerce against the Superior Board of Trade clearinghouse, and the Wisconsin Grain & Stock company will be resumed before G. F. Hitchcock, federal court commissioner, tomorrow at 10 a m. The question involved is the alleged illegal use of the quotations of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce by the defendants.

Final action in the case will take place in the federal court at Madison, Wis. Four days have been consumed in the taking of testimony presented by the plaintiff. The defendants will present their side of the case in May. Developments in the case are being closely watched by the grain interests of the entire northwest as a successful termination of the case in favor of the plaintiff would mean much in the fight against bucketshop methods.

council only six members would sign it, one less than was needed, and several less than the vote it received. The net result was no majority report, no minority report and a renewal of the struggle in the committee this week with the outcome greatly in doubt.

Indirectly the matter of the Minneapolis General Electric company's franchise may come before the committee on underground wires Thursday. This committee may receive further overtures from the parties seeking a franchise to construct a heating and lighting tunnel under the business portion of the city. The possible connection between this tunnel and the possibility of competition in the electric energy business in Minneapolis, as shown in The Sunday Journal, makes the matter one which will have a considerable bearing upon the General Electric controversy.

"DIVINE HEALER" IS UP ON THEFT CHARGE

Ole O. Ostby, the "divine healer," who was arrested in Thief River Falls Saturday, was arraigned before Judge H. D. Dickinson today, charged with larceny in the first degree. Two indictments, charging Ostby with stealing $650 from Hanna Haugen, had been returned by the grand jury, and Ostby pleaded not guilty to both. He will be tried April 29. His bail was placed at $1,000.

Charles Chase, who has been indicted for robbery in the first degree, asked toda ythat his trial be postponed so that he might communicate with his father in Iowa. He told Judge Dickinson that his father had been a practicing lawyer in Iowa for forty years, and would undoubtedly come to Minneapolis to defend his son were he informed of the younger Chase's predicament. The trial was set for April 17. Chase is charged with having "rolled" Michael Marston in a saloon at 213 First street N, and having stolen $556 from him.

The criminal calendar for the April term began today with the trial of Frank S. Druck, charged with rape. A jury disagreed in regard to Druck's guilt or innocence at the last session of court.

PAINE HEADS AUTO CLUB

ANNUAL MEETING OF NEW ASSOCIATION REVEALS MUCH TO BE PROUD OF.

Asa Paine, formerly vicepresident of the Minneapolis Automobile club and president of the Florida East Coast Racing association, was elected president of the first organization at its annual meeting, which was held at the clubrooms in the Phoenix hotel last night. The election was unanimous. The other officers are Horace Lowry, first vicepresident; Benjamin F. Nelson, second vicepresident, R. J. Smith, secretary, J. H. Riheldaffer, treasurer.

Frank M. Joyce, retiring president, in a short speech congratulated the club on its growth and prosperity. He pointed out that within a year the membership of the club has been increased by 227 members, making a total of 600. He added that this membership makes the Minneapolis Automobile club second only to those of New York and Chicago in point of numbers and that it is not second to them in any other respect. Mr. Joyce declined a nomination for reelection.

The report of Treasurer Riheldaffer showed that the finances of the club are in sound condition and that the clubrooms have been secured right rather than at expense. Following the discussion of this subject the club turned to the interesting topic of good roads, and might be talking about them yet had not the call to lunch been sounded. The members resisted, but long enough to authorize the appointment of a committee of five to confer with Mayor J. C. Haynes relative to the enforcement of the ordinance against throwing bottles, glass and rubbish into the streets.

GOLDMAN EXTOLS DRAMA

NOTED SOCIALIST SPEAKS OF MODERN WRITERS AS EXPONENTS OF ANARCHISTIC PRINCIPLES.

Anarchistic principles as expounded in the works of modern dramatists was the theme of Emma Goldman's last address in Minneapolis, which was given in Union Temple last evening. The best audience of her visit greeted the anarchist queen.

Miss Goldman asserted that Tolstoi, Ibsen and Hauptmann were the torchbearers of intellectual unrest and she used the works of these writers as well as those of Gorky, Maeterlink and Shaw in an attempt to show that the drama in each case had been chosen as a means of teaching anarchistic principles and interpreting the spirit of revolt.

In speaking of Gorky, Miss Goldman said that the "American people drove him from their shore by their inquisitive habit of minding other people's business and made it impossible for him to accomplish his purpose."

Ibsen was lauded as the emancipator of women. "What we need," asserted Miss Goldman, "is not more children, but fewer children and those from healthier mothers."

Miss Goldman asserted that there is no real drama in America, that the American people are too busy in their search for money to develop their minds to a stage of drama appreciation.

The Irishmen, Yeats and Shaw, and the Englishmen, Wilde and Pinero, were named by Miss Goldman as the four great dramatists of the English race. Shaw she said, found that people would not have the socialistic tracts which he wrote so he began to ridicule society on the stage.

In speaking of Shaw's play, "Mrs. Warren's Profession," Miss Goldman said:

"You know we, as Anglo-Saxons, pride ourselves on our purity. We are afraid of the dust so we keep our pure, white angelic souls sheltered in the house with the windows down. That is the reason the sewer is stifled for want of fresh air and sunshine. That is the reason 'Mrs. Warren's Profession' was barred. We want to deny to ourselves that there are such professions in our society as Mrs. Warren's profession. But we will have such professions just so long as we have laws founded on such stupid conceptions of morality as we now have."

ANARCHY EXPOUNDED BY WOMAN LEADER

Emma Goldman, Apostle of Anarchy, Tells What the Philosophy of Anarchism Is and What Would Happen if Anarchy Was in Place of Artificial Laws—To Lecture in Winnipeg.

At an early hour this morning that clearly set at naught the rules of organized society relating to set functions the telephone bell of The Tribune rang and the following question came floating on the shadowy wings of electrical communication: "Do you want to see Emma Goldman?"

"Sorting letter" was the answer and obeying an injunction to come at once, the newspaper man bade his office mates a last fair well, gave them dire threats for the disposition of such tragic bits of his remains as might be gathered up after the expected bomb explosion, and sallied forth to meet the woman whose public utterances have more than once called down the police authorities upon her and in one instance at least, brought about her lodgment in gaol for the period of a year.

Reasonable expectation might and would for in ordinary circumstances would have warranted the caller upon this woman leader of an organization at whose door have been laid some of the direst crimes of the century in picturing Miss Goldman as a swarthy, Amazonian sextet or more, tall and with a voice like sunshine brass.

BRANDON IS THE STRONGEST centre for legitimate real estate investment in the west this year. The advance of real estate prices has been steadier than in any other western centre. There has been no boom, prices are still much below the prices in smaller centres.

BRANDON HAS PRACTICALLY DOUBLE the population of Saskatoon and Regina, and the new properties being put on the market here are only 10 minutes from the centre of the city, and with three miles in similar centres.

I HANDLE ONLY PROPERTIES that are all sold cheap to actual buyers, properties lying within the walk from the centre, all of them closer than the most substantial of the properties situated in the present centre of Brandon, some of the blocks already containing buildings.

RECRUITS FOR 90TH REGIMENT

Lieut.-Col. Billman Says Indications Point to a Successful Season.

When seen by a Tribune reporter last night, Lieut.-Col. Billman, of the 90th Regiment, stated that recruiting was progressing most favorably and that everything pointed to a very successful season. The Lieut.-Col. said, already strong, is having a number of recruits added to its corps.

"The question with the brigade camp will be held on June 19 to 27," said the Lieut.-Col., "the 90th may go into camp on the 25th, 26th and 27th of June. Authority has been given by the government to go into camp on those three days, but it has not been definitely decided as yet, as it is feared a large number of the men will be unable to attend.

"It is very probable that the Fort Wilkins regiment will attend the rathskeller in June. It is expected that the camp will be very large as brigades from all over the West. Men will have six days' leave of absence for that purpose.

[illegible] stopped for any particular reason and the meetings were not actually forbidden, but the hall keepers were terrorized by threats of losing their licenses if I were allowed to speak in their halls.

Not Forbidden to Speak.

"No, I was not personally forbidden to speak and the character of my talk there would not have been at all different from that of my lectures at the other places where I spoke. I prepare my lectures carefully before I start on my tours and could not well change them to suit the different places.

"I have never been in Winnipeg before, but have been twice to Montreal, and also to Toronto, but Winnipeg is so far north that it is hard to reach. I shall go from here to Denver and to Salt Lake City, Sacramento and other places on the Pacific coast on this trip, which will extend to the end of June. I am not really travelling under the auspices of anybody; my friends and comrades in the different places arrange for my lectures.

England Land of the Free.

"Which do I consider the freest country? Politically I consider England the freest country; that is so far as concerns free speech, free press and free assemblies, although England is going back, somewhat, on her former principles upon the matter of free immigration. England used to be the home of all political refugees and, while nobody has been barred, yet, they are going to be. There have been some very stringent provisions enacted as to emigration of late.

"No," smilingly said Miss Goldman. "I don't think it will effect our people. I think that laws are made to be broken and if rigid laws are enacted ways will always be found to avoid them.

"The United States has made some very rigid laws against the coming of anarchists to that country and since those laws were made few have been coming into the states by the immediate, not more so, in fact, than they ever did before.

The Futility of the Law.

"That is the futility of law and the way that law is disregarded. Instinctively is the opposite to law, that is human nature. You prohibit a thing and straightway you awaken a desire for it. Yes, I think that will apply to all things and that is the reason why I am a believer in non-government.

"Would it be right to steal if they were not forbidden by law to do it. I am sure they would not. I was in a community of Russians in Switzerland, where the sheriff told me that he had not had a single case of crime in his town in three years of office, so not his salary, just the same he had nothing to do but spend a time playing billiards and reading Ingersoll.

"He was a brilliant man; he invited me to speak in the court house which was a most strange experience for an anarchist although I myself believe that that is what courthouses should be used for.

"How did I account for the state of things that existed in Switzerland? Why I suppose that the people were able to govern themselves, that they had work and that the [illegible] were [illegible] Law Not Alone to Blame.

"Of course I [illegible] that [illegible] to crime. No less a person than Cardinal Manning said that necessity knows no law.

"Would I say that the anarchists were the party of necessity? I most certainly should say so. Anarchy represents the necessities of human life and its cravings, else it would have no meaning.

"I have been an anarchist for 20 years. I was 19 years old when I became an anarchist—and I am 39 years old now. I have no hesitation in telling my age, because Anarchy teaches frankness; indeed, its very essence is frankness. I believe, too, that age stands for something if one's time is properly employed. It stands for experience and there is no good reason for a woman who has had the right sort of a life to conceal her age.

"When women had only to work in the kitchen, to supply food for their husbands and families, there was good reason why they should seek to hide their age, but when her intellect began to awake she has no reason for being otherwise than frank and open.

Anarchists Not All Among Poor.

"I do not know how many anarchists there are in Winnipeg. Anarchists are not all among the poor and laboring classes. I was invited to speak to a company of professional men in Minneapolis and I was surprised to find so many anarchists in every class of life.

"No, Anarchy does not stand for violence. Republicans, Democrats and Irish have committed acts of violence but that has nothing to do with anarchists, and, besides, the individual crime, committed by anarchists, is nothing by comparison with the crimes of organized government; it is merely a drop in the sea.

"The killing of King Humbert and President McKinley? They had nothing to do with the philosophy of Anarchism, but they have lots to do with the condition that made them possible."

Word was received yesterday by N. J. MacDonald, of the Rat Portage Lumber company, informing him of the death of his mother, Mrs. E. MacDonald, of Lacrosse, Wis. The deceased lady was well known in Winnipeg, being a frequent visitor here in previous years. Mr. MacDonald and his sister, Nellie of Keewatin, leave today to attend the funeral in Lacrosse.

Ah! the hot owner sees not Death, who adds
Him to his land, a lump of mould the more.
Hear what the Earth says:—

EARTH-SONG

"Mine and yours;
Mine, not yours.
Earth endures;
Stars abide—
Shine down in the old sea;
Old are the shores;
But where are old men?
I who have seen much,
Such have I never seen.

"The lawyer's deed
Ran sure,
'In tail,
To them, and to their heirs
Who shall succeed,
Without fail,
For evermore.'

"Here is the land,
Shaggy with wood,
With its old valley,
Mound and flood.
But the heritors?
Fled like the flood's foam.
The lawyer, and the laws,
And the kingdom,
Clean swept herefrom.

"They called me theirs,
Who so controlled me;
Yet every one
Wished to stay, and is gone.
How am I theirs,
If they cannot hold me,
But I hold them?"

When I heard the Earth-song,
I was no longer brave;
My avarice cooled,
Like lust in the chill of the grave.

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

As long as the capitalists of Europe and America could, with the aid of their respective governments, carry their "civilization" into Asia and force the latter's truly cultured people to buy their shoddy wares, there existed no yellow peril. Only when the "heathens" began to practically apply the lessons taught them by their white "benefactors"; when they, too, began to propagate civilization—lo! suddenly we perceived the yellow peril.

"Guard your most sacred possessions, ye nations of Europe!" cried the German Emperor, and the international boodlers applauded unanimously. Many workingmen, especially those of America, joined in the cry; even some revolutionists were deluded into the belief that the competition of Asiatic labor was dangerous to their ideas. How unjustified this fear has fully been demonstrated within the last few years by the remarkable spreading of social revolutionary ideas among the Japanese and Chinese. The intellectuals of these nations are as familiar with modern radical ideas as the people of America and Europe. The labor question is now no less acute in those countries than with us.

A very hopeful sign of the times is the recent organization of the "Social Revolutionary Party of Japanese in America," whose aim it is to enlighten their countrymen with regard to existing social conditions and to prepare them for the social revolution.

Herewith we publish the proclamation of the new organization, a remarkable document, which indicates that the American workingmen have a great deal to learn from their "heathen" brothers:

"We proclaim to the people of the whole world the organization of the Social Revolutionary Party of Japanese in America.

Who says that labor is divine, while a few people are fed and clothed well and millions are suffering from poverty and hunger?

What is life for, when one man takes away the rights and liberty of millions that he may live in luxury and ease?

What is the dignity of a nation when the lives of millions are sacrificed in war to satisfy a few men's ambition and vanity?

Yes, labor is intolerable, life is miserable, the nation is cruel, and society is unjust.

The cries of the sufferers all over the world are increasing day after day, and the enthusiastic attempts to abolish these torments and to try to secure true liberty and happiness and peace are increasing month after month.

How can a man who has heart and soul look at suffering humanity without a feeling of sympathy or a desire to assist in the alleviation of the wrongs?

It is our duty to revolutionize this unjust system of society and make it a beautiful, free, happy one, both to the honor of our forefathers, and for the benefit of our sons. It is not only our duty, but it is our right.

The purpose of our revolutionary society is to realize this fact, and to discharge this duty and secure our rights.

We proclaim to the people of the world the organization of the Social Revolutionary Party of Japanese in America, and we will endeavor to bring about this revolution according to the program herein adopted.

Come, those who are interested, and join us. Do not hesitate!

OUR PROGRAM:

1. We shall abolish the industrial, economic competitive system of to-day, which breeds pauperism, and let the people own the nation's wealth.

2. We shall endeavor to destroy traditional and superstitious ideas of class lines, and will try to insure equal rights for all.

3. We shall endeavor to abolish racial prejudice and learn to realize the true meaning of the brotherhood of men.

4. In order to accomplish the above stated purposes we recognize the necessity of uniting with the comrades of the world."

If anything more was necessary to convince the American public of the existence of a capitalistic conspiracy to hang Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, and destroy the Western Federation of Miners, the high-handed interference of Theodore Roosevelt has accomplished that.

To curry favor with the pirates whose stolen millions sent him to the White House, our political desperado did not hesitate to stoop to the use of his official position against the Idaho defendants. Such base attempts to influence justice have seldom been witnessed outside of Morocco and Turkey.

We say, to influence justice; because the private opinion of a professional politician as to the moral worth of the representatives of revolutionary ideas is a matter of entire indifference to the latter. It is self-evident that the chief lackey of the plutocrats cannot consider the opponents of the latter as anything but "undesirable citizens." There are many citizens, however—and by no means the worst—who look upon the White House parasites as highly undesirable citizens.

It is time that the American people, and especially organized labor, should realize that the White House is the very last place to look for justice, a "square deal," or even common decency.

We mourn the tragic fate of William McLaughlin—better known as "Billy"—late Inspector of Police, Chief of the New York Detective Bureau, and Head of the "Anarchist Squad," of recent creation. Yesterday a power in the land; to-day a mere Captain of Westchester, familiarly known as Goatville, with nothing to do but sign his name in the blotter twice a day. The salary is a paltry two thousand five hundred a year, and but little graft. The Sun, whose editor claims friendship with "Billy," informs us that the former detective is rich—his wealth, no doubt, saved from the yearly salary of three thousand five hundred—and that he is expected to resign at once. Others say that "he is game and will stick it out." All of this is very sad for a man who can buy twenty-thousand-dollar houses and live like a bank president on a salary of three thousand five hundred a year. Such a genius deserves to be chancellor of the exchequer of a South American Republic. Alas, poor William!

Our friend Luigi Galleani was tried during the last week of April for alleged participation in the Paterson riots of 1902. We are happy to state that the trial resulted in a disagreement, seven jurymen voting for conviction and five for acquittal. We do not think that the District Attorney of Paterson will seek new laurels by bringing Galleani to trial again. It is to be hoped that he will not succeed in finding twelve men to send our innocent brother to prison.

On the heels of the trial comes the information that William McQueen—whose five-year sentence for "complicity" in the Paterson troubles had almost expired—was pardoned on condition that he leave at once our hospitable shores. The Paterson capitalists and their political lackeys may now rest in peace.

Maurice Donnay, an enfant terrible of French literature, has recently been elected member of the Académic Française. Loyalty, rather than literary merit, is nowadays the key that unlocks the door of immortality: mere loyalty is often sufficient; merit alone—never. Maurice Donnay is one of the few possessing both.

Besides Anatole France and Jules Lemaître, he is now the only artist in the Academy who considers industrious erudition, alexandrines of proper measure and fine sounding parliamentary speeches as meritorious literary productions.

Ten years ago, however, he would have knocked for admittance in vain. All his poetic finesse, his manifold talents and power of ingenious observation did not suffice to open the door, until he had conclusively proven by one of his recent mediocre plays that he was eligible to immortality.

His receptive soul must often suffer tortuous hours by the incarceration of his wild spirit within the confines of academic respectability. In truth, but once has he succeeded in taming down his genius to the strict requirements of a conventional play. In all his following works his artistic spirit soon manifested itself by rising above all literary dogmas and puritanic morality.

The academic sedateness demanded by the mossy institution from its Immortals will hardly prove a sufficient guarantee against an occasional "bad break"—no more than Donnay's erudite engineer training prevented his public appearance as chansonnier in the Chat Noir of Rodolphe Salis.

The eternal fitness of things: the pæans of peace sung by professional exponents of war.

The peace farce of recent date was as fiendish a caricature of the Brotherhood of Man as Satan could desire. A glance at the list of participants is sufficient to characterize the sincerity of those friends of peace. The parvenu steel king in the rôle of chief peace-maker,—ye gods, what a spectacle!

Having had his praises sung on Founders' Day, at Pittsburg, the hero of Skibo and Homestead, this chief beneficiary of the war of classes, came to New York to witness his triumph as king of peace. As such he was felicitated by his imperial brothers, Oily Bill and Terrible Teddy, and decorated by the French Government with the cross of the Legion of Honor. This honor, however, is now of such questionable quality that it may properly be said of an honest man thus decorated: "He has been dishonored with the Legion of Honor."

In the sign of prosperity.

On the benches in Madison Square cower, chilled, human débris—ragged, dirty, hollow-eyed, mere caricatures of man. . . .

It is not permitted to sleep in the parks. Soon comes the night stick, awakening the dozing; the policeman drives the frightened wretches out of the park. They go, resigned in the abyss of despair, further—further!

At Union Square the cruel performance is repeated. The nearer we approach the lower part of the city, the more pronounced and heartrending the misery and suffering. From foul-smelling alleys and filthy hallways there comes the sound of heavy breathing and low coughing. The dark steps of the railroad tunnel are plastered with the forbidding figures of unemployed and homeless—men for whom there is no room in all the forest of houses and who cannot afford the price of a night's lodging; men to whom work is a luxury, unattainable by those run down at the heels and whose shoes are tied with strings; men past vice or virtue; men who have long since forgotten to live and are too misery-stupified to cross the threshold of the land of the dead.

In the sign of prosperity.

more—they are the factors that will fashion the system of production and distribution in the coming free society.

The proletariat of Europe has already awakened to a realization of his great mission; it remains for the American workers to decide whether they will continue, as before, to be satisfied with the crumbs off the board of the wealthy. Let us hope that they will soon awaken to the full perception of their great historic mission, bearing in mind the battle scars of former years. Especially at this time, when organized capital of America—the most powerful and greedy of the world—is again attempting to repeat the tragedy of 1887, American labor must warn the overbearing masters with a decisive "Thus far and no further!"

ON THE ROAD

By EMMA GOLDMAN.

(Continuation.)

CHICAGO. City of the greatest American crime! City of that black Friday when four brave sons of the people were strangled to death—Parsons, Spies, Engel and Fischer, and you young giant who preferred to take your own life rather than allow the hangman to desecrate you with his filthy touch. You noble free spirits who walked along the open road, believing its call to be "the call of battle, of rebellion." 'Tis therefore you went "with angry enemies, with desertion."

O for the indifference, the inertia of those whose cowardice permitted you to die, to be strangled—the very people for whom you had given your life's blood.

O city of shame and disgrace! City of gloom and smoke, filth and stench. You are rotten with stockyards and slums, poverty and crime. What will become of you on the day of reckoning, when your children will awaken to consciousness? Will their battle for liberty and human dignity cleanse your past? Or will they demolish you with their wrath, their hatred, their revenge for all you have made them endure?

As my train neared this hole, bellowing suffocating smoke and dust, covering the sky with a dark, gloomy cloth, on the morning of the eighteenth of March, I thought of you, Paris. Great, glorious Paris! Cradle of rebellion, mother of that glad, joyous day, thirty-six years ago, when your flying colors proclaimed brotherhood and peace in the grand spirit of the Commune. What a contrast between you and Chicago! The one inspiring, urging on to rebellion and liberty; the other making her children mercenary and indifferent, clumsily self-satisfied. What a contrast! What an awful contrast!

I arrived at Chicago at the high tide of politics, the various parties wrangling, huckstering and wrestling for political supremacy, each claiming to stand for a principle: the greatest good of the people.

What Bernard Shaw says of the English in "The Man of Destiny" holds equally good with us in this country: "When the Englishman wants a thing, he never tells himself that he wants it. He waits patiently till there comes into his mind, no one knows how, a burning conviction that it is his moral and religious duty to conquer those who have got the thing he wants. He is never at a loss for an effective moral attitude. As the great champion of freedom and national independence, he conquers and annexes half the world and calls it colonization. When he wants a market for his adulterated Manchester goods, he sends a missionary to teach the natives the gospel of peace. The natives kill the missionary, he flies to arms in defence of Christianity, fights for it, conquers for it, and takes the market as a reward from heaven. In defence of his island shores he puts a chaplain on board his ship, nails a flag with a cross onto his top gallant mast and sails to the ends of the earth, sinking, burning and destroying all who dispute the empire of the seas with him. You will never find an Englishman in the wrong. He does everything on principle. He fights you on patriotic principles, he robs you on business principles, he enslaves you on imperial principles, he bullies you on manly principles."

No better picture could be drawn of our own good people, especially our politicians. Of course they do not want the job of mayor, governor or president; of course they do not want to get fat as the proverbial seven cows; it is only for a principle that they enter politics, for the dear people's sake, for municipal ownership's sake, for the sake of purifying our bad morals, for good government, for child labor laws, factory improvement, for anything and everything, only not for their own sake. 'Tis for the sake of principle our politicians fight, lie and abuse one another; for the sake of principle they invest their money in land robbery, in cotton mills where the children of the dear majority are forced to work under the industrial lash, or in stockyards and packing houses where human beings are made to rot in filth.

For the sake of principle liberals, the Single Taxers, have made a compact with the Democratic Party, hailing Dunne, Hearst and others of their caliber as the Messiahs of the people, and indulging in the same cheap methods of abuse and attack. One of our Single Tax brothers was elated over the discovery that his opponent lived with a "nigger." "We'll use it against him. It is sure to kill his chances," said our "liberal" friend, and no doubt it is. Just think, advanced people prying into the private life of a man and publicly dissecting it for the sake of a political job,—I beg your pardon, for the sake of principle. How coarse, how vulgar "principle" has made man.

And our Socialistic friend, is he not ready to string up anyone who disputes "economic determinism" and "the materialistic conception of history"? For the sake of his principle he will kick anyone out of the party who dares doubt the infallibility of political action; he will denounce us as dynamiters, when we venture to suggest some other method. For the sake of principle the Socialistic paper of Chicago devotes its front page to the discussion of "gowns for the ladies," and a Socialistic candidate appeals for votes on the ground that he has a good law practice and an income of a hundred thousand dollars. And the majority goes into the trap and allows itself to be humbugged—for the sake of a principle.

While in Chicago I delivered nine lectures before various nationalities—Jewish, Bohemians, Danish, not to forget of course the dear, fortunate natives who make the Social Science League their headquarters. Whether it was due to the subject, "The Revolutionary Spirit of the Modern Drama," or to the innate curiosity of the Americans, I do not know; at any rate the meeting at the Masonic Temple was the largest and the most interesting. Two real live professors from the Chicago University, quite a host of students from the same institution, as well as lawyers, politicians and workingmen packed the hall. Great strides must have been made in the last few years to bring out instructors and students from the Rockefeller College. It is not so very long ago that Tolstoi's picture was turned face to the wall because he dared criticise the endower of that hall of learning.

Some naive people were so enthusiastic over my lecture that they suggested to one of the professors that he invite me to the University to repeat my lecture. Alas, they forgot the "principle" for the sake of which the good professor could not invite the Anarchist, Emma Goldman, to the College. Probably he thought that at the sound of Anarchism the University buildings would crumble to pieces, as the walls of Jericho did at the sound of the Jewish trumpet. No one can blame the professor —"principle" before freedom of knowledge.

Life in Chicago has always been hateful and trying to me, but the great kindness at the home of my dear comrades, Annie and Jack Livshis, and especially the untiring goodness and the fine tact and discretion of the Anarchistic Mother, Annie, helped to overcome my aversion to the jungle city.

Cincinnati. The old sensational speculations as to whether I will or will not be allowed to speak in that city greeted me in the newspapers when I arrived. Madam Alice R. Longworth living on Walnut Hill, it was quite reckless of the city fathers to alow dangerous utterances at Cincinnati. However, Anarchism has been heard at three large meetings, and Walnut Hill is still intact. America is full of parasites—Anarchism has greater things to do than to bother about some particular member. It has to build character, to develop individuality, to clear the human mind of spooks and shadows. It has to call men and women "out from the dark refinement, out from behind the screen, out from traditions and prejudices—into the open road."

St. Louis. Some people seem to be incapable of learning that Anarchism and dirty halls in squalid sections of the city are not synonymous. True, Anarchism does not exclude the poor, the dirty or the tramp any more than the sun excludes them, but it does not make a virtue of filth. It seems to me that so long as people remain satisfied with their present conditions, absolutely indifferent to cleanliness, air and beauty, they cannot possibly feel the burning shame of their lives, nor will they strive for anything that might lift them out of the ugliness of their existence. I do not censor anyone, for I am convinced that the boys of St. Louis tried their best; yet I am grieved that they should be satisfied with so little. True, the halls were cheap, but though the future of Mother Earth depends upon the success of this tour, I cannot even for her sake speak in dingy little halls, dark and gloomy, with the dust and smoke making it impossible to breathe.

Minneapolis. Those who believe that only organizations or groups can accomplish things should profit by the example of Minneapolis, where two energetic workers did wonders.

The population of this city is composed of shopkeepers, bankers, doctors and lawyers—not the element that is usually interested in radical ideas. Nor were such ideas ever put before them. Anarchism was a spook, an evil spirit in that town, but daring is the only way to success. The audiences that thronged the halls for three successive evenings far surpassed in number and intelligence the most optimistic expectations. When I looked into the earnest faces, I felt that here were people who did not come to see but to hear, to be enlightened and to learn, and I was grateful to my good star, or rather to the energy and perseverance of the two comrades who made such meetings possible.

The world is full of freaks—the Minneapolis Spook Club can certainly boast of a large following. This organization is composed of professional men only, and as they are known for their purity and morality, they never suffered the evil spirit of woman to invade their sanctum before. But thanks to the generosity of a friend, the rigid rules of the Spook Club were temporarily set aside.

Possibly the members thought that one could not be a woman and an Anarchist at the same time. The angelic chastity of the Spookers would have been quite discomforting to me, were it not for the presence of a few daughters of that arch seducer Eve, who helped to bring some wit and humor into the dead atmosphere of statute and dissecting room wisdom. Specialists were there a-plenty, doctors enough to create any amount of disease, lawyers and a real live judge to induce one to commit crime, bump interpreters and bump producers, and so forth; all important and awe inspiring gentlemen, but as innocent of the great questions of the day as new born babes, their heads full of spooks and fears of all that their lack of wisdom could not grasp.

Winnipeg. The dirty crows—as a certain French artist named the priests—who infest the streets and cars of Montreal are not as numerous in Winnipeg, but the horrors of their creed are as dominant here as there—the creed that has for centuries gone about killing, burning and torturing is still holding the Canadian people in power, befogging their minds as in ages past.

The city was white on my arrival; everything in the tight clutches of grim winter; apparently not a sign of life or warmth. But the greetings of my comrades and the enthusiasm of the audiences soon convinced me that all was not cold or dead. Spring, the great awakener of life and growth, was stirring in the hearts of those who had come to hear me.

Men and women from every nook in the world gather at Winnipeg, the land of promise. They are soon made to realize, however, that the causes which drove them from their native shores—oppression, greed and robbery—are quite at home in this new, white land. The true great promise lies in all these nations coming together, to look one another in the face, to learn for the first time the real force that makes for wealth. Men and women knowing one another and clasping hands for one common purpose, human brotherhood and solidarity. Yes, Winipeg is the place of promise. It is the fertile soil of growth, life and ideas.

The Radical Club, but two years old, has become a tremendous factor in creating interest in new thought.

My six days' visit seemed a dream. Large, eager audiences every evening and twice on Sunday, a beautiful social gathering that united two hundred men, women and children in one family of comrades, and people constantly coming and going during the day, all anxious to learn, made the time pass like a flash. When I stood on the platform of the train bidding a last farewell to a large group of friends, I keenly felt the pains of parting; but this, too, I felt:

Allons! We must not stop here—
However sweet these laid-up stores, however convenient this dwelling we cannot remain here,
However shelter'd this port and however calm these waters, we must not anchor here,
However welcome the hospitality that surrounds us we are permitted to receive it but a little while."

I wanted to be alone with my thoughts, alone with my impressions of those who had passed before me in long processions during my stay in Winnipeg. However, the official zeal of the Immigration Inspectors willed it differently. With the usual impudence that goes with authority I was subjected to the "third degree": my name, occupation, whether American citizen, how long in America, and whether I had been out of the States before. Evidently the uniformed gentlemen had studied that infamous anti-Anarchist Immigration Law that will not admit "disbelievers in organized government." I assured my anxious protector that he would have to let me return, since I had been in America eighteen years before that stupid law was passed. Though myself a citizen of the world, my father happened to be privileged enough to become a citizen of this free country. After a long conversation with some others of his ilk, my good friend decided to let me go on. I know from experience that our law makers can do anything they please; still, I am optimistic enough to believe that they would not venture to keep me out of this "sweet land of liberty." Besides, what are laws for if not to be evaded? No wonder so many "disbelievers in organized government" have flocked to America since the law against them became operative.

Poor, stupid Immigration Inspector! If you could have foreseen the result of your zeal, you might not have made it so public that the dangerous Emma Goldman was on the train. You got my fellow passengers intensely interested, with the result that I added a seventh meeting to those held at Winnipeg and disposed of a large number of magazines and pamphlets—not in the hall, but in the Pullman sleeper. When will our fool governors learn that the best government is the one that governs least or not at all? Never before have I felt as convinced of this truth as on this tour. The rigid laws against Anarchists, passed within the past four or five years, the shameful misrepresentation of Anarchism, and the persecution of its adherents have awakened the most intense interest in our ideas in this country. Still more striking is the tremendous change in the attitude of the press. The papers in Toledo, Toronto, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Minneapolis and Winnipeg, especially those of the last two cities, have been remarkable for their fairness and decency in reporting my meetings. Probably they have learned that yellow journal methods, sensational, vulgar, untruthful reports are no longer believed by the thinking readers of newspapers. I wish our Eastern journalists would learn the same lesson and follow the example of one of their colleagues, the editor of the Winnipeg Tribune, who has this to say:

"Emma Goldman has been accused of abusing freedom of speech in Winnipeg, and Anarchism has been denounced as a system that advocates murder. As a matter of fact, Emma Goldman indulged, while in Winnipeg, in no dangerous rant and made no statement that deserved more than moderate criticism of its wisdom or logic. Also, as a matter of fact, the man who claims that Anarchism teaches bomb-throwing and violence doesn't know what he is talking about. Anarchism is an ideal doctrine that is now, and always will be, utterly impracticable. Some of the gentlest and most gifted men of the world believe in it. The fact alone that Tolstoi is an Anarchist is conclusive proof that it teaches no violence.

"We all have a right to laugh at Anarchy as a wild dream. We all have a right to agree or disagree with the teachings of Emma Goldman. But we should not make ourselves ridiculous by criticising a lecturer for the things that she did not say, nor by denouncing as violent and bloody a doctrine that preaches the opposite of violence."

This letter is submitted to you not only in the best interests of all concerned, but for the general welfare of the city.

We trust that you will appreciate the kindly spirit in which this is offered, and will give the matter the immediate consideration which the exigency requires.

We await a reply by 6 p. m. today (this Sunday) at 1746 Fillmore street. Yours sincerely,

CIVIC LEAGUE OF SAN FRANCISCO.
By special committee Norton C. Wells, Isidor Jacobs, Frank W. Martin, A. W. Scott Jr., Robert A. Ross.

RESPONSES RECEIVED

The civic league committee met in the office of the Fillmore street branch of the California Safe and Trust company at 6 o'clock to further discuss the arbitration proposal in the light of the answers received from the representatives of the different organizations.

In answer to his communication President Cornelius of the carmen's union stated that he would have the subject brought up for consideration at the meeting of the executive committee of the union tonight, and gave a favorable response to the proposal that it be presented to a mass meeting of the carmen, although he did not give a definite promise that it would be carried this far. Likewise President Calhoun signified his willingness to accept the arbitration idea. Secretary McCabe of the labor council also promised to submit the proposal at a meeting of the telephone operators today. Word was received from Manager Phillips of the telephone company that he had received the communication for his company in the absence of President Scott, but that it would be delivered to Scott on his return today and that an answer might be expected at that time.

Accompanied by J. Daniell Brown, the committee adjourned to President Calhoun's residence at 7 o'clock for the personal interview which it had asked for in the hope of persuading Calhoun to modify his announced intention of refusing to consider arbitration. While this result was not achieved, the visit was not without results. The conference lasted an hour and a half and at its conclusion Calhoun agreed to make no effort today to operate any cars, in order that the committee might have time to further its attempt to bring about the resumption of traffic without disorder and bloodshed. The conference was fruitful also to the extent that it resulted in the offer to take back all strikers at the old wages fixed by the arbitration board. This was a concession from Calhoun's announcement prior to the strike that any men joining in such a movement could not return to the company's employ, except at a lower wage.

LETTER FROM CALHOUN

Before the visit of the committee President Calhoun had drawn a letter in answer to the one received earlier in the day. This letter, which was delivered to the committee on its arrival, was as follows:

Dear Sirs: I regret missing you when you called this afternoon. The letter which you left for me has been received, and I reply immediately. The sentence known as fully advised that if its members struck this company the union would permanently sever its relations with the United Railroads. The public generally of this city is well informed through public statements made last fall when this city was plunged into the useless, wasteful and unnecessary strike by this same body of men and their leaders that my company will never deal or treat with men in its employ or their representatives. There is now much more involved in this controversy than the mere question of wages and hours.

I learned before I left New York that a conspiracy was on foot to create a strike among the employes of my company. I met a meeting with the officers of the National association of street railway employes, and as Mr. Watson of that union was too ill to come to New York I went to Detroit to have a conference with him. He was too ill to be seen, but I met the executive committee of the national union, and Mr. Cornelius, the president of the local union, was present. I discussed the situation in San Francisco with kindness and courtesy with the executive committee of the national association, but I told them then that my company could not consent to be constantly plunged into strife with its employes, and that if the members of the local union declined to abide by the wages and hours fixed by the recent board of arbitration, and went out on a strike, I would never again deal with the leaders of the local union. This position has been again stated to Mr. Cornelius since my arrival here and to the conference committee of the local union. This decision is irrevocable.

So far as I know there is not a member of the carmen's union now in the employ of a railroad in this city. It is now a union of ex-employes, and if no longer has any connection with the United Railroads. Its members struck this company without any grievance, and without any request for a conference. Its leaders have been informed that my company will not treat with them, and that it will not reinstate any of the strikers who have been guilty of violence. Many of the strikers have been reinstated, and others will be reinstated as fast as their places can be filled with competent men. Many of the strikers have already secured employment elsewhere, and the company is not responsible for the fact that they have done so.

Yours very truly,
P. CALHOUN.

The notice referred to in this letter was drawn later in the evening by President Calhoun and sent to the officials of the company, with instructions that it be posted in all the car barns and delivered to as many of the striking carmen as possible. The notice reads:

All employes of this company are hereby directed to report at their respective car barns, or other customary places, by Tuesday morning, May 7, 1907, at 8 o'clock ready to resume work.

All of such employes will receive the same rate of pay as heretofore. Those not reporting are hereby discharged from the employment of the company, and they will immediately turn in their badges, punches and all other property of the company in their possession or under their control, and receive the amount heretofore deposited by them under the rules of this company.

PATRICK CALHOUN,
President United Railroads of San Francisco.
May 6 1907.

Woman Anarchist Declares Patrick Calhoun's Industrial Influence Should Not Be Continued

Emma Goldman, anarchist, disciple of Ibsen and George Bernard Shaw, an embodiment of contrarities, addressed a gathering of her kind last night at Walton's pavilion. Her address was the usual scarlet denunciation of things as they are contrasted with things as she would have them. She referred, among other things, to the car strike.

"You will always have conflicts of this kind so long as you have men like Patrick Calhoun and the conditions he brings about," she said. "I have no fault to find with Calhoun personally. He probably is a very plausible man. He probably is all right individually. Industrially, however, he is all wrong."

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

The legal farce now being played at Boise, Idaho, augurs nothing good for Haywood. When one considers the unfriendly attitude of the Court and the material from which the jurors are being selected to try the accused leader of the Western Federation of Miners, one involuntarily exclaims: "All hope abandon, ye who enter here!" The most strenuous efforts have been made by the authorities to pack the panel with men specially selected for their dense ignorance, their narrow outlook upon life and their enmity toward the Western Federation of Miners. Mr. Richardson, one of the counsel for the defence, realizing the situation, has made the following protest to the trial judge:

"There are 6,000 votes in this county. Of this number 5,000 at least are eligible as jurors. There were 500 men in the parade at Boise on the last Labor Day.

"One bundred and sixty special talesmen have been drawn on two venires. It is a singular coincidence that only one union labor man was found in that number, and only two who actually work for daily pay. There are at least 3,000 day laborers in this county. None of them has been brought here.

"There is no reason why the laboring class, or even the union class, should not be represented on tbis jury. We do not ask the Sheriff to select that class, but we do believe the next venire should be more diversified."

"The Court has complete confidence in Sheriff Hodgin," replied Judge Wood. "The Court will have nothing further to say on this subject."

Even the capitalist papers, which can not be accused of sympathy with the Boise defendant, are forced to admit that the talesmen are a bunch of simpering idiots. The New York Times, for instance, has this to say of the stock from which the arbiters of Haywood's fate are being chosen:

"The fact of the matter is that most of the Idaho farmers have only the vaguest sort of an idea as to what a Socialist is. They seem to imagine that he is some sort of a six-legged, eight-horned animal of undefined but terrible proclivities, whose proper place would be in a museum of dangers."

One of the jurors selected to try Haywood has characterized his mental caliber by stating that he did not believe in capital punishment, except for Anarchists, whom he would hang on sight.—It is nothing short of murder to place the fate of a human being in the hands of men so totally devoid of all sense of justice.

We repeat what we have said on previous occasions: Only energetic action on the part of organized labor will free the imprisoned leaders of the Western Federation of Miners.

Nothing enrages the bull like a red rag flashed before the animal's eyes. The red flag—symbol of the international revolutionary proletariat—has a like effect upon the pillars of our capitalist society.

The recent demonstrations, in which the red flag was carried as a warning to the masters of our Republic, have both frightened and enraged the sky-pilots, penny-a-liners and justice mongers. One of the last, by the name of Crane, has arbitrarily forbidden the red flag to be unfurled, characterizing the same as "objectionable, immoral and provocative of Anarchy."

This is highly pleasing to us. The revolutionary workmen of this country will pay no more attention to such prohibitions than do their brothers in France, Germany and Russia. The rage of the exploiters proves that the revolutionary spirit is making good progress in this Republic, in spite of the great liberties we enjoy on paper.

The Appeal to Reason has been indicted by the federal authorities for circulating "scurrilous, defamatory and threatening" matter. Fred D. Warren, the managing editor, has been arrested and held to await trial in November.

This is the Rooseveltian method of getting rid of "undesirable" citizens and publications. No doubt, the persecution is inspired by the mine owners, against whom the Appeal has been waging uncompromising war.—Censorship has ever been the handmaiden of dictators.

"It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

And thus spake Archbishop Ireland:

"The very recognition of manhood in every man makes the multitude the rulers, and the multitude tends too readily to momentary excitements. The wild Anarchist, the would-be assassin, are the public enemies of society whom to tolerate is to tolerate open sedition. An enemy, too, of public order is the workman who, refusing his own labor, deters by violence a brother workman from offering his labor, as is even in a greater degree the strong and the powerful who override the law of the land in carrying out schemes of their ambition.

"Private property, the right of every man to own and dispose of the fruits of brain and of hand, must be regarded as SACRED AND INVIOLABLE. It is the cornerstone of the social structure. Destroy it, weaken it, and you establish barbarism. Nor is private ownership to be merely for the individual himself. It is for those who are parts of himself, his children and those others whom by his own free will he chooses to make beneficiaries of the rewards of his labor of mind or of limb.

"That in the holding of private property there be inequality is a fact that is inevitable. MEN ARE NOT AND NEVER WILL BE EQUAL. Proposed Utopias which ignore the nature of men and the vital condition of human society, are an insult no less than an injury to the individual whom they fain would beguile by their will-o'-the-wisp glamor and deception."

Poor Nazarene! You were the original "undesirable citizen."

THE AMSTERDAM ANARCHIST CONFERENCE

By MAX BAGINSKI.

THE process—national as well as international—of "exterminating" us Anarchists has now been going on for several decades. Almost all "civilized" governments, republican as well as monarchical, have built high fences around their boundaries in order to keep out the dread "public danger." Whatever forms of violence human ingenuity could devise have been practiced upon the Anarchists. Russia and Spain torture them; they suffer in the prisons of France, Italy, Germany and Austria, while our free America subjects them to the tender mercies of her police hordes and deports them.

People charge us with being mere dreamers whose ideals are purely utopian—lacking common sense and opposed to human nature. Humanity must become angelic—so we are told—before Anarchy would be feasible.

On the other hand we are pictured as veritable devils, whom only fire and brimstone will conquer.

The Anarchist Conference to be held in August at Amsterdam, Holland, will serve as ironic proof, so to speak, that the united governmental efforts have failed to "exterminate" Anarchism.

The Conference can accomplish, however, much more. The Anarchists do not believe in "binding resolutions," nor in majority decisions. We expect much, however, from voluntary co-operation, and the international exchange of ideas, opinions and experiences. The "power to resolve" does not depend upon the number of ayes and noes. It springs from the free, rational perception of things.

To the Anarchists democracy is no less a tyrant than autocracy. Indeed, the latter has but one head; democracy, however, is a thousand-headed hydra that can not be guillotined as easily as a Bourbon Louis.

Much may be resolved upon that is never carried out, while many things are accomplished without preliminary solemn resolutions. Wherever free initiative is the outgrowth of certain conditions it will prove far more effective than resolutions passed by majority vote. Nor must we forget to consider the harmful effect of obedience as compared with the ennobling, broadening results of free solidaric action.

We may, therefore, safely ignore the objection that no Conference should be held by those who do not believe in the superiority of the majority. The Conferences and Congresses of politicians have for their principal object the eradication of all free initiative. The party has decided—that settles it! A gathering of Anarchists, however, is for the very purpose of reviving and strengthening the spirit of initiative. Laws and rules are required by people who want to dominate others. That applies to party leaders, for instance, whose power is endangered when their flocks leave the beaten path and ignore established custom. The same is true of governments, as well as of all mastery founded on force

[Excerpt from Lecture] Roosevelt Is Not Friend of Labor / Emma Goldman.— p. 12 ; 43 cm. In The Oregonian [Portland]. —(June 3, 1907).

ROOSEVELT IS NOT FRIEND OF LABOR

Instrument of Capital and Apostle of Brute Force, Says Miss Goldman.

REFERS TO IDAHO TRIAL

High-Priestess of Anarchists in Lecture Counsels Followers to Line Up to Save Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone.

"How many anarchists are there in the United States? Well, there is no record as to how many there are of us," replied Emma Goldman, the high priestess of anarchy, when asked the question yesterday. "However, I am in communication with 60,000 anarchists, of whom I have a knowledge. Our membership is in no sense confined to the laboring classes, for we recognize no classes. It includes students and professional men as well.

"As an indication," continued Miss Goldman, "of the intense interest that is being taken by people in every section of the United States in the philosophy of anarchism, I might say that during my present tour I have sold $1700 worth of pamphlets treating on anarchistic subjects. When it is considered that with the exception of a limited number of books, sold for 60 cents each, all of these leaflets were priced at but 10 cents, an idea may be formed as to the number of persons who are really interested in this subject and are actually studying it."

"What do you think of President Roosevelt as the champion of popular government?" was asked by the reporter.

"President Roosevelt, no matter how good he may be as a man, is not the friend of labor and the toiling masses. He is the instrument of organized government and the representative of the capitalistic classes. He does not embody the better qualities of the American citizen. He is the apostle of brute force, and does not possess those finer qualities which make for the development of kinder human relations."

On Tour for Three Months.

Miss Goldman is a native of Russia and was educated in Germany. She came to the United States 22 years ago, and has lectured in exposition of anarchism and its teachings for 18 years. Of her career as a lecturer, five years were spent in Europe, where she made a study of conditions, on which she bases much of her argument in behalf of the philosophy she now preaches. She left New York in March, and during the last three months has lectured in practically all of the principal cities in the United States.

From Portland Miss Goldman goes to the Sound, and thence into Canada, where she says there is great activity among the friends of anarchism. She expects to reach New York City early in the Summer, and will then sail for Amsterdam, where she will attend a congress of anarchists that will be convened August 15.

Large audiences assembled at the Selling-Hirsch building twice yesterday to hear lectures by Miss Goldman. Both audiences were representative of the laboring classes. There were but few present out of curiosity. Evidently of her faith were her hearers, who were frequently stirred to applause by her vigorous utterances. In the afternoon Miss Goldman lectured on "Direct Action Versus Legislative or Political Action."

Strikes Not Effective.

"Industrial problems in this country," she said, "have given rise to a realization that there is need for considering the best methods for bringing about relief from existing economical conditions. What has labor accomplished through legislative or political action? By relying on these agencies as a means of relief, the working people as an organization are weakening themselves. The records show that almost every important strike within the past 30 years has been lost to the laborers, or has been broken. Trades unions are generally considered a means for bringing about an improvement in their own economical welfare, but the lack of solidarity and comity of interest among the different branches of organized labor is responsible for the failure of the average strike. Instead of all other branches of organized labor lending their support to the particular organization that is seeking strikers did not understand the plan proposed by direct action.

Referring incidentally to the pending trial of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone in Idaho, Miss Goldman referred to Detective McParland as a "degenerate," characterized the Pinkerton detectives as the "scum of society," and declared that President Roosevelt is "the officer of organized authority and government and the instrument of the capitalists." She then spoke of incidents in connection with the burial of men hanged for complicity in the Haymarket riots, when friends of the dead men lined up for five miles to follow the dead to their graves.

Advises Against Delay.

"Are you going to wait until after the lives of those three men on trial in Idaho have been taken," she asked, "and then line up for a distance of five miles to follow them to their graves? Why wait until their lives have been taken? Would it not be well to line up now?

"Capital is more brutal in America than it is in any other country, and the time certainly has come when the means so successfully employed in Europe should be adopted in this country. Direct action and the general strike are needed in this country to settle labor difficulties. There is no common ground for labor and capital and they cannot be brought together. He who says they can is either a fool or a hypocrite. It is not by arbitration, not in Congress, but through the industrial movement and the united efforts of the workingmen themselves that relief from existing conditions can be brought about."

Last night Miss Goldman delivered her last lecture, the subject being "Revolutionary Spirit in the Modern Drama." She argued that there exists a dissatisfied condition in all classes of society and in every activity of life closely bordering on a state or revolt. In the course of the lecture, she quoted from the following writers and their works: Tolstoi's "Power of Darkness"; Gorky's "Night of Refuge"; Ibsen's "A Doll's House," "Ghosts," and "Enemy of the People"; Gerhaupt's "Weavers and Sunken Bells"; Miribeau's "Business Is Business"; Maeterlinck's "Monna Vanna"; Yeat's "Where There Is Nothing"; Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windemere's Fan," and Bernard Shaw's "Mrs Warren's Profession."

FROM A VETERAN ENGINEER

Advises Voters to Defeat Examining Board Ordinance.

PORTLAND, June 2.—(To the Editor.)—In today's Oregonian I read two letters from two distinct factions of the engineers' associations, one endeavoring to explain to the taxpayers of this city the merits of or need of an examining board, the other the utter uselessness of such an institution. Now, neither one of these hits the nail on the head. I wish to say to the taxpayers of Portland that I am a taxpayer of the city, have been a steam engineer in Portland for 35 years, and am pretty well acquainted with all the different steam plants and a great many of the engineers, though I am not a member of either faction. I wish to put this matter straight to the voters. There is no need of any such board as an engineers' examining board. No good can come from it. All boilers in the city are under inspection of a careful, competent inspector, and a report is made quarterly in duplicate. One report is sent to the owners and a duplicate turned over to the insurance company insuring the same. A report also is made as to the care and management of these steam plants, and there is not an owner of a steam plant in this city who does not know just the exact qualifications of his engineer. I find no fools in charge of steam plants in this city (except a few who would like to have the taxpayers put them in a fine office to look wise—and graft).

Neither is there need of a wiring inspector. There are already rules laid down as to how work shall be done in this line. Taxpayers are already burdened heavily enough without those jolly rot amendments to our city charter, and all voters should vote no to both. All the boilers in our hotels are in good careful hands. Not a city in the United States can compare with Portland in this respect. We have no accidents from engineers' faults in Portland, and I defy Mr. Asher or any other engineer to show figures to the contrary. Engineer examining boards never saved any lives yet, but have created hardships and plenty of ill-feeling.

I am not slinging mud at any engineer who is attending to business for himself and his employer. I merely ask the voters and engineers generally to vote money for good up-to-date mechanical journals. Respectfully,

W. E. HARRIS,

NEW POLICY IN RESERVES

GOVERNMENT EXPERIMENTS IN GRAZING THEM.

Band of Sheep Will Be Fenced in and Left Without Herder to Brave Coyotes.

WALLOWA, Or., June 2.—(Special.)—Frederick V. Coville, expert botanist from the Bureau of Plant Industry, is here from Washington, D. C., to inaugurate an experiment which it is believed will greatly increase the grazing capacity of the reserves. Down on the Chesnimnus division of the Imnaha reserve, where the coyotes are thickest, an area of ten or 12 square miles will be enclosed with a wolf-proof fence and a band of sheep, preferably yearlings which have not been herded, will be turned in the enclosure and allowed to pasture during the remainder of the Summer.

It is believed that the same amount of grass will support many more sheep when they are pastured than when they are herded. Should this theory be proved, the result will revolutionize the entire policy of the department in regard to the reserves and will have a great bearing upon the stock industry. The same experiment will be tried on a small scale in other reserves, but nowhere so extensively as here on the Imnaha National Forest Reserve.

The fence will consist of a closely barbed hog wire, stretched close to the ground, a woven wire fence three inches above that with a triangular mesh of five or six inches, six inches higher a barbed cattle wire and eight inches above that a smooth cable wire. These will be stretched on eight-foot posts, set two and one-half feet in the ground. This fence, it is thought, will exclude all coyotes and other wild animals which prey upon sheep.

Mr. Covill will remain here until the first of July, when he will go to Washington to report, but will return about the first of August. While here he will confer with the stockmen and ascertain their views in the matter. The information gleaned from this source is expected to aid materially in conducting the experiment. Two assistants for Mr. Coville will arrive this week.

Besides this experiment the department will send an expert entomologist during the coming month to determine the best method of combatting the effects of the bark beetle that is destroying hundreds of acres of lodge-pole pine in the Sheep Creek region.

who are really interested in this subject and are actually studying it."

"What do you think of President Roosevelt as the champion nf popular government?" was asked by the reporter.

"President Roosevelt, no matter hnw good he may be as a man, is not the friend of labor and the toiling masses. He is the instrument of organized government and the representative of the capitalistic classes. He does nnt embody the better qualities of the American citizen. He is the apostle of brute force, and does not possess those finer qualities which make for the development of kinder human relations."

On Tour for Three Months.

Miss Goldman is a native of Russia and was educated in Germany. She came to the United States 22 years ago, and has lectured in exposition of anarchism and its teachings for 18 years. Of her career as a lecturer, five years were spent in Europe, where she made a study of conditions, on which she bases much of her argument in behalf nf the philosophy she now preaches. She left New York in March, and during the last three months has lectured in practically all of the principal cities in the United States.

Frnm Portland Miss Goldman goes to the Sound, and thence into Canada where she says there is great activity among the friends of anarchism. She expects to reach New York City early in the Summer, and will then sail for Amsterdam, where she will attend a congress of anarchists that will be convenod August 15.

Large audiences assembled at the Selling-Hirsch building twice yesterday to hear lectures by Miss Goldman. Both audiences were representative of the laboring classes. There were but few present out of curiosity. Evidently of her faith were her hearers, who were frequently stirred to applause by her vigorous utterances. In the afternoon Miss Goldman lectured on "Direct Action Versus Legislative or Political Action."

Strikes Not Effective.

"Industrial problems in this country," she said, "have given rise to a realization that there is need for considering the best methods for bringing about relief from existing economical conditions. What has labor accomplished through logislative or political action? By relying on these agencies as a means of relief, the working people as an organization are weakening themselves. The records show that almost every important strike within the past 20 years has been lost to the laborers, or has been broken. Trades unions are generally considered a means for bringing about an improvement in their own economical welfare, but the lack of solidarity and comity of interest among the different branches of organized labor is responsible for the failure of the average strike. Instead nf all other branches of organized labor lending their support to the particular organizatinn that is seeking to benefit its condition, we find them lending their services to the capitalists. What is needed is a regeneration of trades unionism."

"There can be no comity of relations between those who own everything and never work and those who dn not own anything and always work. The miners' strike in 1904 was lost because the striking miners relied on legislation that it was hoped would effect a satisfactory settlement between the mine-owners and the miners. The printers' strike in 1907 was lost for no other reason than that the strikers gave their employers four months' notice that a strike was to be called. The result was that the employers at once began to prepare for the threatened strike, and the very men who proposed tn strike and did strike aided the employers in preparing for the difficulty, in eventually defeating tho strike hy working overtime during those four months.

Why the Carmen Lost.

"The recent strike among the carmen in San Francisco has been lost for the very same reason. The strike of the miners, it is true, was arbitrated, hut not in the interest of the miners, who were required tn return to their former employment under precisely the same conditions as before.

"Participatinn is politics by organized labor has nnt gained anything, but instead has undermined the basic principle and subdued the revolutionary spirit nf workingmen the world over. The result of this experience has been the development of a new movement, the industrial movement which has come to recognize as a means for gaining relief not legislative or political action, but direct action and the general strike. Instead of depending and relying on their representatives, their laws and those who are negotiating for them, laboring men are coming to realize that the only effective means of accomplishing results is for them to come into direct relation with their employers and give them no time to prepare for strikes."

Miss Goldman quoted statistics to show that in France and Germany, where the direct action and general strike theory was invoked, 35 of 100 strikes were won, 25 partly won and the remaining 40 lost because the

Judge Rosalsky, of New York, is achieving notoriety by the equanimity with which he imposes the most brutally severe sentences upon—poor, friendless defendants.

Recently he sentenced a man to fifteen years, whose "crime," properly considered, was mere disorderly conduct.

Last October, when the mention of Czolgosz's name by some of our comrades created a panic among police and bourgeois souls, this same Rosalsky volunteered the information that if the arrested Anarchists were to appear before him, "they would get a fair trial; but if convicted, they would be punished to the full extent of the law."

A hangman in the garb of a judge! And yet a judge overflowing with consideration and mercy—when the right kind of defendants stand before the bar.

The theatrical trust, managed by Klaw and Erlanger, was charged with illegally suppressing competition, persecution of "obnoxious" actors and the suppression of unprofitable plays.

The charges were dismissed by Judge Rosalsky. The art monopolists, who deal in art as the butcher deals in meat, found mercy at the hands of the wise judge. Bring but rich, influential culprits before the bar and Judge Rosalsky will prove that his heart overflows with kindness, compassion and mercy for the unfortunate defendants.

Our statistics as to the "wealth of the country"—the absorption of monster fortunes by individual families and corporations—remain incomplete if we fail to count in the army of victims sacrificed on the altar of greed and profit.

The following report from one of our industrial hells —Pittsburg—throws some light on the cost of capitalistic production:

"The grim and tragic side of Pittsburg's industrial supremacy, as reflected in the county coroner's log book of violent deaths, is beginning to arouse a feeling of horror at the frightful cost of the wealth which its millionaires are piling up.

"When the coroner closed his log for 1906 he found that in the year he had been called on to record a total of 2,660 deaths. Of these 919 were the result directly of accident in mill, mine, or on railroad, the industries most essential to the city's progress. Sufficient more of the total number of deaths in the city were indirectly attributed to the same causes to make more than 50 per cent. of all the deaths the cost in human life of the steel and money made in Pittsburg for 1906.

"Appalling as these figures are, the chances are that a new record will be established this year. Already in the five months that have elapsed, 1,095 deaths have been recorded in the coroner's log, and of these 344 came suddenly and violently in the mills and mines and on the railroads that gridiron the city. In the same period last year, the total number of deaths recorded was 1,015, and those laid at the door of the city's industries numbered 340.

"While in the aggregate these figures may seem abnormal they are recorded so regularly that their magnitude is scarcely realized. The average number of deaths reported to the coroner is about 250 a month, and there is little variation from this from year to year.

"Comparing the loss of life by accidents with the tonnage and production of the Pittsburg district, one life has been snuffed out for every 50,000 tons of coal that is shipped, and the annual shipment is about 50,000,000 tons. For every 3,800 cars that carry freight out of or into Pittsburg some soul has given up the ghost. This is exclusive of cars that are carrying freight through to other points.

"Every 7,600 tons of the 7,000,000 tons annual production of iron and steel have been put out at the cost of the life of one of the manipulators somewhere in its manufacture, and of the 800,000 tons annual output of steel rails every 87,000 tons have been put upon the market only after some one of its producers has laid down his life."

Such reports often read: "Burned by molten metal and died."

In what cause do these unfortunates suffer such a terrible death? Merely to prolong their poverty, to perpetuate their own and their progeny's slavery. How much more noble and heroic—and more practical—were it if they would stake their lives in the cause of their emancipation from industrial slavery!

Canada is about to perpetrate one of the most unspeakable outrages—ostensibly in the name of civilization, in reality because of governmental violence and greedy land speculation.

Recent reports from Winnipeg state that the Canadian government has finally decided to expel the Doukhobors from the lands assigned to them in 1899.

The Doukhobors are splendid agriculturists; they have successfully cultivated a considerable part of the land, and now they are to be despoiled of their homes and the fruits of their labor, in the manner practiced by our own railroad and land sharks.

One is reminded of the story told by Frank Norris in "The Octopus": the fight of the California farmers with the railroads who are wont to claim the "right of ownership" as soon as the value of the land has become enhanced by successful cultivation.

But while the California farmers, conscious of their strength, resisted by force of arms the robbery of their land, the meek in spirit Doukhobors will be set upon and driven from their homesteads, like the lepers of old, without offering resistance.

Knouted and persecuted in Russia, victims of Cossacks and starvation—all because they refused to murder at the Czar's behest—they finally sought, with Tolstoy's assistance, a haven on Canadian soil.

There they toiled industriously and successfully, as farmers. But the government, greedy of the improved lands, stamped them as criminals. Their worst crime is thus described in a report from Winnipeg:

"One of their earliest leaders had taught that governments were unnecessary, all men equal, the hierarchy and the priesthood human inventions, the church and its ceremonies superfluous, monasticism a perversion of human nature, the conspiracy of property owners a disgrace to mankind, and the Czar and archbishops just like other people. They refused to pay taxes, and the matter was compromised by allowing them to do road work.

"They had been made exempt from military service, but they refused to become citizens and take out patents on their land in the regular way. They were cleanly, industrious, honest, moral and religious, but the only Bible they believed in was scriptural quotations passed from mouth to mouth and such inspirations as they themselves thought they were receiving from time to time."

Thus the Doukhobors are to be despoiled and expelled by a Christian government for taking Christianity seriously and attempting to practice its precepts in their every-day lives. How unfortunate that they did not become good, hypocritical, automobile Christians—their desirability as citizens would then not be doubted.

Non-resistants, the Doukhobors will prove easy victims of governmental brutality. With fiendish refinement of cruelty Canada has chosen the coldest winter months for the expulsion outrage.

A word about recent strikes and how they should not be conducted.

It seems like the veriest irony upon modern, all-too-passive strike methods that the seamen declared a strike after the longshoremen, defeated, had returned to work. Are there any workingmen foolish enough to believe that their strike funds will ever suffice to successfully fight multi-millionaires along lines of passive resistance? What folly! The labor unions have but one successful weapon: economic pressure combined with the General Strike.

Lack of active sympathy and solidarity was responsible for the loss of the car men's strike at San Francisco. Union teamsters, for instance, hauled strike breakers from the railroad station to the company's barns and transported for the company the necessaries of life, thus helping to break the strike. Mr. Cornelius, one of the organizers of the car men's union and now its President, personally assisted in taking a street car to the barns when the unskilled scabs proved incompetent to do so. Such leaders are traitors and the worst enemies of labor, and strikes thus conducted are doomed to failure.

The New York authorities are very much concerned about the city's health, but not to the extent of giving the city cart drivers a chance to make a decent living. Refuse lies rotting in the streets—but even at the risk of an epidemic the powers that be will not grant the drivers' demands for humane conditions.

If the strikers, however, had shown more perseverance and had received the solidaric support of their fellow-workmen, they would have won the strike: the comfortable classes would speedily realize that their whole civilization would perish from filth, were it not for the work of their slaves.

It cannot be denied that even the dog days bring some consolation.

People and institutions whose habitual activity is a nuisance—when not positively evil—take their summer vacation, to the unspeakable relief of sensible men.

Legislatures adjourn, so that the growth of the ill-smelling refuse pile of law-making impotence is temporarily arrested.

In the courts only the "most important cases" come to trial—and Justice draws a sigh of relief: she is not to be prostituted so often by the hangmen of paragraphed legality.

Another advantage of the dog days is that the President makes fewer speeches. That's about the only occasion when he deserves well of his country.

Perhaps the greatest boon resulting from the hot spell is the fact that Benjamin R. Tucker has decided not to publish his Liberty till September. He thus stamps himself a man of great consideration, who sympathises with the troubles of mankind and is determined to do his best not to add to our intellectual misery.

It is to be hoped that the unusual heat will also moderate the zeal of the ethical Felix Adler. It were the better part of wisdom if he would consent to take a few months' rest upon the moral cushions of scientific ethics. He has earned his vacation, since he must have toiled long and hard to discover the great new virtue: self-aggrandizement. He recently eulogized Carl Schurz as the very personification of virtue. Schurz's forte was career making. 'Tis the newest virtue to secure as many sinecures and honors as possible. Felix Adler will go down in history as the founder of get-there ethics.

DOUGLAS, Arizona, July 1.—Manuel Satabia, one of the leading spirits in the former St. Louis junta, known here as Samuel Moret, was arrested yesterday and lodged in jail at the instance, it is said, of the Mexican Government.

Late last night an automobile occupied by two Americans was driven to the jail. The prisoner was delivered to them and was forcibly placed in the vehicle. The automobile and its occupants were seen a little later passing through the streets and several witnesses say that the prisoner was choked into submission.

This was the last seen of the automobile, but there seems little doubt that Satabia was delivered to Mexican officers at Aguaprieta.—N. Y. Times, July 2, 1907.

The people that go into hysterics over the crimes committed by the Czar of Russia should bear in mind that conditions nearer home, in Mexico, are in some respects even worse than those of Russia. It is also well to remember that the American government is aiding to the best of its ability the Mexican bloodhounds in their mad pursuit of innocent victims.

In our next issue we expect to speak at greater length of the terrible governmental outrages now being perpetrated in Mexico.

When the first Duma was dissolved, a member of the British Cabinet exclaimed in a fit of "liberal" enthusiasm: "The Duma is dead. Long live the Duma!"

Now the second Duma has been driven to join its predecessor. Liberalism and Parliamentarism are proving dead letters.

Is it not time to exclaim: "The Duma is dead. Long live the Social Revolution!"?

Severe prison sentences have been imposed by the Spanish Inquisition on several radicals, among them José Nakens, editor of El Motin, who has been condemned to nine years' imprisonment. They were charged with sheltering over night Morral, who had thrown a bomb at the imbecile Alfonso. Humane feeling was the offence of the condemned. Among barbarians hospitality was a sacred duty, but under Christian civilization it is the gravest crime.

The "revolution" of the vine growers of Southern France would seem to indicate that even philistines will kick over the traces when governmentally driven to starvation. They had heard of the State-enriched Panamites and of greedy speculators and promoters generously fed by the government. There was no reason, they thought, why they, too, should not be protected by the government in their profits. Poor simpletons, they soon learned through bitter experience that the State is the agent of the big thiefs, but no protector of the common people. The social and economic maladies of the latter are governmentally treated with powder and shell.

THE HAYWOOD TRIAL

By MAX BAGINSKI.

THE social and economic causes and battles, which have resulted in the Idaho trial, are of far greater significance than the legal wrangle now in progress at Boise; the latter, considered by itself, is but a carricature of the world-drama and its social, psychic meaning.

It is to be hoped that Clarence Darrow, chief counsel for the defence, will lift the court proceedings from their low level to the higher phase of social-philosophic consideration. He is probably the only lawyer in the country intellectually equal to the requirements of the case and who, moreover, possesses that sincerity of purpose and sympathetic understanding which cannot be acquired by either study or calculation.

of the gallows, Orchard suddenly felt opportunity knocking at his door: acquittal, liberty, money and protection held out alluring hands to him—the conversion of the murderous Saul into the meek Paul was a foregone conclusion. 'Tis but a repetition of a common occurrence. It is our daily experience that the meanest scoundrels feel safest and best under the protection of the altar cloth. The prosecutor, Senator Borah, is certainly a pious Christian—there is a charge of land robbery pending against him.

So far no evidence has been forthcoming in support of the charges against the officials of the Western Federation of Miners, except the accusations of the Pinkerton-converted Orchard. The prosecution has no legs to stand on; the State's case is even weaker in this instance than it was in the case of Spies and comrades in 1886. It is only too plain that plutocracy, with the aid of the State, is straining every nerve to remove from its path its enemies, these incorruptible champions of labor; and yet, 'tis by no means safe to predict the acquittal of Haywood, Moyer and Pettibone, for Justice has sold herself, body and soul, like a prostitute, to the money power.

The Prosecutor and Court are the tools of plutocracy, and the jury consists, at best, of "desirable" citizens whose chief fitness, as jurors, is in the fact of their complete ignorance of the very subjects most vital in this trial.

The sole hope is in organized labor, whose advisers and true friends the accused are. Unfortunately, however, the great majority of workingmen are still sleeping the sleep of the innocent; yet there is a ray of hope shining from the West which leads us to believe that the great awakening is not so far distant.

That ray is to be found in the following report:

"The annual convention of the Western Federation of Miners has by a vote of 345 to 25 delegates deprived local unions under its jurisdiction of the power of making contracts with employers. The preamble and resolution adopted read as follows:

"'Contracts entered into with the employing classes are of benefit only to the former. Such contracts divide the workers in their struggle with the exploiters; change one body of workers in subjection while war is being waged upon another body; often compel one union to scab upon another union; destroy the class instinct of the workers by a false sense of temporary security to cease taking an active interest in the affairs of their organization while such contracts are in force, and have absolutely no place in a progressive labor organization. Therefore be it

"Resolved, By the fifteenth annual convention of the Western Federation of Miners, that any and all signed contracts or verbal agreements for any specified length of time that may have been entered into between any local union or unions of the Western Federation of Miners are by this convention declared null and void.'"

This step is a new departure; it shows clear comprehension of conditions and is the reflex of the determination to oppose the whole economic power of labor to brutal capitalistic exploitation. Welcome the conscious strength which will not be twittered away in useless bickerings and compromises.

Such shameful trials as the one now taking place at Boise can be prevented only by the strong, self-conscious attitude of labor. An intelligent proletariat which has advanced to a true understanding of its position and which has emancipated itself from the superstition of governmental justice and capitalistic economics will not suffer such trials.

ON THE ROAD

BY EMMA GOLDMAN.

(Conclusion.)

Denver. Those who fly high on the wings of imagination must expect to suffer an occasional fall.

The stirring history of Colorado's labor struggles quickened my blood with the thought of the revolutionary attitude of the workers since 1903. I was full of expectation. Had not the mine owners with the aid of their hirelings—the government—waged relentless war against organized labor? Had they not robbed and oppressed in the most merciless manner? Had they not employed the most dastardly means against the three friends of labor whom they could neither corrupt nor conquer? Surely the plutocracy of Colorado had committed enough crimes to cause a national revolution.

My imagination pictured united labor striving in soli-daric unity in that great cause, their emancipation from the twin monsters of capitalism and authority.

It was a painful awakening! Whatever the feeling of the workers of Colorado may be at this critical moment, Denver has too much of the hospital atmosphere to permit of a healthy revolutionary spirit. Essentially a health resort, its patients are too much occupied with themselves to bother about the outrage now being enacted at Boise. Of course, there are the intellectuals, or the High Brows as they are playfully called: writers, editors and other professional men; but one would look in vain for revolutionary backbone among them. They hug their comforts and love material and social success too well to follow the example of their brothers in Russia who, at the risk of their own lives, carry the beacon of human emancipation into factory and field. No doubt the American intellectuals are also interested in the pressing questions of the day, but it is the parlor interest of men decked out in evening dress, sipping tea from dainty China cups. Fortunately, the world is full of exceptions. It gave me great joy to find two such in Henry and Lillian Thayer—true Americans in the best sense, in whom the revolutionary spirit of their forefathers has triumphed over the influence of a conservative New England rearing.

The meetings arranged by a solitary enthusiastic comrade proved quite successful, but as I said before, they bore a convalescent appearance. Our social, however, more than realized my highest expectations. In spite of the stormy night we had a most successful gathering of representatives of various schools of thought, united by a genuine feeling of brotherhood and common interest. The purely human side is always at its best at informal affairs.

Our comrades at large will be glad to learn that our old staunch friends William and Lizzie Holmes have awakened to a new interest and have joined the literary staff of Mother Earth.

San Francisco. The city I once called the American Paris looked like a graveyard upon my arrival. Not a fashionable cemetery with imposing tombstones, but like a gigantic refuse pile in which sticks and stones mark the last resting place of the social outcasts. But, then, an uninterrupted trip of sixty hours under capitalistic management that landed me in San Francisco eight hours too late for the first of May meeting, is not calculated to make one see things in roseate colors. Three weeks' stay in the city has, however, not worn off my first impression. The earthquake—or the fire, as the natives prefer to believe—has left its lasting mark. Of course, capitalistic greed is striving to rebuild the city, but the new homes and structures being put up are making the Gate City even more hideous than the ruins still scattered about. No less hideous are the disclosures of the depravity of the local authorities, represented by Mayor Schmitz & Co. The good citizen is eternally drilled in the necessity and usefulness of laws and government, while his rulers are growing fat on the Mrs. Warrens, without even running the financial risks of Sir John Crofts or the Bishop of Canterbury. When one considers how few of our official rogues are ever exposed, one shudders at the demoralization of our public life.

The conditions during my stay in San Francisco almost seemed to bear out the charges of the yellow press against me. As if it were not sufficient for one woman to be responsible for the deaths of all crowned heads and most great strikes, I have now discovered that I am credited by science with having enriched surgery by a most interesting case—the result of the Czolgosz shot.

Two strikes really broke out after I set foot on the shaky soil,—shaky not because of the quake, but on account of the numerous quacks of the California labor movement, who are feeding the workers on patent medicine and pills. Nothing but quack treatment can bring about such results as the strike of the telephone operators and car men. The former have but recently awakened to the necessity of organization, which probably means to most of them more ribbons and ice cream; but the car men, familiar with the true purposes of trade unionism, should have long since realized that they are waging a life-and-death struggle. The attitude of the unions was simply ridiculous. They gave the company all opportunity to prepare for the strike and then looked on in passive resistance while their doom was being sealed. Nay, more, Cornelius, President of the car employees, offered his services to the Mayor to preserve order, which under the circumstances meant the protection of the company in its successful strike-breaking.

The only satisfactory feature of the strike was the attitude of the public. The people refused to ride on the cars and walked singly and en masse to and from work; their sympathies were entirey with the strikers and the latter would have gained a splendid victory had they been blessed with sufficient sense to know how to handle the situation.

The general condition of the city made the preparations for my meetings very difficult, the more so as most of our local comrades live very far apart and were worn out by their daily long tramps. The work of arrangement therefore fell upon the shoulders of a few men. A number of splendidly attended meetings took place, and a large amount of literature sold.

Our farewell social brought the radical elements closer together and, though twelve different nationalities were represented, including our ardent Japanese comrades, all hearts beat in unison for one great, common cause.

Climate is known to have great influence upon human development; it is probably due to this that the Socialists of the coast are less dogmatic and authoritarian than their Eastern brothers. At any rate, I was invited to lecture before the San Francisco local and was treated in the most cordial manner.

Los Angeles.—Four weeks' continuous correspondence finally resulted in five meetings being arranged in the Sunny City. It was hard ploughing, but the harvest repaid the effort. As the readers will find a more detailed report from Los Angeles, I shall merely remark here that if I have accomplished nothing more than to rekindle the enthusiasm of our long-lost brother, W. C. Owen, my work at Los Angeles has been amply rewarded.

Few of our young readers and comrades are familiar with that name, but those of us who remember such intellectual towers as Dyer D. Lum and John Edelman will recollect W. C. Owen as one of the ablest and ardent workers in the movement at that period.

For reasons of his own, Comrade Owen has kept in the background. When my coming to Los Angeles was suggested, he was too skeptical of success to take an active interest. I was therefore very glad to see him at every meeting and happy to learn that he became sufficiently interested in my work to continue it upon my departure.

I am also glad to state that C. B. C——r, well known to our New York comrades, has recovered his former intellectual breadth and is now actively participating in the work of the Social Science Club.

Altogether, my visit to Los Angeles proved a rare treat. My host and hostess, the breeze of the Tyrolian mountains in their natures; my meeting an old comrade who, in spite of his Socialistic opportunism, is really bigger than his work; and many other persons and incidents combined to make my visit interesting and pleasant.

Portland.—Philistine ascendancy seems to have ridden the local Anarchists of their Anarchism. Most of them have grown prosperous and do not want their neighbors to remember their "youthful follies." Others are busy saving the country from race suicide. Those who have some Anarchism left were willing enough to work, but lacked the experience. Still, three meetings have been held at Portland, and it is to be hoped that the ice crust covering the native heart and mind has been somewhat reduced in size. The Oregonian, a daily publication, aided my work by printing almost stenographic reports of my lectures.

Tacoma.—Nature has not been as generous to Tacoma as to Portland; it lacks the latter's brilliance and beauty. The city seems to be stagnant; it has not grown during the last eight years.—My first meeting was largely attended and very satisfactory. By request I remained for another lecture which, however, was not as successful as the first, owing to a large fire which broke out in the neighborhood at the opening of the meeting.

Home Colony.—It was my intention to spend a few days at Home Colony, better known in Tacoma as the home of "cranks" and "free-lovers." But fate willed it otherwise. I arrived at 8 P. M., and left the next morning, as time was pressing. I therefore do not know whether the colonists are either cranky or free; but this I do know, that they have accomplished wonders. Within eight years they have converted a wilderness into a beautiful garden, and though numerous nationalities are represented at the Colony, they have successfully demonstrated that neither law nor government is necessary for their well-being. No doubt there is occasional friction and misunderstanding; but the colonists have conclusively proven that neither police nor jails are necessary in a rational social organization. As they gradually learn that true Anarchism means non-interference, friction will be minimized.

Seattle.—All is well that ends well.—The authorities and hall keepers became panic-stricken when my coming was announced. It was with great difficulty that we procured a hall.

I refer my readers to the more detailed report by A. H. I wish to state, however, that I regret very much that the proposed debate could not take place. It would have been almost too easy a victory to meet a man who shows his colors like Mr. Mills. The latter claims that Socialism "proclaims its obedience to the law and its desire to act always under and in accordance with legal forms." If that be so, I fail to see the difference between Socialism and any other governmental theory. Or Mr. Mills misrepresents Socialism, and in that case he is but a typical politician.

Calgery.—"We are the people; the grandest people. We possess the greatest wonders of the world,"—such is the notion of a real, "desirable" American citizen.

After enjoying the perfume of New York's greatest ornament—the famous East Side—for eight years, I made my first trip through the West in 1897. When I beheld the majestic beauty of the Rockies and the California mountains, I too felt that nature was incapable of anything grander. But my journey from Seattle to Calgery, through British Columbia, the dreamland of Selkirks and the Glaziers has completely cured me of national arrogance. Never before had I seen such glory, such wealth of color and form, and never has man with all his boasted achievements seemed so puny, so insignificant as at the sight of those giants with the shimmer of gold reflected upon their snowy caps, immovable, inexorable and eternal as the firmament.

From these heights I fell into the mud of Calgery,—a town as gloomy as the priest's cassock. The great mass, however, that thronged the hall Sunday, June the sixteenth, was as surprising as it was unexpected. Indeed ideas are like lightning: they travel with the same rapidity and strike hard when they come in contact with the human mind. They have reached even far-away, deserted Calgery. Unfortunately, I did not have a single brochure or Mother Earth with me. The Canadian Postal service seems to serve everybody but the people. Literature sent from New York on the sixth of the month did not reach Calgery till after the sixteenth. My trunk, containing books and pamphlets, having been negligently allowed to remain at Seattle, I could leave nothing behind me but an impression. However, the ice has been broken, and if the work is continued, good fruition will result.

Nobody should be expected to lecture or to attend a meeting during the hot Summer days. Winnipeg and Chicago have convinced me of this on my return trip. It was altogether too hot to remain indoors. Besides, the human mind refuses to be overtaxed. I was too fatigued and worn out to take much interest in the meetings in the above-mentioned cities. Still, I was glad to meet again our active boys of Winnipeg and the good comrades of Chicago.

When I left New York, March third, I believed that I could return by the first of May. I found, however, such a tremendous interest in Anarchism all through the country, that even four months' touring barely covered the ground.

Our grand old man, Peter Kropotkin, recently wrote to me, inquiring whether I could recommend some young American comrades for work abroad. I replied, in effect, that if we had such gems, we could set them here. Now that my tour is ended, I am convinced more firmly than ever that the soil is ripe and the seed good. What we need is sowers. I have met many genuine, clear-headed and sincere American Anarchists, willing and ready to help our work, once it is properly started. What they lack is initiative. Some day that, too, may be called forth when the call of the battle will ring loud enough in their ears. Then they, too, will realize the beauty of the open road and joyfully follow its beckoning.

SEATTLE REPORT

It was good for sore eyes to see Comrade Emma Goldman again. We were unable to arrange a complete schedule—could get the hall only for three lectures, June ninth, eleventh and twelfth, at the Socialist Temple, where Emma Goldman spoke on "Misconceptions of Anarchism," "Direct Action versus Political Action," and "The Revolutionary Spirit of the Modern Drama." She spoke in Seattle to crowded houses and wound up by organizing the Social Science Club with about 60 members. The work here was not only successful financially, but also served to kindle the dormant fires of the spirit of revolution and has created a basis for uniting the revolutionary forces and stimulating them to greater activity.

One of the causes of this success was the announcement of our amiable and enlightened Chief of Police that he would arrest Emma Goldman on sight. The natives took notice—for they have heard that Emma Goldman usually dared, and were anxious to see Greek meet Greek. I helped the ball along by issuing this gentle defy a week or two before Emma arrived: "Wappenstein, Chief of the Police Department of this city, has been quoted (I hope incorrectly) to the effect that if Emma Goldman will open her mouth here he will arrest her. This is wild talk. Miss Goldman has a perfect right to open her mouth at all times and places. The Chief of Police should be the last man to be guilty of such intemperate language. There may be some of us who have little respect for policemen in general, but I can assure Chief Wappenstein that it can not be increased by such behavior on his part." After this the Chief modified his plans and announced that he would arrest the speaker if she held open-air meetings, but as such meetings were not contemplated, his officiousness and impudence were entirely gratuitous. His back-down was sufficiently undignified to serve him as a lesson in all future attempts to suppress free speech.

Aside from the great success that attended the meetings there was one significant incident that deserves particular mention. The Socialists in this city are split in two factions, as a result of the "practical" methods that W. T. Mills, leader of one of the factions, favors for winning power as the representative of a "class-conscious proletariat." He is succeeding fairly well, to the angry disgust of the revolutionary (sic) wing. Were it not for the jealousy arising from this split it would have been next to impossible to get the Socialist Temple for the purpose of expounding Anarchist theories. We challenged Mr. Mills to debate with Miss Goldman, but as the latter could not stay long enough to meet Mr. Mills's convenience, the debate was given up and Mr. Mills contended himself by criticizing the lecture on "Direct Action versus Political Action." OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

The confidence of the people in governmental justice is not very strong in these United States. The whole country, from Maine to California, is evidencing its surprise at the acquittal of William Haywood on the charge of killing Governor Steunenberg.

This general surprise can be explained only by the fact that the people at large are convinced that the will of the money powers is the highest law of the land, and that truth and right are the mere handmaids of that will. That is the sentiment of a great portion of the people—a sentiment perfectly justified and not very far from the Anarchistic conception of the State and its mission.

The acquittal of Haywood is by no means a rehabilitation of governmental justice; it can only be explained in the following manner:

The conduct of the trial by the prosecution was a dismal failure from the beginning. The methods employed to manufacture evidence were worthy of the worst possible police and juristic ruffianism—the Pinkertons, the Borahs and Hawleys did not seem to credit the jury with much common sense; they evidently thought that the most barefaced inventions were good enough testimony for a jury of farmers. The State and the Pinkertons had the audacity of employing as their chief witness a man—Orchard—whose total depravity was apparent to everyone familiar with the circumstances of the case. The prosecution built its hopes of victory upon that very depravity. The impossible was expected from the jury.

The progress of the trial served to make this one thing clear: the Western miners and their organization knew exactly where they stood and what they wanted. For years they had battled aginst the conspiracy of law and capital; they had fought as men conscious of their purposes and aims, even to the extent of realizing that explosives had not been invented for the special benefit of arrogant mine owners. They fully understood that they could not rely upon the law and the machinery of politics —these were the tools of exploiters employed to stifle the rights of labor as, for instance, in the case of the eight-hour law. The oppressed workers could not find relief anywhere, whether in the Capitols of Colorado and Idaho, nor at Washington.

The Western miners soon realized that they enjoyed such rights only as their own power could guarantee them. They learned the value of solidarity and direct action; their battles were the school that cured them of their respect for law and government.

Those who have carefully followed the trial could not but realize that they behold the vigorous birth of a new world—a world with a healthy new social philosophy, freed from the fetters of plutocratic traditions. Whether considered right or wrong, lawful or lawless—the proletariat stood there, in the full consciousness of its strength and purpose, determined to assert its right of existence and to defend it, if need be, by force of arms.

Neither friend nor foe could fail to appreciate the situation. The acquittal of Haywood was probably the result of the mixed feeling of respect and fear: it was not deemed advisable to drive those determined men to desperation by the conviction of their innocent fellow-workman.

The Idaho trial teaches the American proletariat a powerful lesson; namely, that it must depend only on its own initiative and strength, rather than on the State and its representatives.

Learning of the result of the Idaho trial, we wired the following messages:

Learning of Haywood's acquittal, the sovereign people breathed a sigh of relief: "The hangmen of the Republic were about to commit another crime in my name."

The Heavenly Father: "Wasn't that lucky! I was afraid I couldn't shake that fellow Orchard—would have had to reserve a special seat for him on my right."

Hearst Yellows: "And now, fellow-citizens of this glorious Republic, you surely realize who has achieved this great victory: it was Brisbane with his powerful editorials. Hearst took a determined stand for Haywood —after the verdict was announced."

The New York Times: "What is the use of trial by jury when labor organizations are not branded as criminal and its leaders sent to the gallows."

Conference of mine owners: "Trusts are a good thing, generally speaking; but they are not practicable in the detective business. Pinkerton has sold us a gold brick. There should be more competition in this trade."

Pinkerton Headquarters: "Here, McParland, take your wage and this dozen Bibles. Go down to the South Sea Islands and convert those heathens to Christianity. But if you don't succeed in this mission any better than with the conversion of Orchard, you need not call again."

The Social Democrats: "A wonderful opportunity to boom Haywood for our next President. Fine chance to make ourselves—ridiculous."

The President: "An idiotic jury! The guilt or innocence of an undesirable citizen should be left to me to decide."

A great detective show is scheduled to take place at Buffalo on the first of September—the unveiling of a McKinley statue.

The high officials of the State and Nation which will congregate there will hardly feel at ease with the spirit of Czolgosz hovering over them.

Such monuments are a barbaric reminiscence of the past, the shame of the present and—the ruins of the future.

In olden times there was a forest in which dwelled numerous wolves. They were continually invading the neighboring fields and carrying off the stock. Finally the sheep and cattle became exasperated and threatened the wolves with bodily harm, and also to cite them before the court of the lions.

The wolves, realizing their danger, decided to sacrifice one of their fellows who had happened to make himself obnoxious to them. Thus it happened that they carried the victim to the fields and delivered him to the vengeance of the sheep and cattle, who forthwith fell upon the luckless wolf, rejoicing that there were still to be had justice and a square deal in the forest.

Henceforth the wolves continued to steal and rob in renewed safety.

That is the story of Mayor Schmitz, of San Francisco.

Our freethinkers, pure and simple, enjoy the rare privilege of showing apparent signs of life, though actually dead.

One of them, in a series of articles in The Truthseeker, completely annihilates Max Stirner. The writer goes about it in a childishly simple way: he hurls Thomas Paine at Stirner, and lo, 'tis done! Stirner knows nothing and understands less, since he does not agree with Paine. That is quite "rational," but not rational enough.

A surer way to annihilate Stirner would be to prove that his teachings do not harmonize with the inscriptions on the pyramids or with the philosophic views of Egyptian mummies.

Lucifer, the champion of woman's emancipation from sex bondage, has been transformed into a magazine, called The American Journal of Eugenics. Among the articles contained in the August number are: "A Study in Social Psychology," by the Rev. Sidney Holmes; "The Question of Population," by C. Gonnard; "Relative Sex Morality," by James Armstrong; "The Song of Maternity," by Lillian Browne-Thayer, etc. The last issue contains sixty-four pages, an increase of sixteen pages over the July number. Our readers will be glad to learn that a new Anarchist publication has been started in Tokio, Japan. The publishers are three Chinese girls who have courageously freed themselves from the heavy shackles of Occidental tradition, prejudice and superstition. "The Tragedy of Woman's Emancipation" has been translated for the first issue of the new journal. Comrade Denjiro Kotoku writes us that there is a great awakening taking place among the intellectuals of Japan. A hearty welcome to this new champion of a better life!

SOCIAL CONDITIONS UNDER FREEDOM

By WM. HOLMES.

THAT human beings, when left to the freedom of their own devices, with plenty of elbow room, unrestricted opportunities to exploit nature, and secure in the possession of their own productions, will conduct themselves according to the law of equal freedom, is attested by numerous examples in modern as well as ancient society. And it was undoubtedly the recognition of this Anarchistic fact that impelled the distinguished American, Washington Irving, to put into the mouth of his quaint old Dutch historian, in "Knickerbocker's History of New York," these memorable words:

A LITERARY NUISANCE

By EMMA GOLDMAN.

IGNORANCE and arrogance on the part of a critic, and the literary "innocence" of the editor or publisher make a combination which can be fitly characterized as a literary nuisance.

Such is the article "Modern Germany—Mad?", by George Sylvester Viereck, published in the June issue of the Arena. Supposedly treating of modern German literature, the writer succeeds only in displaying his own ignorance and arrogance.

These two qualities were ever characteristic of the legitimate members of the Hohenzollern house. If it be true that the Viereks are the illegitimate offsprings of that house, it would seem to prove that illegitimacy does not always rectify the faults of legitimacy.

Of all ignoramuses the writing ignoramus is the most stupid. That is the fatality of the trade of writing. Since the literary style is one's innermost expression, a fool's writing necessarily betrays his emptiness.

Evidently Mr. Viereck did not consider that; else he would have left the pen alone: conceit would have saved him.

The modern literature of Germany is of nearly twenty years growth. Its most striking works have been written under the inspiration of the social revolutionary spirit of that period. They represent the high tide of the passionate aspirations and hopes for the regeneration of social and individual life along the lines of Socialism and Anarchism: social justice, economic freedom and the emancipation of woman from the fetters of home-slavery were its slogans.

The modern spirit found its strongest and most artistic expression in the dramas of Gerhart Hauptmann, as well as in the works of Max Halbe, Otto Erich Hartleben, and Frank Wedekind; Sudermann, however, identified himself with the stage rather than with life.

Whatever the valuation of the German modern literati —as compared with their predecessors—it is unquestionably true that they have enriched and deepened our soul-life. It was they who have voiced in a penetrating and unique manner the mute suffering of the underworld, the social aspirations which formed the undercurrent of accepted traditions.

These few and apparently irrelevant remarks are made merely to show that modern German literature is neither as "mad" nor as empty as the head of its critic, Mr. Viereck.

Let us now consider the Arena article in detail.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Viereck has named Marie Madeleine (pseudonym) as "the first and foremost" in the "literary madhouse" of modern Germany. It is because her subject matter is so closely allied to his own? And is she to be characterized as "indecent" by the psychopathic author of the "Haunted House"? While by no means the foremost of German moderns, one cannot read her "Eine Priesterin der Aphrodite" or "Und es verrauschen und verklingen Tage und Tage" without feeling that she has touched humanly vital chords. Her poetry is the cry of a soul that, in her own words, "hat niemals ihr Ziel gefunden"—if that is "indecent," what word in the English or even in the German vocabulary can fittingly characterize the following stanza of Mr. Viereck:

"To-night I feel the presence of the others,
"Your lovers were they and are now my brothers;
"And I have nothing that has not been theirs,
"No single bloom the tree of passion bears
"They have not plucked. Beloved, can it be?
"Is there no gift that you reserve for me—
"No loving kindness or no subtle sin,*
"No secret shrine that none has entered in,
"Whither no mocking memories pursue
"Love's wistful pilgrim?"

Mr. Viereck absolutely ignores the real representative poetesses of modern Germany, such as Helene Boehlau, Frieda von Buelow, Clara Viebig and Hedwig Lachmann. True, he speaks of Margarete Beutler as "the most gifted poetess," but of course he regards her—who is no less a personality than she is a poet—as "depraved," because "she declares in her autobiography that she is temperamentally incapable of entering into permanent marital relations." Mr. Viereck stupidly reads into that sentence the desire of the poetess to advertise herself by a recital of her private affairs. With the same criterion he judges that tender poetic soul—Peter Hille—who, Mr. Viereck informs us, had said that "as a Westphalian he was a shameless liar, godless and without conscience." Our critic believes that this "confession" was made "to attract attention at any price." 'Tis a pity that Peter Hille was so frank and outspoken. His lack of discretion in this regard was not compatible with good business methods. No wonder poor, sensitive Peter Hille died destitute and forsaken in his miserable garret.

Not the least bad break of Mr. Viereck is his reference to Gustav Wied as "the alleged German Mark Twain." In confidence we will inform our well-posted critic that the satirist Gustav Wied happens to be a Dane.

Mr. Viereck has dropped his pose of the decadent, blasé beyond good and evil. His ambition was to play the rôle of a miniature edition of Oscar Wilde. That, however, proved impractical in the land of Comstock. It seemed more advisable to masquerade as the indignant moralist and censor of "indecent" German poetesses.

The author of the Arena article is morally outraged by Frank Wedekind (not Franz, as he is erroneously called by Mr. Viereck) and Erich Mühsam. The fact that such "vulgar" and "nauseating" writers are tolerated in the leading magazines of Germany conclusively proves, according to our critic, the literary rottenness of Germany. How fortunate that Wedekind is not an American writer—he would be confiscated by our Puritans. Yet this "vulgar" Wedekind is the author of that beautiful "Frühlingserwachen," a work that should be read by every mother and teacher, portraying as it does in the most tender and artistic manner the sex awakening of the child and showing the terrible crimes committed by parents and teachers against their maturing children.

Equally "impossible" Mr. Viereck considers Erich Mühsam. The latter dares to openly avow himself an Anarchist! He would not be permitted to tread our shores, much less to contribute to our leading magazines, which would be outraged—like Mr. Viereck—by the exposé of our rotten social conditions, as depicted in

"Amanda." It is owing to the literary honesty of the Mühsams, however, and the courage of German leading periodicals who publish such exposés (so much regretted by Mr. Viereck) that the consciousness of the world is awakened to the realization of the enormity of our social crimes responsible for the things portrayed by Mühsam.

"Tell me what amuses you," our critic exclaims, "and I will tell you what you are." Mr. Viereck strenuously objects to the "obscenity" of the Simplicissimus jokes and carricatures. They are very harmful, he thinks, since they expose the rottenness of certain social circles. He probably prefers Puck and Judge. There is nothing "indecent" in them, to be sure. Indeed, their vacuity and lack of wit can favorably compare even with the Arena article.

Fortunately, Germany is not quite helpless against this damnable literature. The good Kaiser stands guard over the morals of his people. His would-be relative has this to say about it:

"And so, too, much in the actions of Kaiser Wilhelm that may strike us as uncalled-for interference in matters of art, is due to the desire of his healthy nature to place a check upon things unwholesome and unclean."

Kaiser Willie's "healthy nature" expresses itself in art and literature by patronizing impotence and mediocrity, while artists and writers of real merit are made to feel his most sovereign displeasure. The royal megalomaniac recognizes only such literary efforts which foster national stupidity and flatter the Hohenzollern régime. His influence is positively harmful, encouraging writers and artists who are ever ready to sacrifice their own mental sovereignty for a royal smile or a cheap order.

I apologize for having charged Mr. Viereck with lack of talent. His reference to the Kaiser proves his considerable ability as a career-hunter and schnorrer patriot.

ANENT THE AMSTERDAM CONFERENCE

La Questione Sociale, of Paterson, N. J., reprints an article of Peter Kropotkin, of the year 1896, dealing with the much discussed subject of the advisability of Anarchist congresses. We quote:

"The International must work in view of a double aim.

In its every-day work it will establish the union between the men of various trades in every city, in every district, in every nation, and internationally between all trades.

And in its congresses it will do its propaganda work widely, outside of the ranks of its organization. It will disseminate its ideas with full hands in the midst of the entire population—before all amongst those strata that still keep away from the revolutionary advance guard of labor.

In these congresses the workers—always the workers—of the different trades and different nationalities will learn to know each other. They will learn and deliberate the methods to bring their strikes to good results by national and international mutual aid. They will learn how to paralyze the beast of capitalism by the force of their international attack. They will learn to press the beast to the wall with their shoulders and make it surrender before the united forces of the workingmen.

They will study at the same time the best ways to produce and exchange their products. By means of this continuous mutual understanding, renewed every year by the international exchange of ideas, shall the new form of the organization of industries work itself out, which is destined some day to replace capitalist production and the mercantile exchange of products.

And at the same time the regional and international congresses will serve as powerful means of propaganda of Socialist ideas and for the working out of new ideas.

At each congress two or three important questions will be submitted for study, to be reported on at the following congress. These questions will be submitted for discussion, first amongst the groups of workers, then in the little regional and national congresses, and, finally, at the annual international congress.

People of good will are bound to prepare reports summing up the discussions of groups and regional bodies; and these reports will serve as basis for discussion at the following congress. Finally, published as reports, they will serve as arguments for discussions and for propaganda in the papers."

UNWELCOME PREY

By LILLIAN BROWNE-THAYER.

IT is a morning in early May. Spring is flinging out her intoxicating odors. The palpitating sunlight embraces the earth with passionate caresses. Nature, responsive, has burst into life in blade and leaf and flower. In the park geometric beds of tulips and crocusses and daffodils have sprung up in blotches of red and yellow and purple—mad, riotous colors in orderly array.

Across the boulevard the sunlight plays upon the red brick, ivy-patched walls of the Girls' High School. Through the open window comes the sound of a piano prelude; then the voice of the director is heard. There is a pause, and soon a chorus of fresh young voices floats out on the air. Passers-by slacken their gait to listen. The loungers in the park rouse themselves from their dozing as the words of an old anthem reach their ears:

"Sing Alleluia forth in duteous praise,
Ye citizens of heav'n, O sweetly raise,
An endless Alleluia."

The words are repeated over and over—"An endless, endless Alleluia." To an imaginative and romantic mind the old air would roll back the centuries to magnolia-bordered walks by cloistered walls—to vesper bells and a nuns' processional. But the loungers in the park are not imaginative, romantic natures. Idle workingmen on strike have neither the spirit nor the culture to indulge in such mental luxuries. The dreadful present is all-absorbing. And yet the music seems to soothe their tired, discontented souls—

This is sweet rest for weary ones brought back,
This is glad food and drink that ne'er shall lack,
An endless Alleluia."

One of the men turned on his face and smothered an exclamation. His companions, half asleep on the benches and grass, are too weary with life to be cynical. They are older men than he.

An open carriage rolls into the east entrance of the park from the boulevard. The face of the occupant is concealed by a white lace parasol. The coachman draws rein in the shade of one of the horse-chestnut trees that border the driveway. The woman closes her parasol and leans back against the cushions.

"Ye who have gained at length your palms in bliss,
Victorious one, your chant shall still be this,
An endless Alleluia."

She arranges a bracelet on her fat wrist and wipes the perspiration from her moist neck, carefully powdering her chin with a puff she conceals in her belt.

"While Thee, by whom were all things made, we praise
Forever, and tell forth in sweetest lays
An endless Alleluia.
Almighty Christ, to Thee our voices sing
Glory forevermore, to Thee we bring An endless Alleluia. Amen."

There is a stir and the big front door of the school swings back and the girls swarm out into the sunlight like bees from a hive. They separate in pairs and in BRIEF NEWS AND COMMENT.

Comrade Emma Goldman has gone to the International Anarchist convention to be held in Amsterdam commencing August 25. Good wishes to our gallant comrade.

One of our most active comrades has been expelled from the Socialist party in Trenton, N. J. He was asked by the committee of investigation to explain why he, being an Anarchist, had joined the Socialist party? To explain his action our comrade has written an interesting article which we will publish, beginning in next issue.

As soon as they learned of the result of the Haywood trial our comrades of Mother Earth sent the following telegram:

President Roosevelt, Oyster Bay, N. Y.: Undesirable citizens victorious. Rejoice.
EMMA GOLDMAN,
ALEXANDER BERKMAN,
HYPOLYTE HAVEL.

The comrades of Liberty Group of San Francisco have sent THE DEMONSTRATOR $5 to help it along. The new policy of the paper pleases them, and they have decided to help support it hereafter. If the various groups thruout the United States would do the same we would very soon be able to enlarge the paper and publish it weekly. We do not want to appear in the role of a beggar, but we wish to inform the comrades and friends that they could aid the growth and circulation of the paper by ordering a number of copies and distribute them in their neighborhood. The price we leave to you—pay just what you wish or can pay. You will also oblige us by sending the addresses of persons you believe would be interested in reading THE DEMONSTRATOR.

Our friends in France and Spain have started a campaign of agitation against the Cesar of Mexico. Louis Bonafous, one of the best of Spanish writers, with his sincere and energetic pen, has denounced the Mexican dictator, Portirio Diaz, in the largest paper of Spain—El Heraldo de Madrid. The bandits of the government of the dictator are alarmed, and are trying, with the aid of their hired press, to refute the charges of our European friends. But all the hireling journalists of the world will not be able to prevent light being shed on the political and economic situation of Mexico, and we hope that very soon all the honest and sincere people of the world will join us in our campaign against peonage—Mexican slavery—and highwaymen—the plutocrats of Mexico.

A correspondent in San Francisco informs us that the street-car strike in that city is still on without any sign of it going to end in favor of the strikers. Patrick Calhoun, the president of the United Street Railroad Company, with his gang of Bowery ruffians, better known under the name of Farleyites, is mighty and will do most anything to accomplish his end. When San Francisco was invaded by the army of strikebreakers and pocket and throatcutters all the honest inhabitants of the metropolis of the Pacific were prepared to make a general cleaning out of those "desirable citizens", but the strikers were there to see that no offense was committed against law and order, and some of them went so far as to say that the Farleyites were right in acting as strikebreakers, for they were not union men. The leaders of the strike publicly declared that they were willing to help the police to protect the strikebreakers. We were a witness to the following: A car was abandoned by the Farleyites in the middle of the block. The strikers took it in charge, and, with all the abasement of a valet, they ran the car to the barn. With such workers we have very little sympathy. The strike will be ended when Calhoun, in his proudness, which is justified by the cowardice of the workers, wills it should end.

LIFE.

Life is a mystery. As we sow we reap;
And as we're born we sow.
From whence we came or whither we shall drift,
We do not know.

This we may know, if anything is known,
That we exist;
That he who tries not, often wins the prize.
That he who tried, has missed.

But what we are, or why we are at all,
We can but guess.
And no one knows if we shall yet be more,
Or yet be less.

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

Samuel Gompers, writing in the American Federationist, regrets the growing custom among workingmen of spending Labor Day at picnics and in general jollification. He calls upon the unions to devote the day to demonstrations, reminding them of the "serious meaning of the holiday." Gompers should know, however, that Labor Day lost its serious meaning when it became legalized. The day chosen by workingmen to express their hopes and aspirations was emasculated by receiving plutocratic sanction. And it is Gompers and consorts, preaching the lie of "identical interests of employer and employee," that are responsible for this.

Workingmen of revolutionary spirit know that the first of May—not the capitalistically legalized holiday—is the true Labor Day. They know that labor demonstrations can have but one rational object: to unify labor and to remind the exploiters of the power of labor. But when the spirit of solidarity and co-operation and, above all, of conscious class interests is lacking, such demonstrations are a hollow mockery.

The mollycoddle attitude of Gompers's organization, the Central Federated Union, in regard to the recent ukase of Commissioner Bingham, is disgraceful and disgusting. "Red flags prohibited," read the police order. Upon inquiry from the C. F. U., the Commissioner kindly explained that the new order was due to the dis-

all professions and trades, even supplanting him entirely in some of them. The direct result is the lowering of the economic standard and the increase in the number of the unemployed. Considerations of national well-being do not trouble the beast of capitalism: the health of our future mothers is a matter of no consequence in the eternal dance around the golden calf. And it goes without saying that our legislatures and Congress are in perfect accord with the plutocracy, even to the extent of declaring unconstitutional the law against women working overtime. Naturally, the "liberty" of the exploiter to convert women's blood and bodies into profits must not be interfered with.

The crowning shame of the typically American brand of civilization is the employment of children of tender age in mines, factories and sweatshops. Recent investigations have disclosed a terrible condition: children of the age of five and six years are regularly employed in workshops, toiling long hours under the most unsanitary and vile surroundings, their wages being merely nominal. These terrible conditions have at last aroused public sentiment, resulting in a great anti-child-labor movement which could probably accomplish some effective reform, but for the deplorable near-sighted policy which has selected the crooked path of politics for its activities.

OUR AMSTERDAM LETTER

Comrades:—I am writing in great haste, in order that my letter may reach Mother Earth before the September issue goes to press.

The International Anarchist Congress—the first ever held without molestation from the authorities—opened with a large meeting Sunday afternoon, August 25th. The gathering was addressed by the following speakers: Dr. Friedeberg, in German; Enrico Malatesta, in Italian; R. de Marmande, in French; P. Ramus, in German; Rogdaeff, in Russian; Christian Cornelissen, in Dutch; and myself, in English.

To-day, August 26th, after wasting considerable time in unnecessary preliminaries, began the reading of the various reports on the present condition of the Anarchist movement in Germany, France, Belgium, Holland, Bohemia, Switzerland, Italy, Servia, Russia and the United States. As all the reports will no doubt be published, I shall merely say for the present that we have learned many interesting features of our movement, which I will discuss in the next issue of Mother Earth.

There are in all ninety delegates, representing Germany, France, Belgium, Bohemia, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Servia, Russia, England and the United States.

It is very significant that an Anarchist Congress can take place without governmental interference—in fact, without a single policeman at the hall entrance—in a monarchical country. Such a thing were impossible in "free" America. European delegates would find the gates of Columbia closed to them. O for the glory of our free country!

THE McKINLEY MONUMENT

BUFFALO now has a McKinley statue. The unveiling has been characterized as a "national event," participated in by "the whole Nation," which has not yet recovered from the alleged great loss it had sustained through the shot of Czolgosz.

Our Republic has grown very unrepublican. The country our forefathers had in mind was to be the land of a free people, enjoying equality. To-day we are ruled by Cæsars and Crœsuses who have long since abolished the simple republican virtues. Of the old Republic nothing remains but the name; its essence is a plutocracy.

And the people? They are exploited and oppressed—in the name of the people. Their bondage is skilfully veiled by an appearance of independence and liberty. Modern governmental policy consists in hypnotizing the enslaved masses into the belief that they are sovereigns.

all professions and trades, even supplanting him entirely in some of them. The direct result is the lowering of the economic standard and the increase in the number of the unemployed. Considerations of national well-being do not trouble the beast of capitalism: the health of our future mothers is a matter of no consequence in the eternal dance around the golden calf. And it goes without saying that our legislatures and Congress are in perfect accord with the plutocracy, even to the extent of declaring unconstitutional the law against women working overtime. Naturally, the "liberty" of the exploiter to convert women's blood and bodies into profits must not be interfered with.

The crowning shame of the typically American brand of civilization is the employment of children of tender age in mines, factories and sweatshops. Recent investigations have disclosed a terrible condition: children of the age of five and six years are regularly employed in workshops, toiling long hours under the most unsanitary and vile surroundings, their wages being merely nominal. These terrible conditions have at last aroused public sentiment, resulting in a great anti-child-labor movement which could probably accomplish some effective reform, but for the deplorable near-sighted policy which has selected the crooked path of politics for its activities.

OUR AMSTERDAM LETTER

Comrades:—I am writing in great haste, in order that my letter may reach Mother Earth before the September issue goes to press.

The International Anarchist Congress—the first ever held without molestation from the authorities—opened with a large meeting Sunday afternoon, August 25th. The gathering was addressed by the following speakers: Dr. Friedeberg, in German; Enrico Malatesta, in Italian; R. de Marmande, in French; P. Ramus, in German; Rogdaeff, in Russian; Christian Cornelissen, in Dutch; and myself, in English.

To-day, August 26th, after wasting considerable time in unnecessary preliminaries, began the reading of the various reports on the present condition of the Anarchist movement in Germany, France, Belgium, Holland, Bohemia, Switzerland, Italy, Servia, Russia and the United States. As all the reports will no doubt be published, I shall merely say for the present that we have learned many interesting features of our movement, which I will discuss in the next issue of Mother Earth.

There are in all ninety delegates, representing Germany, France, Belgium, Bohemia, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Servia, Russia, England and the United States.

It is very significant that an Anarchist Congress can take place without governmental interference—in fact, without a single policeman at the hall entrance—in a monarchical country. Such a thing were impossible in "free" America. European delegates would find the gates of Columbia closed to them. O for the glory of our free country!

TO OUR COMRADES

Friends:—We are living at a time of great social unrest. The simple democracy of former days has been changed by capitalism into a despotic imperialism. The people feel their bondage growing daily more unendurable, but fail as yet to understand the cause or the cure.

Social quacks and professional politicians are busy exploiting popular dissatisfaction for their personal aggrandizement; they seek to pacify the people by palliatives, in order to continue safely riding on their backs.

Dissatisfaction with existing conditions is finding its strongest expression among the working class. The man of toil begins to understand that there is no hope for a radical change under the capitalist régime. He is gradually realizing that the methods heretofore employed by labor are ineffectual and not designed to improve his economic position. He is embittered by the regularity of his defeats. He is fast losing confidence in his so-called leaders, in whom he is beginning to see the friends of labor's enemies.

Comrades! Let us not fail to properly appreciate this crucial period in the history of American labor, and let us prove our appreciation actively. We have an all-important work before us. It is for us, as Anarchists, to point out to the workingman the real cause of his dissatisfaction, misery and oppression; to impress upon him the inefficiency of trades unionism, pure and simple; to convince him of the dangerous uselessness of parliamentary methods. We must discover to him his natural weapons and the powerful means at hand to make himself free; we must point out to him the methods so successfully being used by his European brothers: the revolutionary tactics whose final destiny it is to free labor from all exploitation and oppression, and usher in a free society; the modern, efficient weapons of direct action and general strike.

The best medium for introducing these battle methods to the workingman is a weekly revolutionary paper. Our magazine, Mother Earth, is doing excellent work. But it is a monthly, and, as such, it must deal with the various manifestations of our social life; it cannot devote itself exclusively to one particular phase. The projected weekly, however, is to deal entirely with labor, its battles, hopes and aspirations.

To Mother Earth, whose work is theoretical, literary and educational, must be added a practical weekly, a fighting champion of revolutionary labor.

We must carry our ideas to the men that toil.

Therefore we appeal to you, comrades. If you have the cause of Anarchism seriously at heart; if you want the workingmen to learn our ideas; if you realize how all-important is the propaganda of direct action and the general strike, then come to our aid by financing the project of a weekly revolutionary paper.

Comrades! It is for you to decide whether we, as Anarchists, should take our stand in the midst of throbbing life or remain on the philosophic by-ways.

P. S.—The comrades are urgently requested to act without delay. For obvious reasons it were desirable to begin the publication of the weekly paper on the 11th of November. All communications and contributions for this purpose should be addressed to Alexander Berkman, Box 47, Station D, New York.

Ein Appell.

An die Genossen.

Freunde!

Wir sind die Zeugen einer gewaltigen Gährung im ganzen Lande. Die Umwandlung der Republik in eine Plutokratie, wie sie die Welt bis jetzt nie gesehen, erregt alle Schichten der Bevölkerung. Das Volk sieht und fühlt, dass es von Tag zu Tag immer mehr versklavt wird, kennt aber weder die wahren Ursachen dieser Sklaverei, noch die Mittel zur Aufhebung derselben.

Politische Quacksalber aller Schattirungen trachten, das Volk durch Palliativmittelchen zu beschwichtigen, um ihr Schmarotzerdasein im Solde des Kapitals weiter fristen zu können.

Der Geist der Unzufriedenheit mit den bestehenden Verhältnissen tritt am schärfsten in den Reihen des arbeitenden Volkes hervor. Der Arbeiter fängt an zu begreifen, dass alle seine Bestrebungen, in der heutigen kapitalistischen Gesellschaftsordnung ein menschenwürdiges Dasein sich zu verschaffen, vergeblich sind. Er kommt auch zu der Erkenntniss, dass seine bisherige Kampfesweise nicht nur irreführend, sondern auch ziel- und zwecklos war. Die ergebnisslosen Kämpfe erbittern ihn und die Rebellion gegen das mit den Kapitalisten fraternisirende Führerthum ist im steten Wachsen begriffen.

Wie die bürgerlichen Politiker die Unzufriedenheit des Volkes durch Scheinreformen einzudämmen und für ihre selbstsüchtigen Zwecke auszubeuten versuchen, so treten die parlamentarischen Scheinsozialisten an den Arbeiter heran und suchen ihn für ihre Stimmkastenpolitik zu gewinnen. Sie wollen das Proletariat vom Regen unter die Traufe bringen. An Stelle der ziellosen pure and simple Politik der gewerkschaftlichen Führer soll der weit ziellosere Kompf am Stimmkasten treten.

In dieser Zeit ausserordentlicher Erregung haben wir Anarchisten eine grosse Aufgabe zu erfüllen. Es gilt, dem arbeitenden Volke die Ursachen seiner Versklavung klarzulegen, ihm das Ideal einer freien Gesellschaft fassbar zu machen und ihm die revolutionären Mittel und Wege zu seiner Befreiung vom Joche des Kapitalismus an die Hand zu geben. Der amerikanische Proletarier muss mit der direkten Kampfesweise, wie sie seitens der fortgeschrittenen Arbeiterschaft Europa's bereits geführt wird, bekannt gemacht werden.

Um diese Aufgabe erfüllen zu können, haben wir in erster Linie ein englisches revolutionäres Wochenblatt nöthig. Unsere englische Monatsschrift „Mother Earth" erfüllt ihre Aufgabe zwar in vorzüglicher Weise; aber eine Monatsschrift muss sich mit allen Phasen des sozialen Lebens befassen und kann sich deshalb nicht einer speziellen Aufgabe widmen. Anders ein Wochenblatt, das sich ausschliesslich mit den Kämpfen, Idealen und Hoffnungen der Arbeiter beschäftigen würde. Der literarisch und theoretisch aufklärend wirkenden Monatsschrift muss ein wöchentliches Kampfblatt vorangehen, in dem die Taktik der direkten Aktion und des Generalstreiks propagirt und alle Phasen des gewerkschaftlichen Kampfes voll und ganz gewürdigt werden. Unsere Ideen müssen in die Reihen der Arbeiter eindringen.

Genossen! Dessentwegen ist dieser Appell an Euch gerichtet. Seid Ihr damit einverstanden, dass der anarchistischen Bewegung ein englisches wöchentliches Kampforgan ersteht, dann leistet uns finanzielle Beihilfe zur Herausgabe dieses Blattes. Es gilt zu entscheiden, ob wir in der Mitte des pulsirenden Lebens oder abseits, gleichsam auf dem philosophischen Seitenwege, stehen sollen.

Mit solidarischem Grussel

P. S. — Aus begreiflichen Gründen wäre es angebracht, mit der Herausgabe des Blattes am 11. November zu beginnen. Die Genossen sind ersucht, so bald wie möglich in Aktion zu treten. Alle Beiträge und Zuschriften bitte an Alexander Berkman, Box 47, Station D, New York City, zu richten.

Die deutschen Sozialdemokraten und der internationale Krieg.

Von Robert Michels.

Die sozialdemokratischen Führer und Deputirten August Bebel und Gustav Noske haben kürzlich wieder einmal im Reichstag die öffentliche Erklarung abgegeben, ihre Partei würde in jedem Angriffskrieg das Vaterland mit Einsetzung aller Kräfte vertheidigen. Auch in der sozialdemokratischen Presse, auf sozialdemokratischen Kongressen spukt die dieser Erklärung zu Grunde liegende formalistische Unterscheidung von Angriffs- und Vertheidigungskrieg herum.

Die deutschen Sozialdemokraten glauben also, entscheiden zu können, in welche Kategorie im einzelnen Falle ein ausbrechender Krieg hineingehört. Je nachdem dann ihre Stellungnahme. Entweder freudiges Einsetzen aller Muskeln für das „Vaterland", oder . . . .

Nur schade, dass ein Haken in dieser bequemen Fassung des Problems ist und dass dieser Haken in der Logik der Thatsachen liegt.

Es ist in der That ein Unding, im Moment der Gefahr und der hochgespannten Erregung erkennen zu wollen, wen von den beiden kontrahirenden Staaten die „Schuld" trifft, ja, selbst entscheiden zu wollen, in welchem von den beiden der wirkliche „Angreifer" zu erblicken ist.

Zunächst: wer entscheidet daruber, wer im gegebenen Falle — sagen wir in einem zwischen Deutschland und England oder Frankreich ausbrechenden Kriege — der schuldige Theil ist? Die Reichsabgeordneten Bebel und Noske? Oder die opportunistische Redaktion des von den Radikalen eroberten Vorwärts? Oder etwa eine — natürlich geheim zu haltende — Zusammenkunft von Parteivorstand und Generalkommission? Oder beruft man — telegraphisch —, etwa am dritten Mobilmachungstag? — einen ausserordentlichen Parteitag ein, dessen Majoritätsbeschluss bindende Kraft besässe? Und weiter: Würde er in Landwehruniform tagen? Und von den parteipolitisch organisirten Reservisten aller Gaue Deutschland's beschickt werden? Und welche geheimen Aktenstücke würde er in Händen haben, auf Grund derer er seinen Entscheid fällen könnte? Und endlich und nicht zum letzten: über welche Exekutivgewalt würde er verfügen, gesetzt den Fall, dass die Organe des Staates diesen tragikomischen Kongress überhaupt gewähren lassen würden? Unterdessen ständen dann die drei Millionen sozialdemokratischer Soldaten und Unteroffiziere natürlich schon längst vor Paris und würden kaum Lust dazu verspüren, sich um ein etwaiges Urtheil, dass die deutsche Regierung Frankreich gegenüber im Unrecht wäre, auch nur im geringsten zu kümmern. Jede derartige Entscheidung wäre also ein Schlag in's Wasser!

Aber noch wichtiger als die Frage nach der Ausführbarkeit eines sozialdemokratischen Entscheides in der Kriegsfrage ist die nach seinem Zustandekommen. Daran, die Fürsten und Diplomaten der interessirten Staaten vor ein sozialdemokratisches Tribunal zu berufen und sie einem hochnothpeinlichen Kreuzverhör zu unterwerfen, wird doch wohl Niemand von den Angriffs- und Vertheidigungs-Theoretikern im Ernste denken. Wie liegen überhaupt die Dinge im Kriegsfall?

Jede Regierung besitzt alle Machtmittel, deren sie bedarf, um den wahren Sachverhalt der Auseinandersetzungen zwischen zwei Diplomaten, die zum Kriege führten, den Augen der Kontrolle zu entziehen, zur ausschliesslichen Verfügung. Jede Regierung wird in letzter Stunde, wenn sie den Telegraph allein in der Hand hat und keinerlei Widerlegung von irgend einer Seite her mehr zu befürchten braucht, den Zwischenfällen diejenigen Versionen geben, die ihr am tauglichsten scheinen, um in den Augen ihrer Unterthanen als gerecht, als frivol in den Krieg hineingedrängt dazustehen. Vor und bei dem Ausbruch jedes Krieges ist die ganze bürgerliche Presse beider interessirten Länder eifrig bemüht, den Gegner als den alleinigen Störenfried, den leidigen Krakehlsucher, den heimtückischen Einbrecher darzustellen, den es gilt, mit der Hilfe Aller von Haus und Hof fernzuhalten. Die Völker sind jener Presse auf Gnade und Ungnade ergeben, einschliesslich der der gewohnten Pressfreiheit ganz oder zum grösseren Theil beraubten Sozialisten, auch wenn sie anmasslich genug sind, das wissen zu wollen, was in fast allen Fällen historisches Geheimniss bleibt, nämlich wer „Unrecht" hat.

Der Krieg von 1870—71 zeigt uns klar, wie die Mittagssonne, wie innerlich unmöglich jedes moralische Richteramt über die Schuld der Völker und Regierungen ist. Noch heute, fast vierzig Jahre nach dem Kriegsausbruch, ist die Schuldfrage des deutsch-französischen Krieges eine der kompliziertesten, ja verworrensten Probleme unserer neueren Geschichtsforschung. Noch heute sind in Deutschland nicht nur der gebildete und der ungebildete Plebs, sondern mit einer in der deutschen Wissenschaft sonst seltenen Einmuthigkeit selbst die Fachkreise darüber einig, dass dieser Krieg fast ausschliesslich ein Werk der Provokation Frankreich's war, während umgekehrt in Frankreich alle Welt, vom Krämer bis zum Hochschulprofessor, ebenso einig in der Annahme ist, dass der Krieg einzig auf das Konto der Anmassung Preussens zu setzen war: Hier die kränkende Anrempelung des greisen Heldenkönigs durch Benedetti in Ems, dort die kränkende Fälschung der Emser Depesche und die Bekanntgabe der Unredaktion durch Bismarck. Die Historiker der nicht direkt betheiligten Völker aber stehen theils auf deutscher, theils auf französischer Seite, je nachdem sie aus deutscher oder aus französischer Quelle schöpften, je nachdem ihre Sympathien mehr nach deutscher oder nach französischer Seite hinneigen.

Und die „historische Wahrheit?" wird man mich fragen. Die „historische Wahrheit" wird manchmal von den geschichtsbeflissenen Pfadfindern aufgefunden, wenn es den personis dramatis gefallen hat, nachdem sie die Augen geschlossen, ihre Memoiren veröffentlichen zu lassen, sowie wenn es den Regierungen einfällt, ihre Archive der staunenden Nachwelt zu öffnen. Später, später. Selbst die demokratische gallische Republik lässt sich nur in die bis zur französischen Revolution geschriebenen Staatspapiere hineingucken und verschliesst den Rest, wenigstens in sehr wichtigen Fällen, allen forschenden Augen. In der Mehrzahl der Fälle wird die „historische Wahrheit" nie gefunden.

ANARCHIA

(A proposito del Congresso di Amsterdam)

E' parola che torna ostica a molta gente la quale non sa comprenderla che come sinonimo di malvagità, di disordine e di caos, come non sa ritenere gli anarchici che quali malfattori facinorosi sempre in agguato per accoppare un ricco e ripartirsene le spoglie.

Pei suoi adepti ha ben diverso significato, essa è dottrina sociale che intende realizzare l'ordine nell'assenza di ogni governo, di ogni sfruttamento dell'uomo: non significa quindi che completa libertà individuale.

Le ragioni per cui alla parola anarchia si è dato fin qui significato di illimitato disordine sono ovvie, essendosi fin qui inculcato agli uomini che essi devono essere governati, che sono governati saggiamente, che il governo è una necessità di cui non si può assolutamente far a meno.

Nei secoli scorsi ogni temerario che osasse affermare poter l'umanità proseguire, senza la protezione d'un autorità terrena e spirituale, il suo cammino, era considerato come un pazzo e la sua temeraria pazzia scontava al manicomio o sul rogo: oggi si contano a milioni gli empii, uomini e donne, che all'idea di un ente soprannaturale sorridono increduli.

Con tutto questo i liberi pensatori di oggi continuano nella loro maggior parte a credere nella necessità di uno Stato che protegga i cittadini, senza ricordare, senza riflettere che il governo non è esistito, non esisterà mai che coll'oppressione e per l'oppressione; che all'autorità si debbono imputare i più scellerati delitti che abbiano mai funestato la società umana; che se l'autorità evolvendosi progressivamente fu dispotismo, oligarchia, democrazia, non cessò però mai d'essere coercizione ed oppressione.

La falange dei buoni che riconoscono il malessere presente e vogliono rimediarvi ed all'uopo questo proposito votano intelligenza e volontà, s'è di molto accresciuta, ma essa non sa ancora emanciparsi dai pregiudizii, dalle superstizioni di che l'inquinarono secoli e secoli di barbarie, non sa ancora vedere con chiarezza che cosa realmente si nasconda sotto l'istituzione che essa chiama governo.

— Come potremo vivere senza governo? si chiedono gli uni; se il nostro governo non è buono cerchiamo di cambiarlo, di sostituirglieue uno migliore, ma prescindere da esso, pretendero farne a mono ci pare assurdo.

Il male è questo: che un huon governo è un'illusione; la sua esistenza è fondata sulla tirannia di una classe sopra l'altra.

— Ma gli nomini debbono essere pur governati! si osserva, essi vogliono esser guidati dalle leggi! — Può anche essere: ma ammesso pure cho gli uomini sieno bambini i qnali debbano essere ad ogni modo guidati, chi sarà sufficientemente perfetto, sufficientemente savio, sufficientemonte puro da governare e guidare i suoi compagni?

Noi sosteniamo che gli uomiui debbono governarsi individualmonte da sè e se per questo essi non sono maturi, ancor meno maturi lo sono por governare gli altri. E' dnnque possibile che un solo nomo, che pochi uomini possano guidare i milioni di ciechi di cui si costituisce una nazione?

— Nou possiamo tuttavia far a meno di qualcho autorità, osserva qualche ostinato e con ragione. Ma noi questa autorità l'abbiamo pure; l'abbiamo nel potere irresistibile delle leggi naturali, che si manifesta nel mondo sociale come nel mondo fisico.

Che noi comprendiamo o meno queste leggi, noi dobbiamo subirle perchè in esse si integra la nostra esistenza, ne siamo gli schiavi assoluti senza che tnttavia la schiavitù sia nmiliante nè consacrata dai codici.

La schiavitù invece così come oggi esiste tollera nn padrone estorno, nn legislatore, straniero a coloro che gli obbediscono, mentre le leggi naturali non sonn fnori di noi, sono in noi stessi e soltanto in confermità di queste leggi viviamo, respiriamo, ci muoviamo; non sono nemiche nostre, sone nostre benefattrici.

Le leggi stabilite dall'uomo e raccolte nei codici sono in conformità ed in corrispondenza colle leggi naturali? Nessnno oserebbe affermarlo. Ed è appunto perchè le leggi umane non sone confermi alle leggi naturali che l'umanità geme piagata da tutti i delori. E' assurdo parlare di benessere umano finchè non avremo realizzata la libertà.

Non meravigliamoci dunque che l'anarchia ed i suoi apostoli raccolgauo tanta messe di maledizioni e di persecnzioni feroci: essa è dottrina che urta troppo violentemente le regole generalmente convenute: l'attiva, ardente energia dei suoi propagandisti deve necessariamente ferire un soverchio numero di coscienze.

Al povero si predicano la rassegnazione e la pazienza a riscatto di gioie ultra terrene: ma che cosa devo importare al povero, al paria miserabile, nudo, mendicante per tntta la vita un boccon di pane, se le porte del paradiso si spalancheranno più largamente... dopo morte, meglio a lui che non al ricco?

Sono promesse che in cospetto dell'ineffabile miseria della moltitndine hanno carattere di amare, atroci ironie.

Ho trovato pochi nomini, pochissime donne, intelligenti, che osino difendere l'onore e la coscienza dei governi esistenti: tutti crano con me, ed in più d'nn pnnto, d'accordo; ma nel momento decisivo dell'azione mancava loro il coraggio morale di affermare francamente, apertamente, la loro simpatia, la loro solidarietà coi rivoluzionari dell'anarchismo.

Noi che abbiamo scelto la nostra via, la via segnataci dalle nostre convinzioni in nome dei principii della scienza e delle leggi naturali, combattiamo con ogni forza nostra l'organizzazione che si chiama Stato, proclamando per tutti nn egual diritto alla produzione ed alle gioie della vita.

Rotti i vincoli d'un'antorità straniera, nelle libere associazioni sorte spontanee a consacrare l'indipendenza e l'autonomia dell'individuo, ognuno recherà al benessere comune ed al proprio il suo contributo, lavorando secondo le sue forze, consumando a seconda dei snoi bisogni. Le scoperte della scienza, le applicazioni sempre crescenti sempre più umane, delle invenzioni tecniche all'industria renderanno il lavoro facile e gradito: la scienza, l'istruzione, l'arte, accessibili ad ogni mente, perfezioneranno, nobiliteranno la razza e la donna sarà, allora, l'nguale dell'uomo.

Bel sogno! bel sogno certo, se gli uomini fossero angeli e non egoisti: replica un ultimo contradditore.

Angioli? ma l'egoismo non è un delitto nè nu ostacolo; lo è soltanto, per meglio dire, laddove le condizioni d'ambionto permettono ad un individno di soddisfare al proprio egoismo a detrimento di quello dei suoi simili

In una società anarchica ciascnno cercherà naturalmente di soddisfare alle esigenze del proprio io, ma come nella natnra sopravvivono soltanto le specie, i cni individui facciano del mutno appoggio la base del loro sviluppo, così nella società l'uomo per assicnrare al proprin io le soddisfazioni agognate stenderà amica la mano a tutti coloro che solidali gli stenderanno fraternamento la propria, e germoglierà dall'egoismo invitta, invincibile la fratellanza.

Questo il nostro ideale.

Un pugnale nella destra, una fiaccola nella sinistra, tra il fumo e le schiante delle esplosioni dinamitarde dipingono i nemici del nostro ideale l'anarchico, l'anarchico pazzoide e delinquente, fanatico del cataclisma universale, pronto a raggiungerlo assassinando il primo che passa. Ma è qnesta nna sconcia caricatnra convenzionale, agitata ostinatamente dinnanzi ad un pubblico sempre disposto ad accettare, per poltroneria intellettuale e morale, anche le scempiaggini più fantastiche.

Noi, anarchici, pensiamo che l'anarchìa cioè la libertà individuale non si conquisterà senza vinlenza, come senza violenza non avrebbe potnto la libertà greca difendersi alle Termopili ed a Maratona.

Le plebi reclamano sempre più energicamente, sempre più apertamente la libertà e le condizioni ad attingerla si fanno giorno per giorno più favoreveli.

E' evidente che attraverso la storia nn'evoluzione si elabora, a cui schiavitù e violenza di ogni forma dovranno cedere il passo, e da qnella rivoluzione zampillerà piena, intera, insommergibile la libertà, la libertà per tutti, la libertà per ciascuno.

L'anarchismo non è dnnquo, come insinuano i microcefali dell'ordine costitnito e... di quello costitnendo, nn movimento retrogrado, ma movimento rivoluzionario-fecondo d'avanguardia. Gli anarchici ricordano alle masse lavoratrici una imperiosa necessità che esse non debbono dimenticare mai: la lotta gigantesca da cui devo essere fatalmente preceduta la realizzazione delle nostre idee; mentre d'altro canto la soluzione rivoluzionaria affrettano con tutti i mezzi che sono a loro disposizione: la parola, la stampa, l'azione.

Conchiudendo: il benessere dell'nmanità non è possibile senza communismo e senza anarchia, senza uguaglianza nei rapporti economici, senza libertà nel diritto. Il sistema comunista escludendo ogni rapporto da padrone a servo significa già in sè anarchismo: certo è che a raggiungere meta così alta la rivoluzione sociale è fatalità ineluttabile.

Quanto alla violenza che devrebbe secondo i benpensanti essere caratteristica dell'anarchismo noi non la ripudiamo, nou la ripudieremo mai: confessiamo soltanto che non arriviamo a comprendere come possa condannarsi in un individno e glorificarsi in nn popolo, quando entrambi vi fanno ricorso per conquistare o difendere la libertà.

Questo solo in conclusione è vero: che tutti gli oppressori hanno condannato sempre la ribellione degli oppressi; le colonie greche indocili provocano le ire della Persia, le forche caudine schiaffeggiano la maestà di Roma onnipotente, e Bunkershill è per l'Inghilterra vaticinio di sciagura.

Può l'anarchia realizzarsi senza ricorrere alla forza, che reggo e governa al mondo egni cosa?

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

A great many intelligent people—and some fools—are forever mouthing such empty platitudes as, "America is a free country," "Every man who is willing to work can find a job," and many other equally bright and original sayings.

These inanities are repeated so persistently, that occasionally—when we are suffering from an attack of biliousness or are sore at the world in general because some conductor has palmed off a lead nickel on us—we are almost inclined to believe them; always provided, of course, that our own stipend is reasonable and regular.

At this point it usually happens that some good, kind government official comes along and mercilessly robs us of an argument that has been a source of satisfaction and of a conscious feeling of superiority over our less fortunate fellow-men. The latest State Bureau of Labor report reads:

"Conditions of employment in the first six months of this year have not been so favorable as in the record year of 1906, but they surpassed those of 1905, which was the next best year. Returns to the State Bureau of Labor Statistics from associations of working people, with a membership of more than 93,000 wage earners in eighty-five different trades and occupations, show that the average monthly number of idle workmen was 147 per 1,000 in the first half of 1907, as compared with 151 in the corresponding period of 1905, 104 in 1906, and an average of 164 for the last five years. At the end of June the number idle was 7,809 (81 per 1,000), of whom 1,200 were not working on account of illness, accident or other disability, 700 on account of labor disputes, and the remaining 5,900 on account of lack of employment or other non-personal causes.

"Building operations, which were retarded by the severity of the winter, are now unusually active in all the large cities. In New York the number of buildings begun and the number completed in the second quarter of the present year exceeded the record of last year, and the estimated cost of projected buildings fell but little short of the 1906 record, the decline in the erection of houses in Manhattan and The Bronx having been almost counter-balanced by an increase in office buildings, etc. In both Rochester and Syracuse new records in the building department were attained, and in Buffalo there was a large increase over the average of recent years, althougb the total was somewhat below the figures for the corresponding months of last year.

"At the end of June conditions of employment in nearly all trades were much above the average. While there were, as a rule, more unemployed workers in the various industries than in the same month last year, there were fewer than in 1905, the next best year of the decade, in all but three of the groups in which all trades are classified. In New York City, in which reside two-thirds of the wage earners herein included, the conditions of employment at the end of June were more favorable than in any of the last five years, with the exception of 1906."

Stripped to the bone, the above figures mean that 164 out of every 1,000 workingmen have been idle during the last five years,—a period probably unprecedented for its prosperity in the last fifty years. We will be told, no doubt, that a certain number of lazy or rapacious workmen of the above total were out on strike. Putting aside the fact that the percentage of the striking workmen is very small, it is a certainty that if there were no labor unions "to cause" disputes, the men would be working twelve or fourteen hours instead of eight or ten, and the total number out of work would be larger for that very reason. The question naturally arises: If there are 16½ per cent. unemployed during such very prosperous times, what is the percentage in periods of depression?

Dreamers, like ourselves, might ask of what use is a social system which condemns one man out of every five—a very low average, taking prosperous and dull times—to idleness, prevents him from producing wealth, being happy and adding to the general well-being of the human family. The practical man answers: "This is a free country," "Every man who is willing to work can find a job," "We are a great people," etc.

Of course, we are—but what do you think of it?

Among the members of Roosevelt's official household is a descendant of a family of Corsican banditti, known in history as Buonaparte. The ambition of this "imperial" scion seems to be to surpass his master Teddy in brutality of expression. A year ago, for instance, he had the audacity to propose that Anarchists should be punished by flogging. Now he is winning unenviable distinction as the champion of the death penalty for all those who are unfortunate enough to fall thrice into the merciful hands of our Christian justice.

Brutality, arrogance and stupidity are the family virtues of the Buonapartes. The American descendant, though monarchically illegitimate, is no more humane than his European kin. Indeed, a worthy representative of our plutocracy!

But does Secretary Bonaparte take himself seriously? For, if his suggestions were to be carried out, and the real criminals executed, would not Bonaparte and his caste prove the first victims?

At the recent dedication of the McKinley monument at Canton, Ohio, the President again let loose a speech upon a long-suffering public.

Roosevelt's speeches strongly remind one of Teddy bears: they all look alike. Of course, the Strenuous One is always sure of an audience: man's love of the circus is proverbial. But not even Bonaparte could have invented a more inhumane punishment than the forced reading of the President's speeches.

Alice Roosevelt and her husband have recently been running wild in Arizona. Boarding a train, on the homestretch, the couple informed the sleeping-car agent that they wished to get a drawing-room. When the train pulled in, the agent interviewed the Pullman conductor. He had only one drawing-room in his cars, and that was occupied by two wealthy Russians. After a consultation the Russians were approached and were told that the daughter of the President was traveling and wished to have the drawing-room. They regretted, somewhat testily, that they could not oblige even so exalted a personage.

Arguments were used without avail and another consultation was held. The Russians were then informed that they must give way. They protested angrily and created an uproar in the cars, but finally they and their baggage were forcibly moved out to some unoccupied berths, and the Longworths were placed in possession of the drawing-room.

The trouble with "those ignorant foreigners" is that, coming from benighted Russia, they cannot "appreciate the spirit of our free institutions."

'Tis not so very long ago that radicals—yea, even some Anarchists—could be counted among the admirers of Yellow Hearst. "He means well," was the verdict of these naïve people. "Just read Brisbane's editorials," they argued. "Hearst is the right man!"

Suddenly came the disillusion. At the Jamestown Exposition, where Willie was the chief attraction on Labor Day, the mask fell. Mark Hanna himself could not have championed capitalism more enthusiastically. "I speak in defense of honestly gotten wealth," "The capitalist deserves his just profit"—that was the refrain of the labor champion's song.

Yes, Willie, "honest profit" is more euphonious than the old stock phrases of "thieving scoundrels," "public robbers," and the like. But this is so sudden.

The former radical admirers of Hearst are aghast. For William has spoken; but, lo and behold! the sheep stands revealed as—no, not a wolf—only a parrot.

Two shining Marxian lights, W. J. Ghent and M. Oppenheimer, have recently issued a pamphlet, entitled "The Red Flag."

Speaking of the emblem of universal brotherhood, the authors relieve their feelings in this manner:

"The Red Flag is not the emblem of Anarchy. No doubt, Anarchists sometimes use this flag. But it is not the only thing which Anarchists appropriate in use to themselves, and their occasional appropriation of this emblem is something for which the Socialists cannot rightly be blamed. There is, as all sensible men know, not the slightest similarity between Socialism and Anarchism. Between capitalism in its unmitigated form and Anarchism, there is a close and easily observable relationship. But Socialism is equally the enemy of both. Anarchism and capitalism stand equally for social chaos. But Socialism stands eternally for social order."

Is Socialism the enemy of Anarchism, or are our enemies merely Socialists? If the former is the case, so much the worse for Socialism. There was a time when Socialism, the ideal of brotherhood and liberty, was not the enemy of Anarchism. But since Socialism has come to mean concentrated authority and parliamentarism of the lowest order, it is the enemy of Anarchism and the foe of all liberty.

"Anarchism stands for social chaos." This declaration sounds familiarly capitalistic. Of course, our Socialistic brothers would not stoop to willful misrepresentation à la Hearst. In charity we ascribe their transgressions to mere stupidity.

The third annual convention of the Industrial Workers of the World has recently taken place at Chicago.

Among the various questions discussed, the main point at issue was: Should the I. W. W., as an organization, participate in politics? The Anarchists present strenuously opposed all suggestions of a politico-parliamentary character, insisting that the battle of labor must be fought exclusively on the economic field. Our comrade Caminita, speaking for the Anarchists, made an eloquent plea for direct action, demonstrating in the most lucid manner the dangers lurking in the ballot box, as well as in all authoritarian policies. He ably championed revolutionary economic battle methods.

Unfortunately, the majority of the delegates were opposed to Caminita's suggestions. It was decided to make no changes in the second paragraph of the I. W. W. preamble, to the effect that the liberation of the proletariat must be accomplished by both political and economic means.

Our comrades, who have aided so actively in the organization and efforts of the I. W. W., will soon have to decide whether they shall remain, as members of the organization, a mere appendage of the Socialist Labor Party, or whether they should act independently, on their own initiative.

lish ports. It is a highly instructive fact that not a single Frenchman is to be found among the strike-breakers.

The trade unions of England and the Social Democratic organizations of Germany are rich, strong and well disciplined. How does it happen that they would not, or could not, prevent the shipping of scabs from the ports of their respective countries into Antwerp?

The answer is very simple: they lack the spirit of solidarity.

The propaganda of direct action and the General Strike, which our French comrades have been earnestly carrying on during the last decade, has produced beneficent practical results. It has developed a strong feeling of solidarity among the workers of France and has made them conscious of the identity of interests of international labor. They have learned to realize this basic fact—not as a mere theoretical proposition—but as a living, practical factor.

Hence the intelligent, praiseworthy attitude of the French longshoremen during this important strike at Antwerp. It is time the German and English workingmen should realize the educational value of the direct action and General Strike propaganda, in its application to the practical solution of the labor problem.

How utterly insignificant are all party politics when compared to that grand spectacle, the Russian Revolution! Irrepressible and unconquerable is this momentous uprising of a mighty people: repeatedly defeated and apparently mastered, it is resurrected again and again, ever rising with renewed vigor, growing stronger by defeat.

Is it possible to eradicate this spirit, this unquenchable thirst for liberty? No! The most hardened pessimist must be taught by it to learn and to hope.

The liberation of the Russian people is no mere dream. Renewed defeats, protracted exhaustion and apparent death may return. But so will also new uprisings, successively growing in strength and determination, and finally assuming proportions beyond the resources of the decayed Tsarism.

The deeds of valor and self-sacrifice we read about in history make the blood course faster in our veins and fill us with admiration. But grander and more prodigious than any deed of the past is the heroic example of our own time.

Wonderful, indeed, are the possibilities of a people inspired by liberty and brotherhood.

The recent assassination of M. Borodulin, Superintendent of the political prison at Akatui, Transbaikalia, has made another Torquemada harmless. Borodulin was one of the jailers and torturers of Mlle. Spiridonova, the valiant revolutionist who killed M. Luchenovsky, Chief of the Secret Police of Tambov.

After her arrest Mlle. Spiridonova was brutally maltreated and outraged by her captors. Three of the latter, a police officer named Zhanoff, a Cossack officer Abramoff, and another officer Metus, have been assassinated for the part they took in abusing and torturing the young woman.

The hand of the avenging revolutionary angel is swift and sure: Borodulin is the fourth who forfeited his life for torturing Mlle. Spiridonova.

The capitalistic policy of suppression and exploitation has attained its highest triumph in the colonies. India, once rich and beautiful, has been laid waste by the greed and tyranny of Great Britain.

That the natives are driven to rebellion by their foreign oppressors, is quite natural. Just now much-suffering India is in a state of ferment, one uprising fast following another.

Little news reaches the outside world as to the true conditions in India; but it is evident from the meagre, censored accounts that things are far more serious than the official circles of England are willing to admit.

The spirit of liberty and independence is abroad in all the colonies. Not only India is endeavoring to break the yoke of the foreign oppressor. The Malays are up in arms against Holland. The Moors are defending the remnants of their independence against the encroachment of the French government. The Koreans are bravely struggling against the Japanese autocracy, and our own colonies are far from "pacified."

The natives, everywhere, are striving to shake off the yoke of the foreign masters. May success crown their efforts! But Liberty will not triumph till all oppression —both foreign and domestic—is a thing of the past.

Conservative literary circles of France religiously believe that the best traditions of the 17th century have been preserved—in custom, language and literature—in the French-speaking part of Canada.

It is not long since the academician Vicomte de Vogüé, addressing a Canadian statesman, exclaimed: "We could learn much from you! Our language, for instance. You, Canadians, have preserved it in all its purity and beauty!"

De Vogüé's academical predecessor, Marmien, who had traveled much in Canada, even believed that he had discovered there the Atticism of le grand siècle.

Comrade R. de Marmande, in a recent contribution to Mercure de France, exposes these flatteries, which—on the lips of the French politicians—are but self-flattery.

Our comrade, describing the true condition of Canadian life and literature, leaves no doubt that the situation is anything but a healthy one.

Every free expression is mercilessly suppressed by the double censorship: the moral one of the State and the still more dangerous religious one of the all-powerful clergy. Only in Canada could it happen that a publisher, under clerical pressure, should have to burn the works of Voltaire.

On the other hand, the Canadian government encourages the re-publication at home of such French books as have been approved by the censorship. Native authors are thus directly discouraged and every free expression discountenanced.

As to the alleged language purity of French-Canadian literature, Marmande quotes native authors to prove their inanity of expression and empty romanticism.

The literature of Canada but mirrors her life. Both will be infused with originality and strength only when the all-deadening curse of religion will have been lifted from our neighbor.

McKINLEY'S ASSASSINATION FROM THE ANARCHIST STANDPOINT

By VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

SIX years have passed since William McKinley met his doom at Buffalo and the return stroke of justice took the life of his slayer, Leon Czolgosz. The wild rage that stormed through the brains of the people, following that revolver shot, turning them into temporary madmen, incapable of seeing, hearing, or thinking correctly, has spent itself. Figures are beginning to appear in their true relative proportions, and there is some likelihood that sane words will be sanely listened to. Instead of the wild and savage threats, "Brand the Anarchists with hot iron," "Boil in oil," "Hang to the first lamp-post," "Scourge and shackle," "Deport to a desert island," which were the stock phrases during the first few weeks following the tragedy, and were but the froth of the upheaved primitive barbarity of civilized men, torn loose and raging like an unreasoning beast, we now hear an occasional serious inquiry: "But what have the Anarchists to say about it? Was Czolgosz really an Anarchist? Did he say he was? And what has Anarchism to do with assassination altogether?"

To those who wish to know what the Anarchists have to say, these words are addressed. We have to say that nat Anarchism, but the state af saciety which creates men of pawer and greed and the victims af power and greed, is responsible for the death of both McKinley and Czolgosz. Anarchism has this much to do with assassination, that as it teaches the possibility of a society in which the needs of life may be fully supplied for all, and in which the opportunities for complete development of mind and body shall be the heritage of all; as it teaches that the present unjust organization of the production and distribution of wealth must finally be completely destroyed, and replaced by a system which will insure to each the liberty to work, without first seeking a master to whom he must surrender a tithe of his product, which will guarantee his liberty of access to the sources and means of production; as it teaches that all this is possible without the exhaustion of body and mind which is they need "corroborative evidence." All that we really know of Czolgosz is his revolver shot and his dying words: "I killed the President because he was the enemy of the people, the good, working people." All between is blank. What he really said, if he said anything, remains in the secret papers of the Buffalo Police Department and the Auburn prison. If we are to judge inferentially, considering his absolutely indifferent behavior at his "trial," he never said anything at all. He was utterly at their mercy, and had they been able to twist or torture any word of his into a "conspiracy," they would have done it. Hence it is most probable he said nothing.

Was he a normal or an abnormal being? In full possession of his senses, or of a disturbed or weak mentality? Again we do not know. All manner of fables arose immediately after his act as to his boyhood's career; people knew him in his childhood as evil, stupid, cruel; even some knew him who had heard him talk about assassinating the President years before; other legends contradicted these; all were equally unreliable. His indifference at the "trial" may have been that of a strong man enduring a farce, or of a clouded and non-realizing mind. His last words were the words of a naïve and devoted soul, a soul quite young, quite unselfish, and quite forlorn. If martyrdom is insisted upon, which was the martyr, the man who had had the good of life, who was past middle years, who had received reward and distinction to satiety, who had ordered others killed without once jeopardizing his own life, and to whom death came more easily than to millions who die of long want and slow tortures of disease, or this young strong soul which struck its own blow and paid with its own life, so capable of the utterest devotion, so embittered and ruined in its youth, so hopeless, so wasted, so cast out of the heart of pity, so altogether alone in its last agony? This was the greater tragedy—a tragedy bound to be repeated over and over, until "the good working people" (in truth they are not so good) learn that the earth is theirs and the fullness thereof, and that there is no need for any one to enslave himself to another. This Anarchism teaches, and this the future will realize, though many martyrdoms lie between.

THE INTERNATIONAL ANARCHIST CONGRESS

Report by EMMA GOLDMAN.

AN International Congress! The suspicious mind will at once conjure up horrors of majority rule, of politicians and platforms—platforms carefully devised to appeal to the stupid, and politicians who will make it appear that the stupid themselves have chosen their programs. The majority has but to be made to believe that it enjoys sovereignty and the power of decision, and it will cheerfully seal its own degradation.

However, the International Anarchist Congress at Amsterdam had none of that. The eighty delegates who had come from monarchies and republics did not assemble to get up a catechism. Their purpose was to crystallize—out of the contrast of temperaments, theories and opinions—harmonious and concerted action. Of such contrasts there were many, occasionally bursting out at one another like bomb-shells, the Latin temperament readily bubbling over, often threatening to destroy the dearly cherished German sense of "order." But after the delegates had come into comradely touch with one another, a quieter atmosphere made itself felt, uniting all in a sincere desire to co-operate in every way possible to make the Congress a success.

Enrico Malatesta, the senior of the Congress, full of youthful spirit, his eyes glowing with the divine fire for the revolutionizing of mind and body, was one of the most interesting figures. His enthusiasm for the cause, together with his sweet personality, produce an exquisitely harmonious character, the influence of which is both soothing and inspiring.

Pierre Monatte, a representative of the "Confédération du Travail" (Revolutionary Trade Unions of France), an agitator of great force, thoroughly versed in the literature of the economic and anti-militarist movements, simple and unassuming, full of the spirit of solidarity and true comradeship. Together with such men as Pouget, Delesalle, Greffulheus, he is building up a tremendous economic force, the "Confédération Générale du Travail," of which MOTHER EARTH will have more to say in a later issue.

R. de Marmande, revolutionaire and true bohême, jovial, full of esprit, with a keen sense of humor. He refuses to see in the Mother of Freedom—Revolution—a black-robed nun, walking about in penitence and despair over the sins of mankind. Revolution, to him, is the great liberator, the joy-bearer.

Henri Feiss-Amoré, the Belgian, was one of the most typical Frenchmen at the Congress: impatient, hot-headed and impulsive, yet polite and chivalrous; he necessarily proved a failure in everything that required system and self-control.

Broutchoux, a power in the mining regions of France, belongs to the type of workingman who has helped to make revolutionary history,—intelligent, daring and uncompromising. He is beloved by his fellow-workers and hated by all authoritarian parties.

Dunois, from Switzerland, and Chapelier, a Belgian, furnished much human document—the former too democratic to appreciate the real value of the individual; the latter, too sectarian for a universal movement. Chapelier's internationalism lies in Esperanto. No doubt, much could have been gained at the Congress had all the delegates known Esperanto, as the interpretations from the French, Dutch and German consumed a tremendous amount of time. But to believe that an arbitrary, mechanical language can ever replace anything that has grown out of the soil, the life and the customs of a people, is to be sectarian indeed.

Another of the delegates was Luigi Fabri, from Italy, well known through his writings on Anarchism and his affiliation with Mollinari's L'Università Popolare.

Dr. Friedeberg, the German delegate, is an ex-member of the Social Democratic Party, which he represented as Alderman in the city of Berlin. In that capacity he has had ample opportunity to learn the uselessness of parliamentarism, which indueed him to turn to Anarchism. Dr. Friedeberg is now one of the foremost champions of the General Strike, direct action and anti-militarism. Though he is indicted for high treason—a very serious offense in the land of the Kaiser—he was completely wrapped up in the work of the Congress, unconcerned as to what the future may bring him.

Two Bohemian comrades, Vohryzek and Knotek, were very interesting delegates. Vohryzek, alert and ever ready with suggestions and resolutions, is a fanatical admirer of the achievements of his country, without the slightest sense of relative proportion. His friend, Knotek, was quite a contrast. He never spoke once during the entire session, yet one could not fail to perceive the artistic, dreamy and refined temperament. I regret that time did not permit me to see more of Comrade Knotek.

Then there was R. Rocker, editor of the Workers' Friend and Germinal, Jewish papers published in London. German by birth, he has acquired the Yiddish language, and through his able pen he is doing much to bring light and hope into the gloomy existence of the Jewish proletariat in England. He has acted as an impetus to the idealism, the earnestness and studiousness of the young Yiddish element, both in England and America. But one of his greatest merits is that he has made accessible to the Jewish reading public the revolutionary literature of the world.

There were many other delegates, who, for lack of space, cannot be discussed here; but they added much interesting material on the growth of our ideas in their respective countries.

After a few preliminaries, the Congress began its real work Monday afternoon, August 26th. Reports were read from France, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, Germany, Austria, Bohemia, Russia, Servia, Bulgaria, Holland, England and the United States. The report on the American situation our readers will be able to follow in MOTHER EARTH. A résumé of the other reports will appear later.

The first subject for the consideration of the Congress was "Anarchism and Organization," with Dunois as speaker. The constant misrepresentation of Anarchism by its opponents has resulted in the widespread notion that Anarchism is merely destructive. That it is also constructive, our enemies carefully avoid stating.

In his opening remarks Dunois regrets that so little attention has hitherto been paid to the necessity of organization. "The individualistic notion, as expressed by Dr. Stockman in Ibsen's 'Enemy of the People,' that the strongest is he who stands alone, has been very detrimental to the Anarchist movement. This statement has no relation to Anarchism, since Stockman merely voiced the egoistic notion of the bourgeoisie." After a lengthy discourse on similar lines the speaker proposed the following resolution to the Congress: "Anarchism and organization are not antagonistic; on the contrary, the common material interests of the workers as well as the mutual interests in ideas necessitate federated organizations."

In opposition to Dunois' conception, the Dutch comrade Croiset spoke of the individualistic phase of Anarchism—not in the sense, however, of private property, mutual banking, contracts and a voluntary police force—but of the importance of the individual in society. He is not opposed to organization, on principle. But, believing egoism the main-spring of all our desires and actions, he holds that organization can be founded only on purely individual interests. "Egoists may combine to more successfully carry out some mutual project. But organization, not based on individual interests, is in danger of developing into an arbitrary and authoritarian factor."

Max Baginski and myself spoke in favor of organization, laying stress on the fact that it is always the self-conscious, free individualities which decide the character and influence of an organization. We further illustrated our point by the following paper on "The Relation of Anarchism to Organization," read by Max Baginski:

"The charge that Anarchism is destructive rather than constructive, and that, therefore, Anarchism is opposed to organization, is one of the many falsehoods spread by our opponents. They confound our present social institutions with organization; therefore they fail to understand how we can oppose the former and yet favor the latter. The fact, however, is that the two are not identical.

"The STATE is commonly regarded as the highest form of organization. But is it in reality a true organization? Is it not rather an arbitrary institution, cunningly imposed upon the masses?

"INDUSTRY, too, is called an organization; yet nothing is farther from the truth. Industry is the ceaseless piracy of the rich against the poor.

"We are asked to believe that the ARMY is an organization, but a close investigation will show that it is nothing else than a cruel instrument of blind force.

"The PUBLIC SCHOOL! The colleges and other institutions of learning, are they not models of organization, offering the people fine opportunities for instruction? Far from it. The school, more than any other institution, is a veritable barrack, where the human mind is drilled and manipulated into submission to various social and moral spooks, and thus fitted to continue our system of exploitation and oppression.

"Organization, as we understand it, however, is a different thing. It is based, primarily, on freedom. It is the natural and voluntary grouping of energies for the achievement of results beneficial to humanity; results which should endow life with meaning, worth and beauty.

"It is the harmony of organic growth which produces variety of color and form, the complete whole we admire in the flower. Analogously will the organized activity of free human beings, endowed with the spirit of solidarity, result in the perfection of social harmony, which we call Anarchism. In fact, Anarchism alone makes non-authoritarian organization of common interests possible, since it abolishes the existing antagonism between individuals and classes.

"Under present conditions the antagonism of economic and social interests results in relentless war among the social units, and creates an insurmountable obstacle in the way of a co-operative commonwealth.

"There is a mistaken notion that organization does not foster individual freedom; that, on the contrary, it means the decay of individuality. In reality, however, the true function of organization is to aid the development and growth of the personality.

"Just as the animal cells, by mutual co-operation, express their latent powers in the formation of the complete organism, so does the individuality, by co-operative effort with other individualities, attain its highest form of development.

"An organization, in the true sense, cannot result from the combination of mere nonentities. It must be composed of self-conscious, intelligent individualities. Indeed, the total of the possibilities and activities of an organization is represented in the expression of individual energies.

"It therefore logically follows that the greater the number of strong, self-conscious personalities in an organization, the less danger of stagnation and the more intense its life-element.

"Anarchism asserts the possibility of an organization without discipline, fear or punishment, and without the pressure of poverty: a new social organism, which will make an end to the terrible struggle for the means of existence,—the savage struggle which undermines the finest qualities in man and ever widens the social abyss. In short, Anarchism strives towards a social organization which will establish well-being for all.

"The germ of such an organization can be found in that form of trades unionism which has done away with centralization, bureaucracy and discipline, and which favors independent and direct action on the part of its members."

Malatesta, discussing the various attitudes towards organization, finds the difference not so much in principle as in the method of expression. "One is apt to lay too great stress on some particular pet phase, whereas in reality all the speakers are agreed as to the necessity of organization. I, too, can see little in the position of Dr. Stockman. Were he a worker in some factory, at the mercy of poverty and exploitation, he would soon descend from his lofty pedestal."

Baginski and myself opposed the opinion expressed by Dunois and Malatesta, that Ibsen represented, in his art, the attitude of the egoistic bourgeoisie. Anarchism does not mean Kropotkin or Ibsen: it embraces both. While Kropotkin has explained the social conditions which lead to a collective revolution, Ibsen has portrayed, in a masterly manner, the psychological effects which culminate in the revolt of the human soul,—the revolt of the individuality. Nothing would prove more disastrous to our ideas, were we unable to unite the external, the physical, and the internal, the psychological, motives of rebellion against the existing institutions.

Vohryzek agreed with us, adding: "Stirner is not opposed to organization; on the contrary, a close study of 'The Ego and his Own' will show that Stirner saw in the organization of free individuals a lofty aim of human endeavor."

Cornelissen, of Holland, took exception to the views of the American delegates. "Individual liberty is desirable, yet a limit must be set as to how far it is admissible; it must not be allowed to become injurious to the movement, as a whole."

After several others had spoken, Dunois consented to accept my amendment to his resolution, to the effect that collective activity in no way denies individual action; that, on the contrary, they complete each other. In this form the resolution was accepted by the Congress.

The evening sessions, lasting until midnight, were turned into public meetings wherein reports of the day's work and some of the speeches were interpreted into the Dutch language.

Wednesday afternoon's session was of a private nature, to which the press was not admitted. Incidentally, I wish to say a few words in regard to the Amsterdam press. Coming from the land of yellow journals, it was refreshing to read Dutch papers. All the important publications, even those of the most extreme conservative type, had correct and honest reports; not a word of misrepresentation or sensationalism. When I think of what our New York papers would have made of the Congress, I am grateful to Fate that in "free" America, with its "free" immigration laws, an Anarchistic Congress is out of the question. That the New York papers would bring some sensational and blood-curdling news was to be expected; thus they reported, for instance, that Malatesta and I had advised a "reign of terror." Poor, dull brain of our penny-a-liners that must forever invent a "story"!

The formation of an Anarchist International Federation was thoroughly discussed and finally agreed upon. The International is to be composed of groups and federations, as well as of individual comrades who wish to join. The groups, federations and individual members are to retain their full autonomy. A Bureau of Correspondence, consisting of five members, has been chosen, the purpose of which is to bring about closer communication and greater solidarity between the groups of various countries; also to keep them posted on the current events of the movement. Individual comrades, desiring to become members of the International, must be identified by their organization, the Bureau, or some comrade known to the Bureau. The expenses of the Bureau are to be defrayed by contributions of the groups and comrades belonging to the International.

Various views were expressed as to the merits of a Bureau, some of the delegates being apprehensive of the resurrection of the General Council of the International —an authoritarian clique, full of national and international intrigue and gossip. The fact that such irreproachable characters as Malatesta, Rocker, etc., have been chosen as members is safe guarantee, however, that the new Bureau will have a different character. The American delegates were in favor of a Bulletin, which should furnish all countries with data on the growth of our ideas. However, those who preferred the Bureau hope that such a Bulletin may be issued as soon as money will be forthcoming.

Syndicalism was discussed by Pierre Monatte, from whose paper I quote a few paragraphs: "Syndicalism is the arena where the proletariat can gather for the battle, whose final object is the overthrow of the present economic and social institutions. There are various means, of course, but the most effective ones have proven to be sabotage (the despoiling of property and material), direct action and the General Strike. All these means, in contradistinction to the old authoritarian and political methods, have already caused a great deal of consternation among the enemy. It is to be regretted that many Anarchists still cling to the tradition of the old political revolution. No wonder they often despair of the means of realizing their ideals. Syndicalism, however, organizes the proletariat into a revolutionary phalanx giving the workingman confidence in himself, in his own power. Syndicalism, imbued with the true spirit of Internationalism, also propagates anti-militarism, anti-political and anti-parliamentary action, seeing in all these dangerous obstacles in the way of human liberation."

These remarks, followed by an interesting discussion, left the impression that the keeping aloof, in the past, from the trade union movement has been a mistake. The destructive, as well as the constructive, forces for a new life come from the working people. It, therefore, behooves us to keep in close contact with the latter. There was little diversity of opinion on this point. The various speakers merely considered whether syndicalism is to be looked upon as an aim or as a means. Malatesta was particularly brilliant in his remarks anent this question. "I, too, regret that most of the comrades isolated themselves from the trades union movement; but there would be still more cause for regret were they to go to the other extreme and dissolve in the present syndicalist agitation. To regenerate society, more is required than the battle on the economic field. Direct action and the General Strike are to be hailed as glorious weapons in the present struggle; but to assume that they will bring about a Social Revolution, as we conceive the latter, is to be guilty of great naïvité. Such a revolution goes far beyond every class interest, its aim is the liberation of man in all phases of life. Therefore, our methods must never become one-sided. It may be impossible and, in fact, inadvisable for all workingmen to join the General Strike—railroad men, sailors, carmen and others, holding the means of transportation in their hands, may serve the cause of labor infinitely more by carrying the necessities of life to their striking brothers. Statistics prove that a city like London has provisions only for three months. What would become of the strikers after three months, if the railroad employees, too, were to join them?"

Malatesta has in view, particularly, periods of a great uprising or an insurrection. So far as ordinary strikes, however, are concerned he will probably agree with me that, if those employed in transportation were to join the strikers, the question at issue could be settled long before the supply of any large city would give out.

The subject closed with two propositions. One, signed by Monatte, Nacht, Dunois and Marmande, was to the effect that they see in syndicalism and in the material interests of the proletariat the principal basis of revolutionary activity.

The second, signed by Malatesta, myself and others, explained that revolutionary trade unionism and the General Strike are only means and can in no way replace the Social Revolution. It also expressed the conviction that the capitalistic régime can be abolished only through an insurrection and expropriation, and that our battle must be directed against all authoritarian forces.

As the first resolution was merely an addition to the second, both were accepted by the Congress. So also was the following declaration as to "Individual and Collective Terror," signed by Max Baginski and myself:

"We recommend that the International Anarchist Congress declare itself in favor of the right of rebellion on the part of the individual, as well as on that of the masses.

"We hold that most terroristic acts, especially those directed against representatives of the State and the plutocracy, must be considered from a psychological viewpoint. They are the results of the profound impression made upon the psychology of the individual by the terrible pressure of our social injustice.

"As a rule, only the noblest, most sensitive and tender spirits are subject to such deep impressions, which manifest themselves in internal and external revolt. Thus viewed, terroristic acts can justly be characterized as the socio-psychological consequences of an unbearable system; as such, these acts, together with their causes and motives, must be understood, rather than praised or condemned.

"During revolutionary periods, such as the present one in Russia, for instance, terrorism—apart from its psychological character—serves a twofold purpose: it undermines the very foundation of tyranny, and kindles in the timid the divine fire of revolt. Especially is this the case when terroristic activity is directed against the most brutal and hated agents of despotism.

"The Congress, indorsing this resolution, manifests its understanding for the act of the individual rebel, as well as its solidaric feeling with collective insurrection."

The paper on "The General Strike and the Political Strike," by Dr. Friedeberg, was an able critique of the Social Democratic notions in regard to the merely political General Strike. The speaker stated that the latter was being advised merely to infuse new life into the anemic condition of the political activity of that party. A résumé of Dr. Friedeberg's resolution follows:

"The class struggle and the economical liberation of the proletariat are not identical with the ideas and aims of Anarchism. The latter extend beyond the class aims and stand for the complete material and psychological regeneration of human individuality. Anarchism sees in the abolition of class régime and economic depcndence the first step towards a free society. It cannot, however, employ those means of combat which are contradictory to itself and its purposes. Anarchism, therefore, refuses to recognize parliamentary action, conservative trade unionism and the right of the majority to dictate to or coerce the minority."

"Anarchism and Anti-Militarism" was referred to the anti-militaristic Congress that had been arranged by comrade Domela Nieuwenhuis. The opening session, Friday afternoon, August 29th, was attended by all the delegates of the International Anarchist Congress. Interesting reports were read as to the growth of anti-militarism in various countries. Switzerland furnished the most gratifying results, seventy men having refused military service. The delegates expressed their solidarity with all those imprisoned for such heroism. Pierre Ramus and R. de Marmande spoke on "Anarchism and Anti-Militarism." All agreed on the necessity of a vigorous agitation among soldiers and militiamen, urging them to refuse obedience when ordered to shoot strikers. Also to impress upon the workingman the necessity of abstaining, as much as possible, from the manufacture of all articles of wholesale slaughter. A letter of greeting from Dutch soldiers, also one of sympathy from Ferrer—recently rescued from the clutches of the Spanish authorities—were read.

gress, was taken up by a paper on co-operative societies in Holland, by comrade Samson; a paper on co-education, by Leon Clement, read by Marmande; an exposition of Esperanto, by Emile Chapelier, and a paper on Alcoholism, by a Christian Anarchist. As time was limited and the delegates worn out, the subjects were not discussed. A letter of greeting was received from comrade Yvetôt, now serving four years for syndicalistic activity. In reply, a letter of solidarity was sent to Yvetôt and his fellow-sufferers, of the following contents:

"The Congress declares that the French government acts toward the workingmen as brutally and severely as all other governments of the world. We, therefore, send our brotherly greetings to Yvetôt, Marck, Levy, Bousquet, Corton, Loubot, Berthet, Clementine Delmotte and Gabrielle Petit (who are now in prison). At the same time we express our sympathy and solidarity with all the champions of liberty, suffering under the capitalistic régime. We urge that the International Bureau consider it one of its first steps to defend and assist all these."

A resolution in behalf of Russia, signed by Rogdaeff, Zabregneff, Cornelissen, Baginski, Munjitsch, Fabri, Malatesta and myself, was enthusiastically accepted by the Congress. It follows:

"Considering that with the development of the people of Russia the proletariat of the cities and country will never be satisfied with mere political liberties, it is their aim to free themselves from economical as well as political bondage, and to employ in their struggle such means as have been propagated by the Anarchists for a considerable time. They can not expect anything from above, and they must, therefore, conquer their rights by direct action.

"The Russian revolution is not only of local or national importance, but the near future of the international proletariat depends on it. The bourgeoisie of the new and the old worlds co-operate to defend their privileges and to postpone the abolition of their régime. They furnish moral and material support to the government of the Tsar, even supplying it with ammunition for the destruction of the Russian people.

"We therefore urge that the proletariat of all countries should inaugurate an energetic activity, opposing capitalist, monarchical, republican, democratic and constitutional government. It is in the interest of all workingmen to refuse any compromise in their attitude toward the Russian Revolution. Never, under any circumstances, ought they to be willing to assist any foreign power in its attempt to crush the revolt. If during a strike in Russia a General Strike cannot be declared in the corresponding industries in other countries, the proletariat should resort to such means which would spoil or injure the material sent to the Russian government, refusing to carry arms or other sinews of war into Russia.

"The Congress recommends to all comrades the necessity of furthering Anarchism in Russia and the Russian Revolution."

Two Christian Anarchists, who seemed to think that the régime of the Tsar can be met with Bible texts, refused to vote.

The Congress closed with a few warm and expressive remarks by Malatesta, and the singing of the "Internationale."

The delegates were in no way molested by the authorities at Amsterdam, except for a few Dutch detectives, who were occasionally following some of us.

I may mention that on the 2d of September, the day when Queen Wilhelmina came to Amsterdam, Baginski and I were supposed to have been watched very carefully. As if Anarchists were engaged in the slaughter of geese!

Whatever may come of the work or the resolutions of the Congress, it has undoubtedly brought about a closer international feeling and proven to the world that the Anarchist movement can no longer be treated as the "pastime of a few cranks," but that it is a wide-spread, earnest endeavor to wage war against all power and oppression.

GRILL HARRIMAN AT U. P. MEETING.

Dependent Stockholders Will Ask Pertinent Questions and Demand Replies.

BASED ON THE RECENT DISCOVERIES BY FISH.

Interrogations The World Has Repeatedly Made Will Also Be Put on Records.

(Special to The World.)

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 7.—On the eve of the annual meeting of Union Pacific stockholders omens appear that the session to-morrow will not be the cut-and-dried affair that E. H. Harriman intended. There are likely to be embarrassing moments for the financier's representatives who are here to execute his orders.

There is no doubt that they will dominate the voting, but they will not prove strong enough to prevent independent shareholders from asking certain questions, to which they will demand answers. These shareholders will insist, and if any attempt is made to ignore them or try them down they will fight for their rights.

Who will ask the questions could not be learned, but all are agreed as to the nature of the interrogation.

"Why should Mr. Harriman at this time be recorded as paying 175 for Illinois Central stock to the Union Pacific when he could have purchased the same for 135 on the open market?" will be the first. Others will be:

"If it is in the nature of a restitution for the stock he sold his associates unloaded on the Union Pacific at 175 though purchased at 135, why does he not take back the 12,000 shares, the number he sold?"

"If, as the books purport to show, he paid $2,000,000 for the 20,000 shares, what has become of the money?"

"Has the money or any part payment for the stock or has there been another juggle?"

"Who received the payment, and in what form was it made?"

"What is there to show that there was a payment of any kind except the bare mention of the transfer on Sept. 21?"

"There is a mention of a distribution of 1,000 shares to thirty persons on the same date, to lawyers, officials, employees and others. Who took over those shares in the first instance? Who paid for them, if they were paid for? What was the motive for this distribution?"

"Did Mr. Harriman buy of the good-will of the men to whom he distributed?"

"Where is payment for the 1,000 shares shown? How soon after Oct. 15 will the shares go back?"

"If there was no money consideration for the transfer why was the Union Pacific thus deprived of the ownership of the securities, at present valued at 175, but the money received by the transaction?"

These questions and others to be sent January made by Stockholders Fish and J. W. Gates, both of the Union Pacific directorate, and also by a number of the minority stockholders who have been interested with Mr. Fish in the opposition to the Harriman interests.

Miss Goldman Doesn't Believe that American Immigration Officials Will Try To.

(Copyright, 1907, by the Press Publishing Company, New York World.)

(Special Cable Despatch to The World.)

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Emma Goldman, high priestess of anarchy, has arrived in England, and to-night she regaled an audience of London anarchists with a violent harangue of the sort with which New York is familiar.

The World correspondent asked her what she will do if, as is intimated by report the American Immigration authorities decide to refuse her permission to land in New York.

"They can't keep me out," she exclaimed. "I have been twenty-three years in America. My father is an American citizen, and I don't believe the immigration authorities would be foolish enough to try."

At any rate there will be no opportunity to test the question for some time, for Miss Goldman will remain in England several months, addressing meetings in the chief towns.

She has just completed a tour of the principal cities of Europe after attending the Anarchist Congress at Amsterdam.

"Of all the countries in Europe," she reports, "France is the furthest advanced in the progress of the anarchist movement. England is a good second. I have great hopes that America will lead them all.

"American workmen, particularly in the West, are growing tired of law-abiding trade unionism, and are realizing that they must meet force with force. The trial of Moyer, Heywood and Pettibone in Idaho, woke them up there. It was merely an attempt to crush a union, and acquittal was due not to the fact that the judge and jury were convinced of their innocence, but to the fact Western miners knew how to handle dynamite. The authorities knew that their own skins would be in danger if they hanged Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone.

"The American people have had a rude awakening from the idea of personal immunity to everything. They are beginning to realize that the tyranny of a democratic majority is more and more than [illegible] Lowly Czar.

"I have seen [illegible] in Europe, but in New York and Chicago. Nowhere have I seen the [illegible] as there. I have seen a [illegible] anxiety [illegible] in America.

ARTISTS—REVOLUTIONISTS

(Anent our new cover design.)

THE illustrator of our new cover is a French artist who has consecrated his art to the revolutionary proletariat. The readers will find his signature under his dedication to the American comrades.

About two weeks ago the Paris police confiscated "La Voix du Peuple," the principal organ of the Confédération du Travail, placing the editor under arrest. The issue which served as pretext for the outrage was entirely devoted to anti-militarism. The illustration on the front page, drawn by Grandjouan, represents the home-coming of the soldier.

With a few masterful strokes the artist portrays the soldier returning from the strike region of Narbonne, where he helped to "restore order," with bayonet and rifle.

His mother confronts him with the indignant cry, "Ah, it is you who had fired on the people!" She spits in his face. Back of her stands the father, enraged at the perfidy of his son and threatening him with his clenched fist.

"La Voix du Peuple" is by no means the only revolutionary sheet that benefits by the ideas and art of Grandjouan. There is hardly a radical publication in France that he does not contribute to. Especially forceful are his drawings for "Temps Nouveaux," an Anarchist weekly, published by our Paris comrades.

With Steinlen, the foremost French artist, who so realistically depicts social misery, Grandjouan contributes to "L'assiette du Beurre," each issue of the journal being devoted to some special subject. The last number I saw in Paris represents "Men of Order": streaming with blood there stand the judge, the priest, the politician, the procurer, Thiers—the butcher of the Commune—and even the ex-Communard himself. The latter, fat and satisfied, cries: "I, too, stand for order. I am now a man of property."

Comrade Grandjouan is now at work on a series of designs that will prove of tremendous artistic and revolutionary effect. The drawings are to illustrate the characteristics of the various types of workingmen, portraying the whole gamut of labor.

A large array of French artists of note can be mentioned who are working along the same lines as Grandjouan. Their pen and pencil give to the world what Aristide Bruant has given in the street songs of the tramp, outcast and prostitute. Such are Steinlen, Delaunoy, Herman Paul, Zola, Mirbeau, Richepin, Charpentier, Rictus, etc. "Indeed, there is not an artist of consequence who is not also a revolutionist," said Grandjouan during our conversation.

This brought up to my mind our own artists of importance who, while not artistically to be compared with their French colleagues, are far superior to the latter in their money-getting genius. No one can accuse them of ever jumping the line or the limit set for them by the political shade of the newspaper or party they work for. They sketch whatever is ordered, whatever will be approved by the moral standard of the average citizen and his virtuous wife. To be sure, the carricatures are funny, sometimes; but the Lord forbid that they should ever become caustic or cutting. It is nothing but shallow society satire to relieve the dull monotony of five-o'clock teas. The sphere of social and economic chasms is never approached; or, if at all, it is to expose the "impudent pretensions of the common people" to the good things of life.

That the artist must serve the highest bidder is an American axiom. Practicality is our most essential trait.

Surely, one could not expect our artists to be so idealistic as to serve art.

Only in politics is the artist still allowed some latitude; but even there partisan interests dictate his policy.

Mr. Brisbane writes what Hearst pays for. Mr. Opper receives his ideas ready made, to be illustrated in the reliable stereotyped manner. Should Mr. Hearst turn a political somersault, his journalists and caricaturists will follow suit.

During the 16 to 1 campaign Homer Davenport served the Bryan party, McKinley and Mark Hanna faring wretchedly at his hands. The most zealous devotion to free silver Mr. Davenport displayed in his caricature of the gold plank, with John Most and Mark Hanna at each end. During the last presidential campaign the same ardent silver artist drank nectar at the gardens of the Republican Party. The reward in the form of a fifteen thousand dollar check was large enough to induce any American newspaper artist to degrade his art.

Therein lies the fundamental difference between France and America. Delaunoy, Yossot, Herman Paul, Toulouse de Loutrec and Grandjouan are idealists, responsive to the efforts of oppressed humanity; therefore their art gains in originality, strength and beauty. With us, most artists are matter-of-fact men, practical people; thus their creative faculties become stultified, and their work commonplace.

Our new cover hardly needs an explanation. For the benefit of those who might wonder, I would say:

The mother of humanity, the Earth, lies fettered by the tyranny of capital. A wire fence, guarded by sword and revolver, separates her from her children. Behind the fence stands the Master of the Earth, the capitalist. At every attempt of humanity to approach their mother, he sternly points to the law.

Our magazine shall continue to wage war against tyranny and government. Its bugle call shall ever be, "A free Earth for a free people!"

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

The October issue of the Miners' Magazine, dealing with the Haymarket tragedy, which culminated in the crime of 1887, writes:

"After twenty years the men whom prejudice convicted and judicially murdered are being looked upon as the brave pioneers who were 'blazing the trail' towards the summit of economic freedom. It is no wonder that the monument of the policemen was removed. Capitalism is anxious that labor shall forget the infamy of that conspiracy that murdered under forms of law.

"When another twenty years shall have passed away the labor army of Chicago will assemble around the graves of the victims of capitalist hate, and from the lips of eloquence will stream a tribute to the brave men whose energies and efforts were consecrated to the downtrodden and oppressed."

The blackest page in the history of American labor was stamped by its silent approval of the crime of 1887. But we are happy to witness the awakening of the conscience of the masses that will at a later day do full justice to the martyrs in the cause of liberty.

It is reported from Cleveland that the temporary injunction restraining the national and local officers of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union and its members from engaging in strikes or boycotts against the members of the Typothetæ has been made permanent by Justice Thompson of the United States Circuit Court.

This injunction is unusually sweeping. It not only restrains the union and its local and national officers from engaging in strikes or boycotts against the members of the Typothetæ, but it also restrains the union from taking a referendum vote, which had been started, on the question of ordering a General Strike, prohibits the union from levying assessments for strike purposes and restrains the organizers from organizing for the purpose of extending the strike.

In other words, the action of the Federal court practically deprives the Pressmen's Union of all the fundamental rights inherent in the very fact of its existence, and annihilates with one sweep the very purpose of its being.

This injunction is a valuable document. We advise all workingmen to study it. Even the simplest intelligence could not fail to comprehend the true purport as summed up in the finding of the court. It is but too evident that the capitalist class is determined to use all the forces at their command—the government and courts which they own—to destroy the power of organized labor by paralyzing the activities of the unions.

Will the workingmen of America supinely see their last hope, the united effort, suppressed? Or will they, like men of spirit and independence, demand their rights —plutocratic court decisions notwithstanding—by virtue of their being the sole creators of the nation's wealth.

Rally around the flag of the General Strike and force your exploiters to beg quarter.

The Washington authorities are making strenuous efforts to improve the condition of the Filipinos. An edict has been issued to the local government to suppress all gambling, bringing home to the native the biblical injunction that it is better the body should perish that the soul may be saved.

Yet, fearing that the precious soul may suffer from the avoirdupois of its tenement, the body, our government has built a high tariff fence against Philippine products, which means the hunger cure for the "pacified" islands.

The N. Y. Sun laments the "very serious condition of affairs" in our regular army. Continuing, it says: "Not only are men deserting in formidable numbers, but as a rule good men neither enlist nor re-enlist. Although we need with each succeeding year an increase of our standing military force, each year it becomes more and more difficult to maintain even the establishment we had twelve months before."

And why should we "need with each succeeding year an increase of our standing military force"? What external enemies have the American people? Or does the Sun, perhaps, have in mind an internal enemy, whom the government of the rich must be in readiness to subdue?

Whatever enemies the government may have—that is, those interested in keeping intact the system of national and international robbery—the American people have no quarrel with the peoples of any other country and will have none if the government will quit interfering with the affairs of the people of this or other countries.

The American people have but one enemy, the plutocratic parasite sucking the nation's blood. But the people need no increase of the army. When the time comes, they will take care of their own interests.

As to the Sun's lament over decreased enlistment and increased desertion from the army, it is fortunately a circumstance to rejoice over. It evidences the fact that the American citizen has not yet fallen a victim to the corrupting jingoism of the Sun which ever claims for an increased army. It proves that the average citizen values his manhood above "governmental policy," and that he abhors the thought of turning professional murderer at the behest of a uniformed ruffian.

May the time come soon when every rational man will look upon war as what it is, wanton murder, and will not merely passively discourage it by his refusal to enlist, but will actively demand the abolition of that barbaric machine of slaughter, the army and navy.

According to the second monthly report of the Public Service Commission, fifty-six persons were killed and one hundred and fifty-two seriously injured by the steam railways and underground, elevated and surface street car lines in Greater New York during the one month of September.

The first report of the Commission, covering the last twenty-six days of August, showed forty-two persons killed and one hundred and forty-seven seriously injured. Taking the eight weeks covered by the two reports this means twelve or thirteen persons killed and nearly ninety injured every week.

Is this wholesale slaughter an unavoidable incident of rapid transit, as the company's officials would have us believe? Berlin, Paris and London statistics prove, however, that transportation in those cities is carried on at a far lesser sacrifice of life than with us.

The lack of adequate equipment, the overworking of employees and the company's absolute disregard of the safety of either passenger or pedestrian are responsible for the murderous record.

An educated public opinion would speedily curb the greediness of the transit companies and reduce the sacrifice of life to a minimum, by holding the traction magnates personally responsible for their criminal negligence.

In England, that classic land of conservative trade unionism, the railway companies refuse to recognize the organization of their employees. The latter's proposal to arbitrate their demands and grievances was scornfully rejected. "We have nothing to arbitrate," said the employers. "We care nothing about your unions."

The employers of England, like the American breed, have gradually come to believe that trade unions have a right to exist only in so far as they enable the exploiters to make greater profits and to keep in check the "impudent pretensions" of labor. According to them, unions should serve as a kind of preventative against higher wages and shorter hours; they should also inculcate in their members the lesson that "the rich and poor you must always have among you," a God-ordained institution, based on a system of perfect economics. Is it any wonder, then, that the exploiters are so sorely disappointed when the workingmen persist—in spite of conservative trade unionism—in their attempts to lighten their heavy burdens.

The scornful attitude of the railway companies of Great Britain may lead to a General Strike of all the railway employees in the kingdom. After all, 'tis the only answer the labor organizations can give to the challenge of their exploiters.

We mourn the loss of two old and faithful soldiers of liberty, Sam Mainwaring and Fermín Salvochea. The former died in London, on the twenty-ninth of September; the latter, one of the most prominent Anarchists of Spain, died at Cadiz.

We shall pay our deceased comrades a deserved tribute in our next issue.

The "Confédération Générale du Travail" of France has resolved to form an International Trade Union Bureau; the labor organization of all countries, favoring revolutionary ideas and methods along syndicalistic lines, are invited to join.

Thus far the following organizations have signified their desire to co-operate: The Labor Federation of Roman Switzerland, the Labor Unions of the Netherlands, the Italian Syndicalists, the Trades Union League of Germany and various labor organizations of England.

An apparently insignificant newspaper item will often reveal the depths of our social misery, unmasking the glittering pretensions of an impotent civilization.

It was recently reported that Valentine Cantral, a young French girl, was sentenced to six months for destroying a picture in the Louvre. Without work or money, she preferred arrest to starvation. Asked for an explanation, she told the judge: "Since I was nine years old I have worked with mamma as a seamstress. Even getting up early, I could only earn fifteen cents a day. How do you expect me to live on fifteen cents a day? It is society that is guilty—the society which condemned me to starvation."

The friendless, hungry girl instinctively felt that she was not a criminal; that there was something wrong with a society which condemned her to starve,—her, that was so willing to work.

She felt all this and in her desperation she spoke out. Dangerous doctrine! No wonder the Cerberus of our perfect society condemned her to prison.

But if he had a spark of humanity in his crooked soul, he must have felt like a guilty criminal before the nobility of the poor girl, who said, simply: "I regret my act because I have learned that the man who painted the picture, like me, also suffered poverty and hardships."

It is characteristic of the capitalistic mind, that all the pathos of the poor girl's fate merely called forth the newspaper comment that "it is feared the girl will have imitators among the miscreants in search of notoriety."

Indeed, the underdogs, the exploited and oppressed are ever the miscreants, the undesirables.

"The third Duma is conservative," triumphantly cries the official Russian press. The journalistic Cossacks seem, however, to leave the revolutionists out of their calculations. The latter will become more active in proportion to the pressure of reaction. The recent assassination of Gen. Maximoffsky, Director of Russian Prisons, is the latest token of that noble self-sacrifice and devotion to liberty that will know no abatement till the savage autocracy is a thing of the past.

Mlle. Ragozinnikova, who joyfully gave her life to free her beloved country from the brutal torturer of political prisoners — Gen. Maximoffsky — beautifully typifies the noble spirit of young Russia, that has consecrated all its energies, yea, its very life, to the service of freedom.

Mlle. Ragozinnikova, whose father is a teacher in the Imperial Conservatory of Music, has long been active in the revolutionary movement of her country. She was an indefatigable and fearless worker. Her devotion and personal courage are the more remarkable in view of the fact that she was well known to the authorities, her portrait in the police gallery being marked "dangerous suspect." In spite of that, however, she presented herself at the weekly reception of Gen. Maximoffsky, demanding an interview. She quietly remained in the crowded anteroom for three hours, unrecognized by the officials. When she was finally admitted to the General's presence, she drew a revolver and relieved the world from a most cruel, inhuman torturer.

The Tsar's bloodhounds quickly devoured the noble victim. But the wondrous spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion to ideals, typified by this martyr of liberty, shall finally triumph over all obstacles, suppression and tyranny.

The good, faithful subjects of the Fatherland stand aghast at the recent revelations concerning the noble-born entourage of the German court, whose shining centre is the Kaiser himself. It appears that his Majesty's most intimate friends have a strong penchant for the charms of—their own sex.

"Public opinion" feels dutifully outraged. How immoral to allow one's self to be so vulgarly exposed.

Maximilian Harden—who is less euphoniously known as Herr Wittkowski and whose life-work it is to guard the purity of the monarchy—could not master his moral indignation. In his magazine, Die Zukunft, he severely and persistently denounced the illustrious pillars of the throne—prompted by his great love for the Fatherland, of course.

Religion, morality and das deutsche Gemüth, so simple and trustful, have sustained a terrible shock. What shall become of the good people's confidence in their government, when its chiefs are unmasked as immoralists!

Something must be quickly done to restore the weakening faith of the terrified herd. We learn that the first practical steps in that direction already have been taken. The authorities lost no time in initiating a campaign of persecution against the Berlin Anarchists. The public must be given fresh proof of the untiring zeal and devotion of the police and government. That will pour oil on the troubled waters.

TO OUR READERS

DEAR FRIENDS:

MOTHER EARTH has not yet proven a paying venture. Those of us who were familiar with the bitter struggle of every outspoken, radical paper knew that MOTHER EARTH would not be exempt from the same fate.

In the July issue we brought a detailed account of receipts and expenditures; also the balance of the Sustaining Fund then amounting to $372.66, which—if we had not been confronted by the summer—would have been something of a capital.

In no country is there such apathy, such indifference and inactivity during the summer months as in America.

I cannot quite account for it (though the heat may have something to do with it), unless it be that radicalism, at best, is by many considered a convenience or sport, but not a necessity. At any rate, the net receipts of the magazine for July, August, September and October amounted to less than $120. The expenditures for the same period came to nearly $700, that is, MOTHER EARTH suffered a monthly deficit of about $145.

Some might consider such a state of affairs discouraging; we do not. We feel that MOTHER EARTH has kept her colors flying in spite of all obstacles. Uncompromising, fearless, barely known, with no sensational advertising lists, no schemes and inducements to buy shares or stock, MOTHER EARTH—which has not dabbled in all sorts of lukewarm reform and oily liberalism, yet was able to weather the storm for nineteen months—must surely possess staying powers which will sooner or later carry her to safe port.

That it may be sooner we appeal to you, friends, for co-operation and assistance.

We reopen the MOTHER EARTH Sustaining Fund, hoping that all those who like the little fighter will contribute at their earliest convenience.

There are many ways of aiding the magazine. For instance, by increasing its circulation: purchasing several copies monthly for missionary work; trying to secure new subscribers, and calling on one's newsdealer for the magazine.

As the magazine will now have a special labor department, our readers who are members of unions could aid our work by circulating the magazine among their fellow workers.

The first part of the coming year I shall begin a tour, for which extensive preparations are now being made in the West. Groups, unions and societies between New York and Denver wishing me to lecture before them will please communicate with me at once, in order that meetings may be arranged more systematically.

In the next issue I shall bring a complete list of subjects that I am now preparing. I shall endeavor to make my tour an educational and financial success, to furnish the sinews of war for MOTHER EARTH. Meanwhile, comrades, it is for you to help with the Sustaining Fund.

"LA RUCHE"

(The Beehive.)

By Emma Goldman.

THE rearing of children—whether in the sense of training or in the sense of free unfoldment—is still causing much dispute. The tendency of the times is to produce uniform and average types. Spontaneity and originality are considered out of date and useless. In fact, the less creative man is, the better his chances in every vocation of life.

The division of labor has never before reached such height, nor has man ever before been so much degraded to a mere machine. The spirit of an Emerson or a Goethe is rare indeed, and impractical for our daily life. The most lamentable quality of modern man is his great capacity for adjustment. His activities are mechanical; his work, instead of liberating him, is riveting his chains still deeper into his flesh. The iron necessity of eking out a living imposes such occupations which are remunerative, though in no way related to his nature or inclinations. The question is not as to what could give the greatest satisfaction or joy; rather is it what gain, what material results can accrue therefrom.

The same spirit actuates the ideals of our times in the rearing and educating of the child. Most parents see in the school, the college and university the medium of profitable positions. They look upon education as a good investment, eagerly awaiting the time when they and their children will reap the dividends.

The idea that the rearing of the child—whether boy or girl—implies a consideration of the individual tendencies, has vanished from the horizon of parents and educators of to-day. No wonder they fail to grasp the importance of free unfoldment and growth.

An attempt to give the child an opportunity for unhampered development is being made in France by Sebastian Faure. The latter became widely known during the high tide of the Dreyfuss campaign. Together with Emile Zola, Anatole France, and Octave Mirbeau, Sebastian Faure fought the corrupt nationalistic and militaristic cliques which were endeavoring to use the Dreyfuss affair to further their own reactionary aims, mindful of Dr. Johnson's remark, that patriotism is the resource of knaves.

Faure is considered the most formidable foe of the reactionists, because of his remarkable oratorical ability. But Faure's particular forte is his opposition to religion and churchism, with which, as an ex-priest, he is thoroughly familiar. Faure might be compared to Robert Ingersoll, except that the ideas of the former are much broader and higher. He did not stop at free thought; but, as Anarchist and educator he is equally uncompromising in his opposition to economic and social iniquities. Faure is a practical idealist—one that applies his theories of a happier future to the immediate regeneration of society.

"La Ruche" is an hour's journey from Paris; it is situated on the outskirts of a village named Rambouillet, a former stronghold of French nobility and now owned by the government, serving as a summer resort of the President.

Two years ago comrade Faure bought the land on which he has built his "Beehive." In that comparatively short time he succeeded to transform the former wild, uncultivated country into a blooming spot, having all the appearances of a prosperous and well-kept farm. A large, square court, enclosed by three buildings, and a broad path leading to the garden and orchards, greet the eye of the visitor. The garden, kept as only a Frenchman knows how, furnishes a large variety of vegetables for the "Hive." Faure is not a faddist; but he believes that fresh vegetables contain more nutrition than meat; the latter is therefore served but once a week at "La Ruche." Nor do they lack fresh vegetables in the winter time, for the large greenhouse is well stocked. Almost anybody would be tempted to turn vegetarian at the sight of the inviting, artistically grouped garden patches. Added to them are an orchard and a flower garden, which further enhance the beauty of "La Ruche."

Sebastian Faure is of the opinion that if the child is subjected to contradictory influences, its development suffers in consequence. Only when the material needs, the hygiene of the home and intellectual environment are harmonious, can the child grow into a healthy, free being.

I had read of "La Ruche" when it was first founded. On my arrival in Paris I wrote comrade Faure that I should very much like to see his venture in operation. I soon received his kind invitation to visit the place, of which I gladly took advantage in the company of a friend.

At the station of Rambouillet we were met by a little woman, the housekeeper and general manager of "La Ruche," who was accompanied by a young girl of about twelve years, very pretty and healthy-looking. After half an hour's ride through the beautiful country, we reached the "Beehive." On the way I was struck with the affectionate relations between my hostess and her little companion, sweet and tender as chums. I soon learned that the same atmosphere prevailed in the entire place.

Comrade Faure, whom I had previously met in 1900, greeted us with simple cordiality, and knowing that we had come to see and to learn, he lost no time in showing us through the place—a rare treat, not easily forgotten.

The cleanliness and beauty of the "Hive" filled us with admiration. Most wonderful of all, however, proved the dormitory and lavatory of children, furnished in the plainest conceivable manner and yet producing a remarkably bright and cheerful effect. The latter was due to the hand-painted wall paper—a labor of love by some of the ablest artists of France. Flowers, plants, birds and animals were grouped in harmonious colors, thus quickening the imagination of the children more effectively than a hundred lessons.

Co-education is still forbidden by the lawmakers of France. It is owing, however, to the great popularity of Faure that the government does not interfere with him, who not only propagates joint education, but also maintains it at "La Ruche." There the boys and girls mingle freely together in class-room, workshop and gymnasium..

The schoolroom lacked the usual awe-inspiring appearance—the children rocking in their chairs, listening to their instructor whom they seemed to regard as one of their own number, telling them an interesting story. Never before had I seen such spontaneous joy as on that September afternoon, when Sebastian Faure led us into the classroom and—with the most serious face—introduced the "American comrades to the comrades of 'La Ruche'," addressing each little tot as Mlle. Janette or Monsieur Henri. No one could remain in doubt as to the affection the children bore Faure.

Naturally, we were very anxious to hear the views of Faure himself, as to his novel undertaking. Among other things he said:

"I have taken twenty-four children of both sexes, mostly orphans or those whose parents are too poor to pay. They are clothed, housed and educated at my expense. Till their twelfth year they will receive a sound elementary education; between the age of twelve and fifteen—their studies still continuing—they are to be taught some trade, in keeping with their individual dispositions and abilities. After that they are at liberty to leave 'La Ruche' to begin life in the outside world, with the assurance that they may at any time return to 'The Hive,' where they shall be received with open arms and welcomed as parents do their beloved children. Then, if they wish to work at our place, they may do so under the following conditions: One-third of the product to cover the expenses of his or her maintenance, another third to go towards the general fund set aside for accommodating new children, and the last third to be devoted to the personal use of the child, as he or she may see fit.

"The health of the children who are now in my care is perfect. Pure air, nutritious food, physical exercise in the open, long walks, observation of hygienic rules, the short and interesting method of instruction and, above all, our affectionate understanding and care of the children have produced admirable physical and mental results.

"It would be unjust to claim that the children have accomplished wonders; yet, considering that they belong to the average, having had no previous opportunities, the results are gratifying indeed. The most important thing they have acquired—a rare trait with ordinary school children—is the love of study, the desire to know, to be informed. They have learned a new method of work—one that quickens the memory and stimulates the imagination. We make a particular effort to awaken the child's interest in his surroundings, to make him realize the importance of observation, investigation and reflection, so that when the children reach maturity, they should not be deaf and blind to the things about them. Our children never accept anything in blind faith, without inquiry as to why and wherefore; nor do they feel satisfied until their questions are thoroughly answered. Thus their minds are free from doubts and fear resultant from incomplete or untruthful replies; it is the latter which warp the growth of the child and create a lack of confidence in himself and those about him."

I asked comrade Faure what the relations of the children were among themselves and how they treated each other.

Faure replied: "It is surprising how frank, kind and affectionate the children are to each other. The harmony between themselves and the adults at 'La Ruche' is highly encouraging. We should feel at fault were the children to fear or honor us merely because we are their elders. We leave nothing undone to gain their confidence and love; that accomplished, understanding will replace duty; confidence, fear; and affection, sternness.

"No one has yet fully realized the wealth of sympathy, kindness and generosity hidden in the soul of the child. The effort of every true educator should be to unlock that treasure—to stimulate the child's impulses and call forth the best and noblest tendencies. What greater reward can there be for one whose life-work is to watch over the growth of the human plant, than to see its nature unfold its petals and to observe it develop into a true individuality. My comrades at 'The Beehive' look for no grander reward, and it is due to them and their efforts, even more than my own, that our human garden promises to bear beautiful fruit."

Referring to the subject of history and the prevailing old methods of instruction, I asked comrade Faure how that subject is being taught at "The Hive."

He replied, simply: "We explain to our children that true history is yet to be written—the story of those who have died unknown in the effort to aid humanity to greater achievement."

The comrades associated with Sebastian Faure are so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the place that everything continues in the same harmonious way, though he, himself, is absent the greater part of the year on lecture tours. The latter serve the double purpose of education and raising funds for "La Ruche," forty thousand francs having been raised during the two years of "The Hive's" existence. Comrade Faure hopes to earn this winter a sufficient sum to liquidate the amount still due on "La Ruche." That done, the venture will become self-supporting, enabling Faure to enlarge his family.

Our visit to "La Ruche" was most interesting and instructive, and we regretted that time did not permit us to prolong our visit.

We were driven to the station by the friend who had met us on our arrival. She proved to be not only a kind and lovable person, but also a highly intelligent woman with great independence of character. Being too early for our train, we were asked to have a drive through the famous Rambouillet woods, passing the palace where the French President, M. Fallières, was spending the summer.

How forcibly the place contrasted with "La Ruche"! The latter, an attempt at a new life, new human beings, new habits. Rambouillet, representing the decayed pillars of old and tottering institutions. What a contrast!

Sebastian Faure calls his attempt a work of "education and solidarity." May it prosper and serve as a noble example for others to follow. In a world of sham, hypocrisy and misery, is there any grander work than the rearing of new men and women?

"THE BIRDS"—CHILDREN'S NURSERY

SUCH is the name of the first institution to be established for the taking care, nursing and rearing of children of radical mothers—mothers who are compelled to work for a living and to provide for their children. It was easy, exceedingly easy, for Anarchist and Socialist speakers to rant against the slavery of marriage and to advise the young to remain independent, at least from the bondage of matrimony. But when the speakers were taken seriously, and the consequences of such "independence" were to be faced, then the young and inexperienced mother found herself forsaken, especially if she had character enough not to be dominated by the so-called father of the child. Neither did she find much sympathy among the comrades; the spirit of solidarity, which she had heard hailed so often as a particular virtue of her radical co-workers, found no application in her case, although she was willing to pay for the aid to be rendered. Thus she was forced to take refuge in bourgeois institutions, which she was taught to hate and shun like poison.

Tragedies of this kind there have been many, and many of us could not help but feel ashamed of the lack of fraternal feeling and mutual aid among ourselves, and all of us ought to rejoice that comrade Noémie Racovici and other children's friends have taken the initiative to found a nursery for the children of radical working women. But the initiators are poor themselves, and so ask for the co-operation of all those who believe that much could be done to make life more pleasant and more comfortable right here and now, without waiting for the "day of judgment"—the Social Revolution.

The intention is to make the nursery self-supporting, but a little material help is needed for the beginning, and so a concert and ball has been arranged, the proceeds of which are to be used for the benefit of the projected nursery.

The ball takes place November 22, 8 p. m., at Apollo Hall, Clinton street, and I hope that all those radicals who believe in self-help will encourage the undertaking by their presence.*

TRADE UNIONISM AND ANARCHISM

(A Letter to a Brother Unionist.)

Dear Friend and Brother:

In your letter, just to hand, you ask me if I know what Anarchism has to do with trade unionism. You write that many members of your local union are professed Anarchists; that these men are deeply interested in strengthening the union, that they are active and alert, and are possessed of more than ordinary enthusiasm in furthering the cause of unionism. You seem at a loss to understand this, and ask me if I can give you an explanation of it.

If I were to say that trade unionism and Anarchism are both striving to solve the same problem, it would not be sufficient. You would still want to know how they can be reconciled in their propagandas. So, in order to understand their relation to one another, it is necessary to understand each in its relation to the problem that

* We heartily favor the project of a nursery for the children of radical mothers. We regret, however, that the founders of the nursery have arranged their ball for the same date on which the MOTHER EARTH semi-annual reunion is to take place. It was very thoughtless, to say the least.—Ed.

hundreds and maimed to thousands, while their work entails a nervous and physical strain which is rewarded by wages that in many cases are shameful and in the best of cases are inadequate, as wages always are. The great British public has been told of all this year after year. Has it cared? Not much. Has it called indignation meetings against the conduct of the directors? Not once. It has simply been indifferent. Very well then, no public in the world, British or other, has any right to consideration from men who slave under such conditions. Let them learn by hard experience how much they owe to those who day by day risk life and limb for their convenience.

EMMA GOLDMAN'S LECTURE.

An eager, expectant audience filled the Holborn Town Hall on October 7 to hear our comrade Emma Goldman lecture on "The Labour Struggle in America." A charge of sixpence for admission did not deter them. The gallery, which was free, was filled some time before the lecture was to begin. At the Press table quite a crowd of reporters were waiting. Prompt as the clock chimed 8 the chairman, John Turner, led the way on to the platform, followed by our comrade. A word or two of introduction, in which it was pointed out that few people were better qualified to speak on the subject of the American Labour Movement than our comrade, as she had just completed a tour of the States before leaving for the Anarchist Congress at Amsterdam, and the lecturer was on her feet. For about an hour she held her audience interested. Starting by saying that America not only attracted the emigrants from Europe who desired political freedom, but almost entirely those who went there for material gain, she pointed out that almost the entire outlook was a sordid one. The only exception was the Russian refugee fleeing from the Black Hundreds, the pogroms, as well as the tortures of the cowardly and bloody Czardom.

The growth of the American Federation of Labour was dealt with, and the recent scholy alliance of it with the Trust bosses, through the Civic Federation, touched on. Then the more robust spirit of the Western States was pointed out, and the revolutionary attitude of the Western Federation of Miners portrayed. The explanation of the non-conviction of Haywood was for life and startling. "It was openly said," that the State authorities had not got the human machine ready to carry out the wishes of the mining and other capitalists of that part of America. They had the judges, the lawyers, the policemen, the gaolers, the executioners, all ready to do their foul deeds as they did it in Chicago in 1887. The reason Haywood was acquitted was that the jury knew right well that the Western Miners thoroughly understood how to handle and use dynamite."

The American workers, who were very quick, were beginning to show dissatisfaction with the tactics of Gompers and Mitchell. If the Industrial Workers of the World had kept out of politics, it might have become a powerful body. Any new organisation to succeed must certainly do so. Once the real solidarity of Labour was understood, and the General Strike made a principle of economic warfare, the Labour Struggle in America would sweep everything before it.

At the close of the lecture a large number of questions were asked, and splendidly answered by our comrade. It is very satisfactory to report that there was a surplus after paying all expenses.

As it was announced that other lectures would probably be given by Emma Goldman in London and the provinces, a word of explanation is necessary to the many applicants for her services. It seems that the publication of Mother Earth, and other matters in America, made it imperative for her to return after a few days' rest. This was not known till the receipt of the U.S. mail. Disappointment at this is tempered by the pleasure at the success of the Amsterdam Congress, and the anticipation of the revival of Anarchist propaganda.

Resoconto generale del Congresso Anarchico di Amsterdam

24-31 Agosto 1907

Ricevimento dei delegati.

(24 AGOSTO)

Il 24 agosto a sera in una riunione privata si festeggiò l'arrivo dei delegati anarchici, venuti da tutte le parti d'Europa e dall'America. Fu una festa tutta intima e cordiale, di cui però non posso dare resoconto, non avendovi assistito, e non ossendomi curato di domandarne troppo. La sua scarsa importanza per ciò che riguarda il congresso, me ne assolve.

Del resto molti delegati, specialmente francesi e italiani, non erano ancora giunti.

Il compagno olandese Samaon disse alcune parole di saluto ai convenuti.

L'apertura del Congresso Comizio d'inaugurazione.

(25 AGOSTO)

Nel pomeriggio di domenica 25 agosto la grande sala terrena e il giardino attiguo del teatro « Plancius » di Amstordam (Plantage Kerklaan 61) contenevano circa duemila persone, per assistere all'apertura del Congresso Anarchico Internazionale.

Eran presenti un continuo di congressisti, delegati di gruppi e federazioni o aderenti individualmente. Altri congressisti, poi, giunsero l'indomani ed il 27 successivo. Molto numerosi erano i tedeschi e gli olandesi; era presente una discreta rappresentanza francese, belga, russa, boema, italiana e inglese. Rappresentata da molti compagni era la colonia anarchica straniera di Londra, fra cui alcuni italiani; ed erano presenti delegati, benchè in minor numero, venuti dagli Stati Uniti, dalla Polonia, dalla Bulgaria, dalla Serbia, dalla Svezia e dalla Rumenia.

Erano attesi anche F. Tarrida del Marmol, delegato di molti gruppi di Spagna, e il compagno cinese Tsanmin: ma il primo fu impedito di partire per Amsterdam da questioni più urgenti, ed il secondo fu trattenuto a Parigi dalla malattia della sua sposa. Il rappresentante della Repubblica Argentina Aristide Ceccarelli non era ancora giunto, ma giunse il posdomani insieme ad altri rappresentanti d'Italia, di Francia e di altri paesi.

Le organizzazioni anarchiche rappresentate regolarmente, e aderenti al Congresso erano: Federazione dei Comunisti Libertari di Olanda, Federazione Comunisti Libertari del Belgio, Federazione Anarchica tedesca di Germania, Federazione Anarchica di Boemia, Federazione degli anarchici di lingua ebrea di Londra, Federazione socialista anarchica della Svizzera Francese, Federazione socialista anarchica del Lazio (Italia), alcuni Gruppi anarchici di Parigi e del Passo di Calais, qualche sindacato operaio della Boemia o della Repubblica Argentina, ed altri gruppi di Austria, Stati Uniti, Russia, Inghilterra, ecc.

Per ciò che riguarda l'Italia, oltre la Federazione Socialista Anarchica del Lazio, eran rappresentati parecchi gruppi di Ancona, ed altri di italiani residenti a Buenos Aires, a Paterson, Filadelfia, New York, Tampa, Londra. Errico Malatesta era stato delegato dal precedente Congresso Anarchico Italiano del giugno, in Roma.

Adesioni e rappresentanze eran pervenute o pervennero poi da moltissime redazioni dei giornali anarchici di tutto il mondo; al completo quella della stampa anarchica tedesca; di quella italiana eran rappresentati: la rivista Il Pensiero di Roma, La Gioventù Libertaria di Roma, La Vita Operaia di Ancona, La Questione Sociale di Paterson, Il Risveglio di Ginevra.

Vanno contate fra le adesioni, anche quelle pervenute in iscritto o per telegrafo, da altri paesi ove i compagni non han potuto sopperire alle spese per l'invio d'un rappresentante, come per esempio il Brasile, il Portogallo, l'Egitto, la Galizia, Cuba.

Era aspettato anche il compagno John Turner (membro influente dello Trades-Unions d'Inghiltorra); ma sapemmo che non sarebbe potuto venire, perchè trattenuto da un congresso corporativo a Stoccarda.

Parecchie donne sono fra i congressisti, specialmente olandesi, russe o tedesche. Molto festeggiata è la compagna Emma Goldmann, redattrice della rivista Mother Earth (New York), venuta appositamente dagli Stati Uniti.

La folla, naturalmente olandese nella maggior parte, di tutto il comizio aspetta l'inizio dei discorsi cantando inni rivoluzionari, specialmente l'Internazionale.

Sale alla tribuna il dott. R. Friedeberg di Berlino, un recente fuoriscito dal partito socialista tedesco, che sopratutto critica la forza apparente dalla social-democrazia tedesca, che ha adottato come metodo unico di lotta il parlamentarismo, cui bisogna opporre l'azione diretta e la propaganda dello sciopero generale rivoluzionario.

E. Malatesta saluta i compagni olandesi, e svolge il concetto che gli anarchici e i rivoluzionarii in genere devono contare unicamente sulle proprio forze per l'emancipazione di tutti gli oppressi e per lo sviluppo del progresso, il quale non può essere reale se non quando saranno caduti per forza di popolo tutte le dominazioni politiche, economiche e religiose.

R. De Marmande, francese, evoca il fallimento completo della conferenza diplomatica della pace all'Aia e del congresso social-democratico internazionale a Stoccarda. Solo gli anarchici e i sindacalisti sono una forza viva, padrona dell'avvenire, come lo provano le persecuzioni che contro essi si scatenano nella borghese Repubblica Francese, con danno di tutta la classe operaia. Nel momento attuale un congresso anarchico era necessario per la chiarezza delle idee e per stabilire fra i libertari un accordo internazionale.

Pierre Ramus, di Londra, parla anche egli del Congresso di Stoccarda, a cui il congresso di Amsterdam suona ammonimento. La causa della rivolnzione è stata disertata dai socialisti, mentre gli anarchici le son restati fedeli. Ripeto una frase oltraggiosa contro l'anarchismo del deputato olandese P. J. Troelstra, per rovesciarne i termini, e finisce il suo discorso al grido di: Viva l'anarchia!

Rogdaeff russo, parla sopratutto della rivoluzione che scuote il suo paese e della parte che vi prendono gli anarchici. I gruppi anarchici in Russia cercano in tutti i modi che la rivoluzione non sia deviata dai politicanti, che vorrebbero una rivoluzione a scartamento ridotto solo per avere un governo costituzionale. Gli anarchici in Russia cercano di attuare la rivoluzione nel campo economico, e ci riescono; prova ne è che i metodi degli anarchici sono apprezzati e messi in opera in Russia non dagli anarchici soltanto. Finisce, assicurando i lavoratori rivoluzionari di tutti i paesi della solidarietà completa da parte dei rivoluzionari di Russia.

Emma Goldmann (Stati Uniti), narra i progressi dell'anarchismo nell'America del Nord. Le nostre idee vi guadagnano sempre più piede. Critica anche lei la democrazia borghese o quella socialista, che sono un pericolo per il proletariato. Si augura che dal congresso possa uscire qualche cosa di buono per la causa rivoluzionaria, per la libertà, per l'anarchia.

E. Chapelier, del Belgio, non farà una conferenza, e spera che anche il congresso anarchico sfugga al doppio pericolo di essere una serie di inutili conferenze, oppure un qualche cosa di burocratico. Si scaglia contro il militarismo, e contro lo spirito militaresco dominante nei partiti autoritarii.

Peter Munjits, della Serbia, narra le condizioni miserande dei paesi Balcanici; specialmente della Macedonia. In Serbia c'è anche una social-democrazia piuttosto forte, ma che non è di alcuna utilità al proletariato. Saluta il sorgere dell'Internazionale Libertaria.

Karel Vohryzek, della Boemia, si augura anch'egli che il sorgere della nuova Internazionale sia presto un fatto compiuto.

Paul Frauböse, di Berlino dice che gli anarchici di Germania han voluto organizzarsi nella Federazione Anarchica Tedesca, perchè nell'organizzazione han veduto un mezzo di più per combattere energicamente la borghesia. Perciò egli e i suoi amici sono favorevoli all'idea dell'Internazionale libertaria.

Chr. Cornelissen, olandese, chiude il comizio, felicitandosi che l'Olanda libertaria sia la prima ad ospitare un congresso di anarchici, indipendente dalla social-democrazia. Ricorda un episodio dell'antica Internazionale, raccontato da Guillaume, e cioè il ricevimento in Olanda di altri congressisti, al congresso dell'Aia nel 1872, quando i seguaci di Bakounine s'incontrarono la prima volta coi socialisti di Amsterdam. Fin da allora Guillaume notò lo spirito olandese refrattario alle velleità centralizzatrici. L'oratore si augura che anche ora i congressisti, dal contatto con i compagni olandesi, riportino la medesima impressione.

— Si toglie la seduta, che è rimandata all'indomani, in cui cominceranno le discussioni.

Il Congresso — Una mozione d'ordine — Rapporti sul movimento anarchico internazionale.

(26 AGOSTO)

Seduta antimeridiana.

La seduta si apre alle 9 del mattino. E' nominato presidente, per regolare la discussione, il compagno Henri Fuss-Amoré, del Belgio.

Si passano in rassegna per nazionalità i congressisti, rappresentanti di gruppi o aderenti individualmente, per evitare che si intromettano fra essi persone non conosciute o sospette.

F. Domelà Nieuwenhuis solleva un incidente. Egli dice che il prossimo 30 agosto deve tenersi in Amsterdam un Congresso Antimilitarista; e propone perciò ai compagni che la parte dell'ordine del giorno che riguarda l'antimilitarismo sia discussa, tutti insieme, al Congresso Antimilitarista, con cui il 30 il Congresso Anarchico dovrebbe fondersi.

Friedeberg, Ramus, Baginski, Goldmann appoggiano la proposta di Domela.

Malatesta si oppone, dicendo che, o al congresso antimilitarista interverranno tutti anarchici, e allora è inutile fare un congreso a parte; oppure, come è preveduto, ci saranno anche elementi non anarchici, e allora gli anarchici devono prima fra loro intendersi e discutere su che cosa intendono per antimilitarismo, e poi, se mai, andare al congresso antimilitarista a sostenere le idee anarchiche sulla questione. Egli propone semplicemente il passaggio all'ordine del giorno.

De Marmande, Thonar, Chapelier ed altri si associano a Malatesta.

La discussione si fa un po' vivace, ma poi il passaggio all'ordine del giorno è approvato con 37 voti contro 33 e una ventina di astensioni.

Seduta pomeridiana

— Nella seduta pomeridiana, dalle 14 allo 20, si fa lettura dei rapporti inviati. Alcuni ne son fatti brevemente a viva voce, altri ne sono distribuiti, stampati in giornali o in opuscoli (1).

Georges Thonar di Liegi espone la situazione del movimento nostro nel Belgio. Vi esiste una organizzazione. La Federazione Comunista Libertaria, fondata dal 1905, per propagare le idee comuniste anarchiche con tutti i mezzi orali e scritti. Questa organizzazione che unisce la maggior parte dei militanti anarchici del Belgio, è costituita da sezioni in cui si ritrovano i compagni d'una stessa città o d'una stessa regione. Ogni membro è autonomo nella sezione, ogni sezione è autonoma nella federazione. Le idee della federazione sono esposte in una dichiarazione di principii adottata all'unanimità al congresso anarchico belga di Charleroi nel 1904. I gruppi più attivi sono quelli di Liegi, Court S. Etienne, Flemolle, Charleroi e qualche altro.

La stampa vi è un po' irregolare; ma in cambio di giornali ci pubblicano parecchi opuscoli di propaganda.

Oltre la Federazione, esisto una colonia libertaria a Boitsfort che pubblica un piccolo giornale (Le Communiste); si pubblica anche ad Anversa una rivista anarchica in lingua fiamminga (Ontwaking).

Vohryzek (Boemia): Il movimento anarchico ceco è, ad eccezione forse di quello francese e spagnuolo, il più diffuso. Parte dei compagni erano in principio contro ogni organizzazione, ma le idee in proposito si sono schiarite a favore dell'organizzazione, che esisto ora da non meno di quattro anni. In questo momento disponiamo di otto fogli, che si pubblicano quasi tutti regolarmente. Tra altri abbiamo il Komuna e Der arme Teufel (Il povero Diavolo). Quest'ultimo ha una tiratura di 12.000 copie e si rivolge a la gran massa. Causa la difficoltà di trovare dei traduttori per la nostra lingua, all'estero si sa ben poco di noi. La maggior influenza la esercitiamo fra i minatori e i tessitori della Boemia settentrionale, ciò che riesce qualche volta sgradevole ai socialisti. Che facciamo una propaganda intensa è dimostrato puro dal fatto, che abbiamo pubblicato finora una trentina di opuscoli: fra altro « Der soziale Generalstreik » (Lo sciopero generale sociale) in 50.000 copie. Quasi tutti gli opuscoli sono esauriti e dobbiamo quindi pensare alla ristampa.

Samson, olandese, fa notare l'attività della "Federazione comunista libertaria„ dell'Olanda, per cui iniziativa il congresso si è fatto. L'organo della federazione è il giornale De Vrije Communist; e a cura della stessa è stato pubblicato ultimamente un almanacco illustrato di propaganda, da cui può desumersi, per le notizie che vi son raccolte, tutta l'attività degli anarchici olandesi. Oltre al giornale suddetto, si pubblicano in Olanda altri sette periodici anarchici, ed uno sindacalista. Ad Amsterdam poi esce un giornale quotidiano, Het Volksdagblad, con forti tendenze anarchiche e sindacaliste. Fra i sindacati operai olandesi ce ne sono molti in mezzo a cui le idee anarchiche godono pronunciata simpatia. I sindacati dell'Aja da quando si sono separati dai parlamentaristi sono cresciuti in potenza.

Ci sono poi in Olanda anche dei gruppi di anarchici

(1) Fra questi si distribuì il rapporto su l'Organizzazione Anarchica, in italiano, del compagno Luigi Fabbri (che giunse l'indomani), per conto di alcuni gruppi di Roma e degli Stati Uniti.

umanitari-cristiani, ma questi non hanno influenza nel movimento. (Risa nell'assemblea).

Rijnders, olandese, fa qualche osservazione al rapporto di Samsou, completandolo, aggiungendo altro notizio sul movimento che si esplica anche fuori della Federazioue.

Amedée Dunois, delegato della « Federazioue Socialista Anarchica » della Svizzera francese espone la situazione del movimento libertario nella regione romanda, che fu culla dell'anarchismo, con la Federazione del Ginra.

La Federazione della Svizzera romanda è sorta il 9 decembre 1906 iu un congreseo tenuto all'uopo. Esea ha fatto couoscere pubblicamente i suoi propositi con un manifesto ai lavoratori, in cui ei contiene uoa dichiarazioue di priucipii (copie di questo manifestn furon distribuite fra i congressisti). Adesioni sono perveuut» da quasi tutti i cantoui di lingua francese: Vaud, Neuchâtel, Ginra bernese, Valais, Giuevra. Per organo della Federazione è stato scelto Il Risveglio che ei pubblica a metà in lingua francese, e a metà in italiano, in Ginevra.

Da un po' di tempo la Svizzera francese conta un serio movimeuto sindacalieta rivolnzionerio, a cui prendono parto attiva i noetri compagni. Esso ha per organo La Voix du Peuple di Losanna, redatto a guisa dell'altro dello stesso nome di Parigi. Inutile dire che questo movimento sindacalista è osteggiato accanitamento dai social-democratici, epecialmente di lingna tedesca.

I compagni anarchici dei gruppi organizzati iu Svizzera aderiscono all'idea di una Internazionale Libertaria.

Max Baginski di New York, a proposito della Repubblica degli Stati Uniti d'America, nota che la lotta di classe è più vivace che mai nelle repubbliche borghesi. Perciò gli anarchici vi dovrebbero epiegare una maggiore attività. L'oratore fa un rapido cenno dello sviluppo dell'anarchismo dal 1833 in poi, parlando della tragedia di Chicago del 1886-87, dell'opera di varii compagni propagandisti, fra cui Emma Goldmann, Alessandro Berkmann, Giovanni Most. Accenna anche all'attività del gruppo della Questione Sociale di Paterson, e iu genere dei compagni italiani. A proposito di Czolgosz, ne magnifica l'atto, che qualifica « una esplosione dell'anima oppressa ». Ricorda che l'attentato contro Mac Kinloy segnò il puuto di partenza d'un nuovo movimento rivoluzionario, e d'una orientazione eignificativa dei lavoratori verso l'azione diretta, e lo eciopero generale.

Emma Goldmann si diffoude sopratutto a parlare del movimento attuale anarchico negli Stati Uniti, che è costituito da compagni di molte uazionalità, tedeschi, russi, italiani e per fino armeni e giapponesi. I giapponesi, che abbondano sopratutto iu California, uostrano speciali simpatie per le dottrine anarchiche. Gli anarchici ebrei sono organizzati in federazione in modo stabile; essi hanno raccolto molto danaro in America per la rivolnzione russa. Negli Stati Uniti si pubblicano presentemente tredici giornali anarchici, di cui qnattro in lingua inglese (compreso Liberty, l'organo individnalista del Tucker), cinque in lingua tedesca, uno in czeco, uno in ebraico, e dne in italinno: La Questione Sociale di Paterson e la Cronaca Sovversiva di Barre. Accenuando al movimento operaio, nota che la classe operaia comincia a orientarsi verso il sindacalismo, contro il vecchio tradnnionismo; e porta ad esempio la Western Federation of Miners e le sue lotte contro i capitalisti e il governo del Colorado, durante gli nltimi scioperi, in cui l'azione diretta fu cosi energicamente esercitata. La gioventù americana delle classi medie è poi in special modo portata verso le dottrine anarchiche.

Pierre Ramus di Londra, ma delegato anche dai compagni di Vienna dice brevemento le ragioni per cui il movimeuto anarchico di lingna tedesca una volta fiorente nella capitale austriaca si è andato pressochè estiugnendo. Ciò è stato per due canse: la perseccuzioue poliziesca e le calunnie della dèmocrazia sociale. E' a deplorarsi però anche il fatto che gli attacchi degli anarchici contro la democrazia sociale uon sempre hanno avuto moventi onesti.

Per qneeta ragione l'appellativo di « Socialismo libertario » è etato compromesso agli occhi della massa per opera d'individui che tutto sono fuorchè socialisti liberari. Aggiungesi poi che tutti i compagni capaci di scrivere e parlare per la causa sono tostn espulsi da Vienna, e ei avrà uu'idea dello etato del movimeuto. Torna nondimeno grato di rilevare un nascente risveglio del movimento per opera di alcnni attivi compagni i quali si propougoao di dáro in breve alla luco un organo quindicinale rispecchiante le nostre idee.

— Il presidente comunica che sono giunti da Ginevra (Svizzera) e da Essen (Germania) anguri telegrafici.

Si è deciso poi di continuare a trattare l'ordine del giorno del Congresso, per quanto sarà possibile, nelle assemblee serali perchè le discussioni del Congresso sono ralleutate di molto a causa delle traduzioni che si debbon fare sempre iu tre lingne: olandese, francese e tedesco.

Seduta notturna

Rudolf Lange, di Berlino, espone che in Germania si pubblicano 4 giornali anarchici, dei quali 3 settimanali ed uno mensile.

Oltro di ciò esiste ancora una rivista mensile a Berlino « Die freie Geuceration » (La gener. zione libera). Gli altri giornali sono: « Der freie Arbeiter », (L'operaio libero) settimanale, a Berlino, « Der Revolutionär » (Il Rivoluzionario) settimanale, a Berlino, « Dio Erkenntuis » (La coscienza), settimanale, a Mannheim, e « Der Anarchist » (L'anarchico) mensile, a Berlino. Poi il movimento anarchico in Germania dispone di una qnantità considerevole di opnscoli, che è molto utile. I compagni in Germania fanno parte quasi tutti della Federazione anarchica, e c'è la sicura speranza, che anche gli altri vi entreranno fra poco.

Schapiro (Russia): Si può dire che in Rnseia esistono una cinquantina di associazioni, in parte molto variabili e fluttuanti. Le condizioni sono tali che talvolta occorre sciogliere un gruppo per rifondarlo poco tempo dopo. Perfino nell'esercito ci sono dei gruppi anarchici.

Munijts (Serbia). Abbiamo tentato parecchie volte di pubblicare un giornale regolare anarchico, ma le uostre condizioni finanziarie molto difficili ci costringevano sempre a smettere l'impresa.

Nondimeno penseremo di far un altro tentativo, sicuri oramai di essere iu qualche modo appoggiati dai compagni di tutti gli altri paesi.

Malatesta (Italia): Il uostro movimento è forte nell'Italia settentrionale e centrale, meno sviluppato nel Sud. Il socialismo italinno è propriamente sul modello germanico ed è per ciò escluso che possa esercitare una grande influenza sugli operai, perchè il proletariato italiano ebbe sempre una inclinazione maggiore per l'azione rivolnzionaria.

Karl Walter di Londra per ciò che riguarda l'Inghilterra nou dà notizie troppo confortanti. Un vero o proprio movimento anarchico non si può dire ci sia. Ma l'attività dei piccoli gruppi anarchici esistenti è molta, o la loro influenza in rapporto al numero dei propri membri è considerevole. Gli anarchici operai son quasi tutti iscritti nelle Trades-Unions, ma vi esercitano poca influenza, all'infuori di qualcnno. Non esiste in Inghilterra neppure un movimento sindacalista rivoluzionario; eolo in questi ultimi tempi si è cercato fare qualche cosa in questo senso, e il giornale Voice of Labor redatto da compagni ne è l'interprete. A Londra si pubblica un altro gloruale anarchico, il Freedom, che tira 2000 esemplari. Esiste anche una piccola Federazione anarchica di otto gruppi.

— Dopo aver dato lettnra a varii telegrammi e lettere di adesione pervenute dall'Italia e dall'Inghilterra, la seduta è tolta. — Si decide che per risparmio di epesa e di tempo non ei pubblichi il bollettino quotidiano del congresso.

Discussione sull'Organizzazione Anarchica.

(27 AGOSTO)

Seduta antimeridiana.

Alle 9 si apre la seduta. Presiede Lange Rudolf, direttore del Der Anarchist di Berlino.

Per accordi presi, si pospone l'ordine, del giorno e si comincia a discutere il tema « anarchismo e organizzazione ». Ha la parola il relatore.

Amedée Dunois: Non è lontano il tempo in cui la maggioranza dei nostri compagni orano nemici ad ogni idea di organizzazione, e i compagni che ne avessero trattato sarebbero stati tacciati di mone retrograde e autoritario. Era il tempo in cui gli anarchici se ne stavano isolati gli uni dagli altri o più isolati ancora dalla classe operaia. L'anarchismo poteva apparire allora come lo sviluppo massimo del vecchio individualismo borghese. L'azione individnale, l'iniziativa individuale dovevano bastare a tutto: ei applaudiva il Nemico del Popolo, che dicbiarava che l'uomo isolato è il più forte di tutti.

Si dimenticava allora una cosa: che le idee di Ibsen non furono mai quelle di un rivoluzionario nel nostro senso della parola, ma di un moralista che vnol fondare una élite intellettuale e morale in seno stesso alla vecchia società.

Si trascuravano allora generalmente le questioni concreto dolla vita economica; e alcuni giungevano fino a negare il fenomeno della lotta di classe, per cui la società attuale si divideva solo per l'antagonismo delle varie opinioni; cosicchè la propaganda anarchica non aveva altro scopo che quello di proparar l'individuo alla discussione teorica. Questa tendenza potè essere utile come protesta contro l'opportunismo degli autoritari o dei social democratici. Benchè, anche noi combattere i social democratici qualche volta ci sia proceduto un po' troppo settariamente, a distruggere tutto ciò che quelli facevano, ed inalzare tutto ciò che quelli combattevano.

Così è avvenuto che molti anarchici perdettero di vista il carattere essenzialmente pratico e operaio del socialismo in generale o dell'anarchismo in particolare.

Così è avvenuto che gli anarchici sono ritornati indietro verso quell'idealismo filosofico che Marx ha così ben combattuto nel Manifesto dei Comunisti. Questo stato d'animo ha prodotto in gran parte l'assenza di un movimento a archico organico e coerente.

Ma da un po' di tempo il movimento ha preso un'altra piega. In Inghilterra, nel Belgio, in Olanda, in Germania, in Boemia, nella Svizzera ed in Italia sono sorte piccole organizzazioni permanenti; e anche in Francia il bisogno di organizzarsi comincia a farsi sentire. Questa evoluzione si deve allo stato di spirito e alle tendenze pratiche degli anarchici da circa otto anni a questa parte.

La partecipazione degli anarchici al movimento operaio ha tolta la distanza che li seperava dalla realtà vivente. Una prova ne è l'azione anarchica in seno al movimento sindacale ed antimilitarista.

Ciò ha avuto anche un altro risultato: l'anarchismo teorico ei è anch'esso ritempratn al contatto della realtà, fonte eterna di pensiero. L'anarchismo non è più solo per noi una concezione generale del mondo, un ideale d'esistenza, una ribellione dello spirito contro tutto ciò che è laido, impuro e bestiale nella vita; ora è innanzi tutto una teoria rivoluzionaria, un programma concreto di distruzione o di ricostruzione sociale. Dunque, è dal punto di vista dell'anarchismo rivoluzionario che bisogna giudicare la questione dell'organizzazione anarchica.

Gli avversari dell'organizzazione sono di due specie. I primi sono gli individualisti, che rieelgono a Rousseau, dicendo che la società é un male, essendo sempre una limitazione dell'indipendenza dell'individuo. Ma storicamente, teoricamente e logicamente l'anarchismo non è affatto l'individualismo in questo senso. Storicamente l'anarchia è lo evilnppo del socialism, prodottosi in seno all'Internazionale Teoricamente anarchia significa società organizzata senza autorità politiche. L'anarchismo non è individualista, ma federalista; io definisi l'anerchismo come il federnlismo integrale, l'estensione universale dell'idea di libero contratto. Che cos'è dunque l'organizzazione degli anarchici se non una libera federazione basata sulla completa autonomia dei suoi membri?

Gli altri avversari dell'organizzazione sono i partigiani dell'orgnnizzazione operaia, fondata sull'identità degli interessi, ma ostili ad ogni organizzazione fondata su identità di aspirazioni e di sentimenti. Essi obiettano che il campo d'azione degli anarchici è troppo limitato e tende a separare i militanti dal popolo facendone degli ideologi.

A me sembra che le obiezioni degli uni e degli altri non intacchino punto l'idea dell'organizzazione. Ai primi rispondiamo che col mescolarci all'azione e con l'organizzarci non rinunciamo alla nostra funzione di educatori e di ribelli contro ogni autorità esteriore; ai secondi osserviamo che noi vogliamo costituire, non una chiesnola separata dal proletariato militante, ma anzi la sua frazione più avanzata, più audace e più emancipata, unita sempre a lui, con lui solidale, a combattere nelle sue file la stessa battaglia, a difenderlo dei snoi nemici esterni ed interni. In altri termini noi vorremmo fornire al proletariato moderno ciò che di per se stesso non avrebbe: uno scopo finale e dei mezzi d'azione, per conferire all'azione sindacale rivoluzionaria il massimo di forza e di continuità.

Di più i gruppi anarchici debbono esercitare anche una funzione loro propria. Mi spiego. La rivoluzione sociale, sia sciopero generale che insurrezione armata, sarà opera della massa; ma poichè ogni movimento di masse ha bisogno di atti, che per il loro carattere specifico non possono essere fatti che da un piccolo nnmero più ardito e sicuro, saranno gli anarchici organizzati che costituiranno questa minoranza di azione rivoluzionaria. In ogni quartiere, comune, provincia, i nostri gruppi formeranno, in periodo rivoluzionario tante piccole organizzazioni di combattimento, destinate a compiere fatti speciali o delicati a cui la gran massa è quasi sempre inabile. Del resto anche in seno al movimento operaio odierno gli anarchici organizzati potrebbero influire potentemente come speciali gruppi di azione, che senza compromettere le organizzazioni sindacali generali, le aintassero nei momenti di crisi in cui c'è bisogno di azione e di sacrificio.

Infine, l'obiettivo regolare e continuo dei nostri gruppi, quello che dovrebbe dare il carattere all'insieme delle nostre organizzazioni, è di fare la propaganda anarchica secondo le uostre proprie concezioni teoriche, i nostri metodi di azione diretta e di federalismo integrale, da cui risulti un movimento specificamente anarchico. Questo movimento, nei suoi gruppi o federazioni di gruppi, potrebbe svolgere, attorno un programma pratico e concreto, con tutti i compagni che sono d'accordo con noi, un'azione comune, concertata e coordinata.

Non entro qui nei particolari; poichè il nome, la forma, gli organi e il programma dell'organizzazione uostra dovranno essere discussi in una seduta a parte.

Georges Thonar, per una dichiarazione: Iori nella discussione sull'ordine da tenersi nel congresso, a proposito della proposta Domela, si è deciso con una votazione di fare in un modo piuttosto che in un altro. Io ho voteto, ma desidero dire che il metodo del votare non mi sembra compatibile con un congresso anarchico; e se ieri non ho agito coerentemente a questa mia persuasione, è stato solo perchè si trattava d'una questione senza importanza sostanziale, su cui occorreva chiudere la troppo lunga discussione.

Errico Malatesta: Ciò che dico Thonar è veramente una questione che rientra nell'argomento dell'organizzazione, e può essere trattata in proposito dell'organizzazione.

Pierre Monatte: Un voto come quello di cui parla Thonar non ha nulla di antiautoritario. E' impossibile paragonare un voto su una questione procedurale, all'azione elettorale e al sistema parlamentare di governo. Anche nei sindacati si suole spesso ricorrere a forme di votazione, ma io non ci vedo incoerenza alcuna con la idea anarchica.

Alcuni vedono in tante cose, anche le più secondarie, delle questioni di principio e, incapaci di comprendere lo spirito dell'antiparlamentarismo, le vedono solo nel fatto di mettere un pezzo di carta in un'urna o di levare la mano.

Christian Cornelissen: Il voto non si impone alla opinione delle minoranze; esso serve soltanto a farci orientare.

Robert De Marmande: Se noi non ci mettiamo d'accordo nell'accettare il voto sulle varie questioni, non potremo capire quali siano le opinioni del congresso, e delle varie correnti del congresso. Quindi bisogna ricorrervi.

Seduta pomeridiana.

Croiset, olandese: Bisogna vedere anzitutto che cos'è secondo noi l'anarchia. Noi vogliamo una società nella quale sia garantita all'individuo tutta la sua libertà, in cui gli uomini vivano tutta la loro vita. Quando diciamo questo, intendiamo dire che ognuno viva la vita propria il più completamente possibile, e non quella degli altri. La mia divisa è io, io io... e poi gli altri.

Gl'individui debbono unirsi solo quando da soli non potrebbero raggiungere lo scopo. Ma l'unione non deve diventare coazione. Non è quindi l'individuo fatto per la società, ma la società per l'individuo.

L'anarchia tende a mettere l'individuo in grado di sviluppare tutta la sua personalità; e poichè l'organizzazione tende a limitare la libertà individuale, l'anarchia è contraria ad ogni organizzazione permanente. Gli anarchici per diventare pratici, si sono ricongiliati con l'organizzazione; ma una volta su questa via, si finisce con l'autorità, come i socialdemocratici.

Dobbiamo dunque tornare alla purezza delle idee che vale più di tutta la pratica.

Siegfried Nacht, austriaco: Non si occupa di ciò che ha detto Croiset; ma vuol piuttosto dire dei rapporti fra i sindacalisti anarchici e il sindacalismo. Dobbiamo curare l'organizzazione operaia, e accanto a questa si debbono formare gruppi speciali di preparazione rivoluzionaria.

Il sindacalismo ha una missione sua propria: la conquista della potenza economica da parte degli operai. Questa è anche l'aspirazione degli anarchici, ma ciò non si può ottenere con i gruppi di propaganda. Al popolo non possiamo rivolgerci con troppa teoria, ma piuttosto con l'azione; poichè nulla può rendere rivoluzionario tanto quanto l'azione.

I metodi dello sciopero generale e dell'azione diretta attraggono momentaneamente le masse. Queste formano, per dir così, la fanteria, mentre i gruppi anarchici tecnici rappresentano l'artiglieria.

Georges Thonar: Comunismo e individualismo, nel concetto anarchico, sono inseparabili; l'organizzazione è utile allo sviluppo dell'anarchismo, e non è punto in contradizione con le sue basi teoriche. L'organizzazione è un metodo, non una teoria; ed è coerente con l'anarchismo, a seconda che sia adoperato in modo autoritario o in modo libertario.

L'organizzazione non era necessaria, quando il movimento era fatto da poche persone, ma ora che gli anarchici son cresciuti di numero, essa diventa indispensabile. E l'organizzazione è utile non solo per la propaganda teorica, ma anche e sopratutto per l'azione.

Anche il sindacalismo è utile; ma le unioni operaie non sono società anarchiche, e quindi in seno ad esse non possiamo sviluppare tutta l'attività voluta dal programma anarchico, cosa solo possibile, noi gruppi e federazioni anarchiche, che abbiano però a base la pratica costante del rispetto alla libertà e all'iniziativa individuale.

Karel Vohryzek: Io parlo come individualista per l'organizzazione. Niuno può negare, logicamente, che gli anarchici possano organizzarsi. Lo stesso individualismo non contradice affatto l'idea di organizzazione. Non è il caso di dire: o Stirner o Kropotkine; ma bensì: Kropotkine e Stirner nel tempo stesso, i quali esprimono due facce della stessa idea. Per esempio, Max Stirner non ha detto mai una parola sola contro l'organizzazione, mentre ha scritto tutto un capitolo a suo favore, laddove parla dell'associazione degli egoisti.

La nostra organizzazione non avendo nessun potere esecutivo, non può essere in contradizione con l'anarchia. Gli interessi economici del proletariato li patrociniamo in seno ai sindacati; ma per tutto il resto noi anarchici dobbiamo avere una organizzazione propria, su basi libertarie.

Emma Goldmann: Anche io sono favorevole all'organizzazione, ma mi preoccupa il timore che questa debba diventare esclusivista.

Dunois ha parlato degli eccessi dell'individualismo, ma, essi hanno a che fare con il vero individualismo, come gli eccessi del comunismo col comunismo. Ho esposto le mie opinioni in un rapporto di cui la conclusione è che con l'organizzazione si corre il pericolo di assorbire la personalità dell'individuo. Una organizzazione anarchica è solo possibile, quando rispetti tutte le iniziative individuali e le lasci liberamente svolgere.

L'Internazionale anarchica potrà sorgere solo se abbia a base questo principio essenziale dell'anarchia: l'autonomia.

Pierre Ramus: Per essendo favorevole all'organizzazione ed a tutte le aspirazioni del nostro movimento che ad esse tendono, non mi pare che gli argomenti enunciati dal relatore Dunois abbiano la voluta portata. Noi dobbiamo sforzarci a rimanere nella direttiva dei principi dell'anarchismo quali vennero esposti dal compagno Croiset, pur organizzando in pari tempo sistematicamente il nostro movimento. Insomma, l'iniziativa individuale deve trovare il suo terreno nella forza collettiva, e questa la sua espressione nell'iniziativa individuale. Per ciò non dobbiamo intaccare i nostri principi fondamentali e credere che stiamo creando qualcosa di nuovo. In realtà non rappresentiamo che l'evoluzione di coloro i quali, nella vecchia Internazionale, seguivano Bakounine; e tutto ciò che dobbiamo fare è di dare un più grande impulso a queste tendenze, favorendo la organizzazione laddove essa ancora non esiste.

Scopo della novella Internazionale non dev'essere di costituire una forza ausiliaria del sindacalismo rivoluzionario; essa deve perseguire unicamente la diffusione dell'anarchismo nella sua interezza.

Seduta notturna

Nella seduta notturna, pubblica, alle ore 20 1/2, Samson in olandese riassume le discussioni della giornata. Poi la discussione continua.

Errico Malatesta: La discussione fatta fin qui mi ha dato l'impressione che si tratti di una questione di parole, ma che nella sostanza tutti siano d'accordo.

Gli anarchici sono tutti individualisti, ma non tutti gli individualisti sono anarchici. Vi sono infatti due specie di individualisti: gli uni che rivendicano il pieno sviluppo della libera personalità di ogni individuo, di tutti gli individui; gli altri che vogliono far dominare la loro sola individualità. Un'individualista di quest'ultima specie è anche lo czar di tutte le Russie.

Dire che l'uomo isolato è il più forte di tutti, è un non senso; lo stesso eroe di Ibsen, il dottor Stockmann, non era in realtà un isolato, poichè aveva anche lui bisogno di tutta la organizzazione sociale esteriore, di tutte le forze agenti intorno a sè. L'uomo isolato è nell'assoluta impossibilità di fare la più piccola cosa utile; anzi egli ha più degli altri bisogno di un padrone, mentre è proprio nell'accordo libero con altri che l'uomo trova modo di sviluppare tutte le sue facoltà e di diventare veramente libero. L'individuo non può essere forte insomma che in collaborazione con altri individui, e cioè come facente parte di una comunità.

Se si vuol lavorare in modo pratico, si deve constatare sempre di nuova di essere costretti a ricercare la collaborazione di altri individui, non appena la nostra attività vuol prendere una certa estensione ed importanza. Naturalmente l'organizzazione degli individui in gruppi e dei gruppi fra loro devo lasciare completa autonomia a quelli e a questi. Però non è a credere che la mancanza di organizzazione significhi una maggiore garanzia di autonomia per gli anarchici. Spesso il contrario è vero. Per esempio ci sono dei giornali nostri in Francia che rifiutano le loro colonne a certi anarchici, solo perchè le idee di questi, la loro prosa o anche la persona non sono in rapporto con lo spirito di quei giornali. In tal modo la redazione di tali giornali esercita una vera e propria autorità che limita la libertà di pensiero dei compagni. Questo non avverrebbe se ci fossero delle organizzazioni che garantissero nei propri giornali libertà completa di esposizione a tutte le idee.

Certo quando si parla di autorità bisogna sapersi intendere: c'è una autorità che è creata e mantenuta con la coazione, con la forza organizzata dei governi e del capitalismo, ed è contra questa che vogliamo ribellarci per eliminarla. C'è poi una autorità morale, che è conseguenza dell'esperienza, dell'intelligenza e di altri meriti intrinseci di qualche individualità superiore; e a questa forma di autorità neppure un anarchico saprebbe opporsi.

Gli uni dunque han torto di credere che gli organizzatori vogliano una autorità, come gli altri han torto di credere che gli individualisti vogliano l'isolamento.

In fondo la contesa attuale fra individualisti e organizzatori è questione di parole e dipende molto dal credere gli uni a proposito degli altri quello che gli altri non sono. In fondo non si può essere disorganizzati che quando non si fa nulla o si fa solo quel poco cui basta l'iniziativa di uno solo o di pochi. Una prova di ciò è che gli individualisti quando fanno qualche cosa si organizzano meglio degli organizzatori; mentre quegli organizzatori che limitano la loro attività a predicare l'organizzazione, sono molto più disorganizzati degli individualisti. Così nei gruppi che fan vanto della massima autonomia individuale spesso ci sono più residui di autoritarismo che fra i gruppi che propagano l'organizzazione.

La verità è che fra gli anarchici che vogliono abbattere i governi e il capitalismo e sono rivoluzionari sul serio, nella sostanza si è tutti d'accordo. Una prova l'ho io nel fatto che dall'Italia mi scrivono di esser d'accordo con le mie idee tanto quelli che si dicono a favore, come molti che si dicono contrari a l'organizzazione. Eppure tutti conoscono le mie idee. In sostanza ripeto noi siamo tutti d'accordo; e sarebbe bene che trovassimo il modo di metterci al lavoro, per esercitare una effettiva influenza sugli avvenimenti; e che non avvenga più, come ultimamente, che per strappare un innocente ai suoi torturatori, si debba aspettare l'opera di altri partiti. Così Ferrer non dovrebbe oggi la sua liberazione ai massoni e ai liberi pensatori di spirito borghese, se gli anarchici uniti in una forte Internazionale, avessero potuto da se stessi organizzare la protesta in tutti i paesi e strapparlo con le proprie forze dalle mani del governo spagnuolo.

L'organizzazione internazionale anarchica può essere utile tanto per il movimento di preparazione rivoluzionaria, di lotta contro la reazione e di propaganda, quanto per le circostanze future (1).

Il voto sull'organizzazione. " L'Internazionale Anarchica "

(28 AGOSTO).

Seduta antimeridiana.

Dopo la traduzione in tedesco e olandese del discorso di Malatesta della sera precedente, e che la presidenza, a cui è confermato il compagno Lange di Berlino, ha comunicato adesioni pervenute, — fra cui quella del compagno cinese Tsumin e da un gruppo di congressisti del congresso internazionale Esperantista di Cambridge (Inghilterra) — si riprende la discussione sull'organizzazione.

Max Baginski (Stati Uniti): E' un errore il credere che l'individualismo neghi l'organizzazione. All'opposto, i due termini sono inseparabili. Individualismo significa più che altro emancipazione interiore dell'individuo, la organizzazione è la unione di individui coscienti in vista di un dato scopo da raggiungere e di un bisogno da sodisfare. Ma non si dimentichi mai che qualsiasi organizzazione rivoluzionaria ha bisogno di forti e coscienti individualità.

Amedée Dunois: Io credo che ormai la discussione teorica sia stata abbastanza esaurita, e mi pare sarebbe il momento di venire a una risoluzione pratica. E' inutile far più ormai della metafisica e della filosofia. Quello che si poteva dire è stato già detto; propongo per ciò un ordine del giorno. (Legge l'ordine del giorno, che riportiamo più sotto, e lo deposita alla presidenza).

Christian Cornelissen: Il concetto dell'individuo è relativo. L'individualità in sè non esiste, poichè ciascuna vione limitata da altre individualità. Gli individualisti dimenticano questi limiti; e l'organizzazione è il miglior modo di renderne consapevole l'individuo, perchè possa armonizzare la sua personalità con i diritti delle personalità altrui.

Broutchoux (Francia): Nella mia vita di lotta in mezzo agli operai minatori del Passo di Calais, ho potuto convincermi che l'organizzazione è fra l'altro, il mezzo più efficace per impedire il feticismo di cui suol circondarsi il nome di alcuni agitatori, e l'assunzione da parte di certe individualità di una pericolosa autorità sugli altri. Voi saprete, per esempio, che nel Passo di Calais v'è una forte organizzazione rivoluzionaria di minatori; ebbene, in mezzo a questa niuno ha autorità qualsiasi; mentre sono gli avversari o i disorganizzati che credono il contrario e vedono nei segretari sindacali qualche cosa come una autorità costituita.

G. Rijnders (Olanda): Non sono neppur io contrario all'organizzazione. Del resto tutti gli anarchici in fondo le sono favorevoli. Tutto sta però nella specie di organizzazione che si vuole adottare, la quale deve evitare il personalismo. In Olanda per esempio c'è una Federazione che non sodisfa tutti; vero è che chi non ne è sodisfatto non ci entra.

Emile Chapelier (Belgio): Bisogna che i discorsi sieno meno lunghi e dican più cose. Del resto dopo il discorso detto da Malatesta ieri sera, così esauriente, mi pare ci sia poco altro da aggiungere. Quando si parla di autorità e libertà bisogna intendersi su ciò che significa la parola « autorità ». Certo, finchè vi saranno uomini d'ingegno, scrittori, oratori, ecc. questi eserciteranno sempre una certa autorità. Ma l'autorità che dobbiamo evitare fra noi è quella che deriva dal fatto, che alcuni segnono ciecamente questo o quello. E per evitare que-sta specie di autorità, ci vuole una organizzazione senza capi e senza comitati centrali.

The Emma Goldman Papers

Emma Goldmann: Io sono d'accordo, come ho detto, per l'organizzazione. Solo vorrei che nell'ordine del giorno Dunois si includesse il concetto della legittimità dell'azione individuale accanto a quella collettiva. Presento quindi un emendamento all'ordine del giorno Dunois. (Legge l'emendamento, che Dunois accetta; e che ripetiamo più sotto).

Samson (Olanda): Qui in Olanda esiste una « Federazione Comunista Libertaria », di cui io faccio parte. Se molti compagni non vi aderiscono è più che altro per questioni personali; non però perchè la sua organizzazione contenga nulla di poco libertario. Noi non escludiamo nessuno dall'organizzazione. Nessuno è contrario a che gli individualisti entrino nell'organizzazione. Sta a loro entrarci o no. Comunque, non bisogna nascondersi che ci saran sempre dei malcontenti entro questa o quella organizzazione. Ma gli anarchici sono dei malcontenti per natura, e non bisogna dunque impensierirsi troppo delle loro critiche.

Karel Vohryzek: Per maggiore chiarezza propongo insieme a Malatesta una aggiunta esplicativa all'ordine del giorno Donois. (Legge la sua aggiunta, che riferiamo qui appresso).

— Si vicne al voto degli ordini del giorno.

Ordine del giorno Dunois-Goldmann, d'indole teorica, sull' « Organizzazione »:

Gli anarchici riuniti a Congresso in Amsterdam, considerando che le idee di anarchia e di organizzazione, lungi dall'essere incompatibili, come qualche volta si è voluto dire, si completano e si chiariscono a vicenda, il principio stesso dell'anarchia consistendo nella libera organizzazione dei produttori; considerando che, come l'azione collettiva non potrebbe supplire alla mancanza dell'azione individuale (*), l'azione individuale non potrebbe supplire alla mancanza dell'azione collettiva e del movimento concertato;

considerando che l'organizzazione delle forze militanti assicurerebbe alla propaganda una nuova via e non potrebbe che facilitare la penetrazione nella classe operaia delle idee di federalismo e di rivoluzione; considerando che l'organizzazione operaia, fondata su l'identità degli interessi non esclude un'altra organizzazione fondata sull'identità delle aspirazioni e delle idee;

sono del parere che i compagni di tutti i paesi mettano all'ordine del giorno la creazione dei gruppi anarchici e la federazione dei gruppi già costituiti.

Aggiunta esplicativa proposta da Vohryzek e Malatesta:

La federazione anarchica è una organizzazione internazionale di gruppi e di individui, in cui nessuno può imporre la sua volontà e menomare l'iniziativa altrui; essa ha lo scopo concreto nella società presente di trasformare tutte le condizioni morali ed economiche, e, in questo senso, essa impiega per la lotta necessaria tutti i mezzi adeguati all'idea anarchica.

Questo ordine del giorno fu votato, per la prima parte (Dunois-Goldmann) da 46 congressisti, e la seconda parte (Vohzyzek-Malatesta) da 48. Alla controprova nessuno votò contro, il che significa che l'ordine del giorno era stato votato ad unanimità. Fu anche domandato che coloro che intendevano astenersi da ogni voto in proposito lo dichiarassero, ma nessuno rispose all'appello. (1).

Si passò quindi al voto della mozione presentata da Ramus.

Ordine del giorno proposto da Pierre Ramus su l'organizzazione:

Il congresso anarchico di Amsterdam propone ai gruppi di tutti i paesi di unirsi in federazioni locali, regionali e secondo le diverse divisioni geografiche.

Dichiariamo che la nostra proposta è ispirata ai principii stessi dell'anarchismo, poichè non intravediamo la possibilità dell'esplicazione dell'iniziativa e dell'attività individuale fuori che nell'unione la quale, costituita come noi la proponiamo, può soltanto dare il terreno pratico per la libera espansione dell'individualità di ciascuno.

L'organizzazione federativa è la forma di organizzazione militante che più conviene al proletariato anarchico. Essa comprende i gruppi esistenti in un tutto organico, che si accresce con l'adesione di nuovi gruppi. Essa è antiautoritaria, non ammette alcun potere legislativo centrale le cui decisioni avessero un carattere obbligatorio per i diversi gruppi e individui, perchè riconoscono a questi il diritto di svolgersi liberamente nel nostro movimento comune, e di agire nel senso anarchico ed economico senza alcuna imposizione e impedimento reciproco. La federazione non esclude alcun gruppo anarchico, e ciascun gruppo è libero di ritirarsi e di rientrare nel possesso collettivo dei fondi versati, quando lo giudicasse necessario.

Raccomandiamo inoltre ai compagni di aggrupparsi secondo i bisogni e le necessità del loro movimento rispettivo, ma anche di non perdere di vista che la forza del movimento anarchico tanto nazionale che internazionale dipende dalla sua costituzione su basi internazionali, i mezzi d'emancipazione non potendo derivare che dall'azione concertata internazionalmente.

Compagni di tutti i paesi, organizzatevi in gruppi autonomi, e unitevi in una federazione internazionale: l'Internazionale Anarchica.

(*) La frase in neretto è l'emendamento di Emma Goldmann.

(1) Notiamo ora, per norma dei lettori, anche a proposito delle votazioni successive, che le votazioni, come fu dichiarato in principio del congresso, sulle questioni teoriche avevano un valore semplicemente consultivo e statistico, e non deliberativo. Esse non impegnano che i compagni che le hanno approvate e che le approveranno in seguito, e solo fino a quando essi restano della medesima opinione. E ciò vale anche per le deliberazioni d'indole pratica.

Qualche compagno ci lagnò in congresso che molti non si erassero di votare, considerando la loro astensione come mancanza di precisione di idee. Ma non era così; qualche compagno non votava, talvolta, perchè pur essendo d'accordo in massima col concetto espresso dall'ordine del giorno, la sua forma letteraria non gli sembrava abbastanza chiara (alcuni fecero delle dichiarazioni in questo senso, ed io stesso mi sono astenuto qualche volta per questa ragione) ma ciò non toglieva che si fosse di pieno accordo. Si pensi che eravamo là persone di tutte le lingue e di tutti i paesi, e non sempre era facile esprimersi bene o capir bene tutto e tutti; e il timore di cadere in equivoco faceva sì che ora gli uni ora gli altri si astenessero.

Ma quanto sopra vale per una piccola minoranza; molti spesso non si curavano di alzar la mano perchè l'accordo era così evidente che non ci sarebbe stato neppur bisogno di far votazioni. Per il valore statistico dei voti, dato quanto ho detto fin qui, bisogna aver presente, più che quelli a favore di ciascun ordine del giorno, quelli contrari, i quali veramente rappresentano una opinione contraria e molto diversa.

Queste ordine del giorno è approvato da 13 congressisti. Altri 17 votano contro; ma parecchi di questi ultimi dichiarano di votar contro, perchè non lo ritengono che una ripetizione dell'ordine del giorno votato in antecedenza, o perchè non sembra loro troppo chiaro.

E così è esaurita la questione riguardante l'organizzazione anarchica, dal punto di vista teorico. Restano ora da prendere le risoluzioni d'indole pratica.

Seduta pomeridiana.

E' questa una seduta privata. La stampa è stata avvertita che non deveva intervenire. E' ammesso, per eccezione, ad assistere alla riunione l'amico Fritz Kater, un socialista rivoluzionario tedesco, presidente della Unione libera dei Sindacati di Germania. Viene fatto l'appello per nazionalità per vedere che sieno presenti soltanto i congressisti.

La commissione organizzatrice del Congresso comunica la nota delle spese fatte e delle somme ricevute, e fa notare che c'è un deficit di circa 250 lire. Dopo breve discussione, si decide che i congressisti versino in fin di seduta quello che possono, come contribuzione propria, e che poi si faccia appello ai compagni delle singole nazioni, perchè il deficit sia possibilmente coperto prima della metà di ottobre. Il segretario del congresso diramerà a tal uopo una comunicazione ai giornali anarchici di tutti i paesi.

Emma Goldmann: Chiedo che si entri subito in discussione per la costituzione dell'organizzazione, per poter esaurire prima delle sei l'argomento.

— Poichè si decise al Congresso che le discussioni di questa seduta, per ragioni varie interessanti i compagni di alcune nazionalità, non fossero rese di pubblica ragione così dettagliatamente come per le altre sedute, mi limiterò a dare ai lettori un sunto anche più breve del dibattito.

Si è discusso a lungo, ed anche con vivacità (non mai però scompagnata dalla massima cordialità), prima sugli scopi pratici dell'Internazionale anarchica, poiodi dei suoi mezzi di azione e di comunicazione. Affacciata l'idea della costituzione di un Ufficio o Commissione di corrispondenza o di archivio, si è discusso anche dei limiti e delle mansioni di questo organo di comunicazione internazionale fra gli anarchici.

Alla discussione han preso parte gran numero di congressisti: Thonar, Fuss-Amoré - Chapelier (Belgio), Malatesta e Fabbri (Italia), Ceccarelli (Repubblica Argentina), Menette, Marmande e Broutchoux (Francia), Walter, Wilquet e Ramus (Inghilterra) Baginski e Goldmann (Stati Uniti), Nacht (Austria), Cornelissen e Samson (Olanda), Zielinska e Rodgaeff (Russia), Vohryzek (Boemia), Lange e Friedeberg (Germania). Dirò solo un breve cenno limitatamente alla parte riguardante le modalità di organizzazione.

Thonar propose che i compagni o i groppi d'ogni nazione si federino, e che le federazioni nazionali aderiscano all'Internazionale; il modo di stare in relazione avrebbe dovuto essere, secondo lui, lo scambio di indirizzi di persone sicure. Malatesta fece osservare che questo, se è possibile per i paesi più liberali, lo è meno per i paesi più polizieschi; e che bisognava che i compagni d'ogni nazione potessero regolarsi a loro modo, autonomamente.

Lange propose la nomina di un « Bureau » internazionale di cinque membri residenti a Londra, incaricato di fare da intermediario fra i gruppi delle varie nazioni per lo scambio di iniziative, o di costituire un archivio internazionale del movimento.

Avendo qualche altro (mi sembra Thonar) proposto che per ogni paese i compagni nominassero dei corrispondenti speciali in un determinato numero, e che per le adesioni personali si stabilisse che queste si dovessero raccogliere per l'intermezzo delle federazioni nazionali costituite, Fabbri fece osservare ciò non esser possibile nè logico, poichè chi aderisce personalmente e non appartiene ad alcun gruppo, avrà le sue ragioni per non appartenervi, e si rifiuterà di aderire per la trafila di un gruppo o federazione cui non vuole appartenere.

Nacht osserva la necessità d'un ufficio internazionale per coordinare le agitazioni d'indole generale che occorresse sollevare fra il pubblico di tutti i paesi. Emma Goldmann dice che, invece di costituire un Ufficio Internazionale, sarebbe molto meglio la pubblicazione di un Bollettino internazionale, che ne facesse le veci; se questa proposta fosse approvata, i compagni di America si impegnerebbero a farne le spese. Cornelissen obietta che il Bollettino si dovrà fare, ma che le farà l'Ufficio Internazionale.

Altri osservano che la redazione di un Bollettino, essendo impersonale o non avendo un impegno definito potrebbe fare troppo a suo modo, e offrirebbe un pericolo di autoritarismo più del « Bureau » medesimo.

A un certo momento si sospende la seduta, per dar modo ai diversi gruppi di intendersi e formulare ordini del giorno che non ripetano tutti la stessa cosa. Dopo poco due ordini del giorno si trovano formulati, d'indole diversa; il primo per la costituzione di un « Bureau » internazionale, il secondo per la fondazione di un Bollettino che faccia da organo di corrispondenza.

I due ordini del giorno sono messi in votazione.

Ordine del giorno di costituzione dell'Internazionale Anarchica, proposto da Vohryzek, Marmande, Friedeberg, Lange, Nacht, Fabbri, Fuss-Amoré, Broutchoux, Samson.

Gli anarchici (federazioni e gruppi rappresentati, e individui) riuniti al congresso di Amsterdam, dichiarano costituita la « Internazionale Anarchica ».

Essa è formata delle organizzazioni già esistenti, dei gruppi e dei compagni isolati che aderiranno ulteriormente.

Gli individui, gruppi e federazioni restano autonomi.

E' istituito un ufficio internazionale, che sarà composto di cinque delegati. Questo ufficio ha il compito di creare degli archivi anarchici internazionali accessibili ai compagni.

Esso entra in rapporti con gli anarchici dei diversi paesi, sia direttamente sia per intermezzo di tre compagni scelti dalle federazioni e dai gruppi dei paesi interessati.

Per far parte dell'Internazionale a titolo individuale, i compagni devono essere stati prima identificati, sia da una organizzazione, sia dall'Ufficio, sia anche da compagni conosciuti da questo.

Le spese di ufficio, archivio ecc. saranno coperte dalle federazioni, grappi e individui aderenti.

Quest'ordine del giorno raccoglie 43 voti a favore e soltanto 6 contro.

Ordine del giorno sulla costituzione dell'Internazionale Libertaria, proposto da Max Baginski, Emma Goldmann e Pierre Ramus:

Il congresso internazionale anarchico dichiara costituita l'Internazionale. Questa è esente da qualsiasi ufficio centrale. La sua funzione è mantenuta nel modo seguente: le federazioni, gruppi o movimenti a tendenza anarchica di ogni paese eleggono individualmente o collettivamente due corrispondenti, i cui nomi e indirizzi saranno pubblicati in ogni numero dei periodici anarchici internazionali. Questi corrispondenti si terranno, conformemente alle istruzioni dei loro gruppi o federazioni, in contatto costante con tutti i corrispondenti degli altri paesi. Si decide la pubblicazione di un Bollettino internazionale.

Approvato dai soli proponenti, e da un olandese.

— Così la costituzione dell' « Internazionale Anarchica » è approvata. Anche la piccola minoranza dissidente sulla modalità di organizzazione, è concorde con la maggioranza nell'idea di far sorgere il fascio internazionale di tutte le forze libertarie (1). La risoluzione presa mette la gioia in tutti i cuori dei convenuti, che fra il più grande entusiasmo intuonano a gran voce l'inno dell'Internazionale.

Sindacalismo e Sciopero Generale

Seduta notturna (28 agosto)

La seduta notturna, pubblica, si apre alle 9 pomeridiane. Un compagno olandese fa nella sua lingua agli intervenuti non congressisti un breve riassunto delle discussioni del giorno, annunziando la costituzione dell'« Internazionale Libertaria », applaudita.

Poi si apre la discussione sui Rapporti fra il sindacalismo e l'anarchismo.

Ha la parola il relatore sull'argomento Pierre Monatte, di Parigi, uno dei membri più attivi o influenti della Confédération générale du travail di Francia.

Pierre Monatte: Indubbiamente fra il sindacalismo e l'anarchismo v'è più che una relazione fra due teorie diverse. Quello e questo hanno piuttosto delle idee comuni, specialmente quelle riguardanti la costituzione economica attuale, e le altre sulla base delle quali patrociniamo l'abolizione completa del capitalismo e del salariato per mezzo della rivoluzione sociale. Al sindacalismo spetta il merito però di aver richiamato l'anarchismo a un concetto più operaio della questione sociale; come d'altra parte all'anarchismo spetta il merito maggiore di aver richiamato il movimento operaio sopra una via più rivoluzionaria e meno autoritaria.

Qui non credo sia il caso di presentare un'esposizione teorica di quello che è il sindacalismo rivoluzionario. Ormai i fatti s'incaricano da se stessi di mostrarcelo: esso è la protesta spontanea, diretta, di una classe asservita ed oppressa contro un regime che la schiaccia. In realtà il sindacalismo rivoluzionario non porta nel movimento delle idee nuove. Esse potrebbe essere detto l'anarchismo degli operai, poichè in fondo non è altra cosa che il risultato di uno spostamento dell'anarchismo, trasportato dai proletari stessi, dalle altezze astratte ove si muoveva in Francia una quindicina d'anni fa, sul terreno reale della vita e della lotta operaia. Col sindacalismo rivoluzionario l'anarchismo ha cessato di essere un vasto sistema ideologico soltanto, elaborato da pensatori geniali, per divenire anche una filosofia concreta dei lavoratori ribelli. Esso è la migliore espressione proletaria della lotta di classe in azione.

Il sindacalismo, benchè la parola non si adoperasse ancora, esistova già in seno all'Internazionale, da dopo la Comune di Parigi. Del resto il medesimo Considerando del primo proclama dell'Internazionale « che l'emancipazione dei lavoratori devo essere opera dei lavoratori stessi » è il postulato principale del sindacalismo. Le idee di autonomia e di discentramento su cui è basata la costituzione della Confederazione Generale del Lavoro di Francia orano patrocinate dai nostri compagni della frazione libertaria dell'Internazionale; e molte idee sullo Otto Ore e sullo Sciopero Generale si trovano nei deliberati e nelle discussioni di congressi Internazionalisti tenuti dalle federazioni che accettavano le idee e i metodi di Bakounine. Come si vede, fin dall'origine, le idee sindacaliste erano intimamente legate con le idee dell'anarchismo.

Dopo la reazione che seguì la Comune, un primo congresso operaio si ebbe a Parigi nel 1876, ma senza reale importanza. Nei congressi di Marsiglia (1879) e dell'Havre (1880), cominciarono le prime discordie fra gli antiparlamentari anarchici, e gli autoritari che volevano indirizzare le organizzazioni operaie verso la conquista dei pubblici poteri. Avvenuta la separazione dagli anarchici, i congressi successivi, sotto il nome di operai, non erano che congressi socialisti autoritari. Il campo operaio si suddivise così fra le tante scuole che dividono il partito socialista in Francia, e non acquistò un'importanza sua propria che quando divenne autonomo da tutti i partiti politici e quando gli anarchici, coasci che la filosofia non basta a fare la rivoluzione e che bisogna mescolarsi alla vita reale, presero parte con forza straordinaria al movimento sindacale.

Da quando si erano separati dai socialisti, gli anarchici s'erano isolati nella torre d'avorio della teoria e della propaganda puramente morale e dottrinaria; perciò la loro azione, quando all'azione ricorrevano, era bensì energica, ma aveva un carattere quasi esclusivo di dimostrazione col fatto dei loro sentimenti di rivolta contro la borghesia o lo stato. Presto s'accorsero che c'era bisogno anche di un'azione più coordinata che li legasse alla vita reale e al movimento sociale. Così, poco per volta, dal 1894 in poi gli anarchici cominciarono la loro opera di penetrazione nelle unioni operaie, predicata prima di tutti e praticata da Fernando Pelloutier. Subito dopo di lui, altri si misero sulla stessa via, fra cui Emilio Pouget, Tortelier, ecc. e tutti noi che oggi numerosi partecipiamo al lavoro di organizzazione dei sindacati di mestiere in Francia.

Fu nel 1894 che il congresso di Nantes della Federazione delle Borse del Lavoro votò a grande maggioranza lo Sciopero Generale Rivoluzionario, condannato poco prima da un congresso socialista. Fu il primo screzio fra le unioni operaie e il partito politico socialista. L'anno dopo (1895) il congresso di Limoges a gran maggioranza decise che « le unioni sindacali devono tenersi al di fuori di tutte le scuole politiche ». Gli altri congressi sindacali di Tours 1896, Tolosa 1897, Rennes 1898, Parigi 1900 ribadirono sempre più il divorzio da tutte le scuole politiche del socialismo. In quello di Tolosa del 1897 fu approvato ad unanimità il rapporto dell'anarchico Delesalle sul sabotage e il boicottaggio. Nel 1900 a Parigi fu decisa la creazione di un giornale confederale, il Voix du Peuple, che è ora diretto dal nostro compagno Emilio Pouget. Allora gli elementi anarchici e rivoluzionari affluirono ancor più numerosi in seno al movimento sindacale.

(1) Per provare come la minoranza rimanesse d'accordo lo stesso con la maggioranza, dirò subito che alle adunanze successive per la costituzione dell'ufficio internazionale, anche la minoranza prese parte ai lavori. Non solo, ma Emma Goldmann, che di questa minoranza fu portavoce, così spiega la sua solidarietà con il Congresso anche in questa questione (Mother Earth, di New York, n. 8 di ottobre. Resoconto del Congresso di Amsterdam): « Qualche congressista temendo il ripetersi degli inconvenienti del Consiglio Generale della vecchia Internazionale, che divenne una cricca di intriganti e di calunniatori, era contrario all'istituzione di un Ufficio Internazionale. Ma il fatto che ne sono stati scelti come membri caratteri irreprensibili come Malatesta, Rocker ecc., è salvaguardia sufficiente per farci ritenere che il « Bureau » avrà un carattere tutto diverso. »

In quel tempo la Confederazione Generale del Lavoro riuniva soltanto le Federazioni di mestiere, mentre che esisteva anche una Federazione delle Borse del Lavoro. In principio queste due organizzazioni non erano molto concordi, poichè la prima aveva un indirizzo più riformista, e la seconda più rivoluzionario. Ma col predominare anche in quella degli elementi rivoluzionari, la situazione cambiò; le relazioni divennero più strette, e il Congresso di Montpellier nel 1902 proclamava necessaria la fusione delle due organizzazioni. Infatti essa in quello stesso Congresso fu realizzata, e dopo d'allora la Confederazione Generale del Lavoro di Francia comprende tanto le Federazioni di mestiere quanto le Borse di Lavoro.

Da allora la Confederazione Generale del Lavoro di Francia rappresenta veramente tutta la classe operaia organizzata della Repubblica; vi sono organizzati, cioè, fuori dell'influenza d'ogni scuola politica, tutti i lavoratori coscienti della lotta che bisogna fare per giungere alla scomparsa del salariato e del padronato.

Anche nel sindacalismo ci sono gli elementi più moderati e riformisti, che non vorrebbero dare all'organizzazione operaia un carattere rivoluzionario; essi si preoccupano solo dei miglioramenti immediati, e non si curano degli scopi ultimi che sono la fine della divisione di classe e lo sciopero generale rivoluzionario espropriatore. Ma essi sono in minoranza e non rispecchiano l'indirizzo generale della Confederazione del Lavoro. Le armi di cui la classe operaia francese si serve sono, come è noto, lo sciopero, il boicottaggio, il sabotage, lo sciopero generale, la propaganda antimilitarista, ecc. tutte varie forme dall'azione diretta.

Lo sciopero generale economico ed espropriatore sarà la forma nuova, che rivestirà la rivoluzione sociale avvenire; esso è eminentemente nella direttiva dei principii anarchici, poichè non aspetta di essere dichiarato e comandato dall'alto, ma dove scaturire dal basso, dall'iniziativa individuale o collettiva dei rivoluzionari. I quali non intendono con esso rovesciare un governo per sostituirvene un altro, ma abolire ogni dominio ed ogni sopraffazione.

La organizzazione interna della Confederazione Generale del Lavoro ha anche essa un andamento molto libertario. La Federazione delle Unioni di mestiere e quella delle Borse del Lavoro, come ciascun Sindacato e ciascuna Borsa del Lavoro, come anche ciascun individuo che vi appartiene sono autonomi, senza autorità che imponga loro una cosa o l'altra. Lo stesso Comitato Confederale non è un organismo direttivo, ma solo un centro esecutivo della volontà dei consociati, incaricato di coordinare la propaganda d'indole generale che interessa l'insieme della classe operaia, ma che non ha alcuna autorità sugli organizzati. E' questo discentramento federalista che fa la potenza della Confederazione del Lavoro. Anche per i movimenti, scioperi, ecc. la decisione viene presa direttamente dal sindacato interessato, e il Comitato non fa che eseguire ed aiutare il movimento con la sua attività. Che cosa è questo se non i principii federalisti dell'anarchismo, in azione fra la classe operaia?

I lavoratori organizzati nella Confederazione sono più di 400,000, di cui moltissimi sono anarchici e la maggioranza simpatizza con le idee anarchiche più che con quelle di qualsiasi altro partito. Lo spirito che si sviluppa dalle nostre organizzazioni e dall'esercizio dell'azione diretta, è un'ammirevole scuola di coscienza, di volontà e di energia, ottimo mezzo per preparare i lavoratori a fare da sè la propria emancipazione da ogni autorità politica ed economica, per giungere alla rivoluzione sociale e all'anarchia.

Presiede sempre Rudolf Lange. Dopo che si è fatta la traduzione in olandese e tedesco del discorso di Monatte della sera prima, Lange e Friedeberg comunicano all'assemblea che tutti i giornali inglesi, belgi, olandesi, francesi e tedeschi parlano del congresso anarchico, e gli unici a tacere sono gli organi social-democratici; specialmente il Vorwarts di Berlino viene indicato, come quello che invece dà i più ampi resoconti del borghese e buffonesco congresso per la pace dell'Aia.

Malatesta osserva che invece di lagnarsi di questa cosa, bisogna esserne lieti. Una volta gli organi social-democratici parlavano spesso di noi, ma per dirne male e calunniarci. Ora tacciono: è già un progresso! (Risa nell'assemblea).

P. Monatte sorge a dire una parola in difesa dell'Humanité di Parigi (il noto giornale di Jaurès). Questo giornale non ha un corrispondente apposito ad Amsterdam, e quindi non può pubblicare resoconti, come i giornali borghesi che hanno un servizio telegrafico speciale; ma, è certo, che se avesse un corrispondente, pubblicherebbe i nostri resoconti.

Errico Malatesta propone che la discussione sui due temi « Sindacalismo e Anarchismo » e « Sciopero generale e sciopero politico » sieno trattati insieme, perchè riflettenti all'incirca gli stessi problemi.

Rodgaeff (Russia), parla in russo, facendo il suo rapporto sulla « Rivoluzione russa ». Benchè il russo non sia fra le lingue ammesse per parlare al congresso, e benchè il tema non sia quello in discussione, si lascia all'oratore la parola. Del resto, essendo la rivoluzione in Russia una serie di scioperi e scioperi generali insurrezionali, all'incirca come sarebbero nel desiderio di noi anarchici, questo rapporto può essere benissimo una dimostrazione col fatto di come si può mettere in opera il nostro metodo rivoluzionario nella futura lotta economica espropriatrice. Malgrado pochi comprendano il russo, tutti ascoltano con grande simpatia l'oratore, che nei gesti e nello sguardo mostra un ardore straordinario. Dalla traduzione fatta poi, abbiamo appreso che il Rodgaeff narrava le gesta rivoluzionarie degli anarchici russi, le loro sofferenze e il loro martirio.

Gli anarchici in Russia han preso parte al movimento per dirigerlo sempre più verso la rivoluzione sociale, senza per ciò voler aiutare alcun partito di governo, per quanto democratico voglia esso dirsi. Essi han preso parte agli scioperi generali del 1905, ed han fatto il loro dovere, sia sulle barricate collettivamente, sia isolatamente con gli atti terroristi. Specialmente han preso parte attiva agli scioperi generali del 1905 a Bielostok, a Ekaterinoslaw, a Jitomir, e a quello insurrezionale di Mosca, ariando sè o gli altri di bombe che lanciarono sulle truppe e la polizia. Nella Georgia gli anarchici dettero all'insurrezione il carattere di espropriazione, e poi insegnarono ai contadini a organizzare la produzione su basi comuniste. Nel 1906, dopo lo scioglimento della Duma, in agosto, il popolo di Sveaborg insorse e gli anarchici presero parte al movimento. Il capo dell'insurrezione, però, il social-democratico Kokk, trovò che i rivoluzionari « si spingevano troppo » e si ritirò, cedendo il posto all'operaio anarchico Lonoto. Dappertutto poi gli anarchici, con le armi alla mano, difesero gli ebrei contro i massacratori, e nella lotta molti di loro perirono, uccisi dalle bande nere.

L'oratore pone termine al suo dire col raccontare di una quantità di atti terroristi compiuti dai nostri compagni russi.

Siegfried Nacht solleva un incidente. Egli rende noto al congresso di aver sorpreso la sera prima, durante la seduta pubblica, il compagno Croiset mentre dava ai giornalisti borghesi notizie dettagliate della seduta privata precedente, malgrado che qualcuno ne l'avesse sconsigliato.

La notizia solleva del chiasso. In Austria e Germania specialmente, alcune notizie pnpalate potrebbero nnocere a qualche compagno.

Croiset domanda la parola; il congresso lo ascolta in silenzio; egli parla con vigore, in olandese prima, e traducendo da se stesso poi il proprio discorso in francese e tedesco. Eccone un breve sunto:

Croiset: Confesso di aver fatto quello di cui parla Nacht, e dico subito che me ne dispiace; e riconosco essere stata sventatezza la mia. Voi poteto trattarmi da sciocco, da ragazzo, ed io accetterò il rimprovero. Ma ora che ho detto questo, protesto anche energicamente contro il modo di esprimersi di Nacht, che dice di avermi sorpreso, ecc. La parola sorprendere è offensiva, poichè si « sorprende » solo chi sta facendo di nascosto una cosa cattiva; meutre in davo le informazioni ai giornalisti in pubblica riuuione, in mezzo a molti compagni che mi circondavano. Del resto dobbo anche dire che le notizie che ho date non le credo dannoso, anche perchè non bo fatto che nomi di persone che non possono essere compromesse. Oltre a ciò i giornalisti con cui parlavo sono persone stimabili che non propalerebbero ciò che loro paresse dannoso a qualcuno.

Errico Malatesta propone, per chiudere l'incidente, che il Congresso, deplorando la leggerezza di Croiset, passi all'ordine del giorno.

La maggioranza, approva; mentre una minoranza, pur biasimando il Croisst, pensa che la deliberazione sia un po' troppo dura.

Il presidente legge le adesinni al Congresso di parecchi gruppi di diverse nazioni, fra cui alcuni di Ancona.

Seduta pomeridiana.

Emma Goldmann presenta al Congresso quest'ordino del giorno sulla rivoluzione russa, che è firmato anche da Rogdaeff, Zabregneff, Cornelissen, Baginski, Mnujits, Fabbri e Malatesta:

« Considerando che per l'evoluzione del popolo russo, il proletariato delle città e delle campagne non sarà soddisfatto con vacue libertà politiche, ma che suo scopo deve essere di liberare se stesso dalla schiavitù politica ed economica, e di impiegare all'uopo tutti quei mezzi di lotta che sono propagati dagli anarchici da gran tempo, il Congresso afferma che il popolo russo non può aspettar nulla dall'alto, ma solo conquistare i diritti con l'azione diretta.

La rivoluzione russa ha importanza non solo locale e nazionale, ma il prossimo futuro del proletariato internazionale dipende da lei; tanto vero che la borghesia del nuovo e vecchio mondo coopera a difendere i privilegi dello czar, e fornisce al suo governo una base morale e materiale soccorrendola finanziariamente nella lotta contro il popolo russo.

« Il congresso perciò incita il proletariato di tutti i paesi ad opporsi con una energica attività ai governi capitalistici, monarchici, repubblicani, democratici e costituzionali, e nell'interesse di tutta la classe operaia a rifiutare ogni solidarietà in questa complicità dei loro governi col governo russo. Se durante qualche sciopero in Russia, uno sciopero generale non potrà essere dichiarato nelle corrispondenti industrie in altre nazioni, il proletariato deve adoperarsi per impedire che sia inviato del materiale da guerra al governo russo, disiruggerlo o rovinarlo, e rifiutarsi in ogni modo di prendere le armi o cooperare in qualsiasi modo per una guerra in Russia.

Quest'ordine del giorno è approvato per acclamazione.

— Si riprende la discussione sul sindacalismo e lo sciopero generale.

Christian Cornelissen: Come anarchici noi possiamo pienamento accettare il rapporto di Monatte sul sindacalismo francese. Ma questo rapporto è on po' incompleto per noi come anarchici; poiche è nostro dovere di dire anche che noi possiamo sostenere il sindacalismo e l'azione diretta solo come mezzo rivoluzionario e purchè servano veramente alla trasformazione della società in una società comunista e libertaria. Non dimentichiamo che l'azione diretta non è sempre rivoluzionaria; essa può essere adoperata anche per scopi conservatori e reazionari. Per esempio, i lavoratori in diamanti di Amsterdam u di Anversa hanno migliorato la loro situazione per mezzo dell'azione diretta s non parlamentare. Ma attualmente, in segnito alla loro lotta diretta, hanno fatto del loro mestiere una casta chiusa, erigendogli intorno come una muraglia cinese, restringendo il numero degli apprendisti e mettendo dogli ostacoli a che gli ex lavoranti in diamanti possano ritornare al loro vecchio mestiere. Noi non possiamo certo approvare il loro operato.

Si tratta di un fenomeno di carattore generale. In Inghilterra e negli Stati Uniti le trades-unions sorte in virtù dell'azione diretta e che con l'azione diretta hanno creato ai propri affiliati una situazione privilegiata, impediscono di lavorare agli stranieri, spesso anche quando questi sono organizzati. Così quando gli operai tipografi in Fraocia o in Svizzera si rifiutano di lavorare insieme con le donne, non possiamo approvarli. Se attualmente si minaccia una guerra tra gli Stati Uniti e il Giappone, noa dimentichiamo che la causa us risalirà nun ni capitalisti e ai borghesi americani; questi auzi avrebbero più piacere di sfruttare gli operai giapponesi cha quelli americani. No, saranno i lavoratori privilegiati sotericaoi che avranno cagionato la guerra, per essersi opposti alla importazione della mano d'opera giapponese.

Noi dobbiamo combattore anche certe forme di azione diretta che sono dirette contro l'introduzione delle macchine, come della linotype nelle tipografie ecc.

Mi riserbo di formulare queste mie id o in nua mozione che dica qoali forme di sindacalismo e di azione diretta noi possiamo sostenere come anarchici. (Vedi la prima parte dell'ordine del giorno firmato da Cornelissen oltre che da Malatesta, Marmande ecc.).

Errico Malatesta; In dirò qui solo quella parte dal mio pensiero che non collima precisamente con quello degli oratori sindacalisti che mi hanno preceduto, e specialmente con Monatte, dal qnale ho in proposito idee parecchio diverse. Se dovessi parlare per propagnnda in mezzo a un pubblico vasto di avversari e indifferenti, allora ripeterei naturalmente molte cose dette dagli altri con le quali sono d'accordo. Farle qui, nel corso di una discussione fra compagni, sarebbe una ripetizione inutile. Poichè io criticherò molti aspetti del sindacalismo, non mi si prenda per un avversario dell'organizzazione e dell'azione sindacale. Tacerò di ciò su cui son d'accordo con gli altri e mi limiterò a dire i punti del mio disaccordo.(1)

La conclusione di tutto il discorso di Monatto è che il sindacalismo di per se stesso è sufficiente cosàe mezzo per compiere la rivoluzione, che, per un usare una frase corrente, «il sindacalismo basta a se stesso ». Ora, questo assolutamente non è vero. Il sindacalismo, o meglio il movimento sindacale, ha trovato in me sempre un fautore (ma un fautore non incondizionato) poichè ho veduto in esso un terreno efficace di agitazione rivnluzionaria ed un mezzo por noi di mantenerci in contatto con la folla e con quella parte della massa operaia che più è suscettibile di lasciarsi convincere e influenzare dalla nostra propaganda. Tanto poco io sono un avversario del movimento sindacale, e della partecipazione attiva ed esso degli anarchici, che sono stato fra i primi ad incitare i nostri compagni a uscire dall'isolamento in cui s'erano racchiusi gli anarchici dopo la fine dell'Internazionale. Parecchi anzi che a me oggi pare esagerino nel loro zelo sindacalista, trascnrando l'anarchismo integrale, sono stati conviati proprio da me a ritornare sulla via che Monatte e i sindacalisti credono nuova e invece non è altro che quella tracciata dai primi anarchici in seno all'Internazionale.

(1) Malatesta col suo discorso seppe così avvincere la nostra attenzione, che a qnasi tutti di noi fu impossibile prendere degli appunti. Riferisco qui dunque qnasi a memoria sulla scorta di noto prese dopo e su sunti molto sommari di giornali francesi, tedeschi e inglesi. Errico Malatesta ha accennato allo cose detto nel suo discorso nell'articolo che abbiamo riprodotto come prefazione a questo resoconto. Rimandiamo ad esso per maggior chiarezza i lettori. Qui specialmente ci sofferniamo su qnalche cosa che per brevità Malatesta ha omesso nel suo articolo, del qnale riportiamo appena qualche brano.

Diro perciò che noi vogliamo partecipare al movimento sindacale per gli scopi della nostra propaganda e per poter più efficacemente spingere il popolo verso la rivoluzione espropriatrice, non significa che si debba per esso dimentioare l'anarchia e cessare di essere anarchici oltre che in teoria anche nell'azione. Il movimento sindacale non è che un mezzo, ottimo certamente, ma che noi non dobbiamo scambiare per il fine della rivoluzione, e che non ci deve far dimenticare tutte le altre concezioni dell'anarchismo e tutti gli altri mezzi di propaganda e di agitazione. I sindacalisti invece tendono a scambiare il mezzo per il fine e la parte per il tutto; e ciò fa sì che per molti il sindacalismo diventi una teoria nuova che minaccia di sostituirsi all'anarchismo.

Il sindacalismo fine a se stesso, nnche se si dice rivoluzionario, non può non finire col diventare na movimento legalitario e conservatore, non avendo altro scopo che il miglioramento delle condizioni del lavoro entro i limiti imposti dalla borghesia antoritaria. Anche le grandi unioni operaio del Nord America e degli Stati Uniti hanno comiuciato con l'essere rivoluzionarie nei loro metodi s con l'inalzare la bandiera più radicale; ma sono rimaste tali finchè erano deboli, e non appena sono divenute potenti o han fatto ai loro affiliati una condizione privilegiata a paragons di quella di altri operai sono divenute sempre più conservatrici, corporazioni chiuse in antagonismo con altri proletari anche più oltre contro i padroni.

Ripeto: gli anarchici devono stare nei sindacati non solo per fare la propaganda oggi, e domani per avere degli organismi prooti a prendere in mano l'organizzazione della produzione tolta ai padroni, ma anche per reagire contro il particolarismo che è un frntto inevitabile e dannoso delle unioni operaie fatte per difendere interessi particolari.

I sindacalisti sono condotti a questo errore da un concetto troppo unilaterale intorno alla lotta di classe, secondo cui gli interessi degli operai sono solidali o che basta che gli operai si mettano a difendere i propri interessi perchè siano condotti a difendere fatalmente gli interessi di tutta la propria classe contro la borghesia sfruttatrice. E' un errore: poichè ci sono lotte di interessi anche fra alcune categorie di operai ed altre; e qualche volta avviene che gli interessi di una categoria siano più vicini a quelli di una data categoria di padroni che di un'altra di operai. Questo quando le unioni operaie non guardino che ai loro propri interessi immediati e particolari. Cornelissen prima di me ha accennato a qualche esempio in proposito, in Olanda e negli Stati Uniti. Ciò produce uno stato d'animo pericoloso fra gli operai, i quali per esempio nelle lotte per i miglioramenti o negli scioperi si scagliano con maggior violenza contro i krumiri e li odiano di più, benchè questi siano degli sfrottati come loro qnasi sempre anche più di graziati, che non contro la polizia e i padroni contro cui sarebbe più logico lo scagliarsi, poichè sono questi i veri nemici o l'impedimento vero che ne impedisce di mettere in pratica l'nguaglianza sociale.

Dunque è « solamente in vista d'una trasformazione completa della società che l'operaio può sentirsi solidale con l'operaio, l'oppresso solidale con l'oppresso; ed è compito degli anarchici il tener sempre vivo il fuoco dell'ideale e procurare di orientare più che possibile tutto il movimento verso le conquiste dell'avvenire, verso la rivoluzione, anche, ove occorra, a detrimento dei piccoli vantaggi che può ottenere oggi qualche frazione della classe operaia, e che, del resto, non si ottengono il più sovente che a spese di altri lavoratori e del pubblico consumatore » (1).

Una cosa che ho notato è il danno che porta al nostro movimento l'assnnzione da parte dei compagni, specialmente dei migliori e più attivi, delle cariche nelle organizzazioni operaie, sopratutto delle cariche a pagamento. Regola generale: un anarchico che accetta per stipendio e permanentemeate uno di questi posti è perduto per la propaganda e non di rado come anarchico. E' inutile che io stia qui a ricordarvi esempi di compagni carissimi che si sono esauriti o sono scomparsi di mezzo a noi appunto perchè divenuti funzionari delle organizzazioni operaie, costretti spesso a fare cose in contradizione con le proprie idee, oppure a trascinare il sindacato per una via che è in opposizione con le ideo degli organizzati. Insomma io richiamo la vostra attenzione sul paragone che si può fare fra il funzionarismo nel movimento operaio e il parlamentarismo politico.

Ed ora veniamo allo sciopero generale. Noi dobbiamo accettare e propagare l'idea dello sciopero generale come un mezzo assai agevole per cominciare la rivoluzione, ma non dobbiamn crearci l'illusione che lo sciopero generale potrà rimpiazzare la lotta armata contro le forze dello Stato.

« E' stato detto sovente che con lo sciopero gli operai potranno affamare i borghesi e costringerli a cedere. Non saprei immaginare una più grande assurdità. Gli operai sarebbern già da gran tempo morti di fame prima che i borghesi, i quali dispongono di tutti i prodotti accumulati, comincino a soffrire seriamente.

« L'operaio, che nulla possiede, non ricevendo più il suo salario dovrà a viva forza impadronirsi dei prodotti; troverà i gendarmi, i soldati, i borghesi stessi che vorranno impedirglielo; s la questione si dovrà ben tostn risolvere a colpi di fucile, di bombe, ecc. La vittoria resterà a chi saprà essere più forte. Prepariamoci dunque a questa lotta necessaria anzichè limitarci a predicare lo sciopero generale come una specie di panacea che dovrà risolvere tutte le difficoltà. Per conseguenza, anche come modo di cominciare la rivoluzione, lo sciopero generale non potrà essere impiegato che in maniera assai relativa.

« I servizi d'alimentazione, ivi compresi naturalmente quelli dei trasporti delle derrate alimentari, non ammettono una lunga interruzione: bisogna dunque rivoluzionariamente impadronirsi dei mezzi per assicurare l'approvigionamento anche prima che lo sciopero si sia per se stesso svolto in insurrezione ».

La scienza ormai mette a servizio di tutti i mezzi più energici rivoluzionari, come del resto ne ha già dati di formidabili in mano alla reazione. Il concetto dello sciopero passivo, con le braccia incrociate, condurrebbe invece inevitabilmente ad una sconfitta. Più che smettere completamente di lavorare, si tratta per gli operai di cominciare a lavorare per sè; senza di che, come ho detto, presto i prodotti verrebbero a mancare, e ciò anche se si fosse bastanza energici da impadronirsi di tutti i prodotti accumulati in mano della borghesia nel momento della rivoluzione. C'è un opuscolo di propaganda, pubblicato parecchi anni fa, che ha fatto molto male alla causa rivoluzionaria: I prodotti della terra e dell'industria, il qnale con una statistica che non starò qui a confutare, pretendeva dimostrare che i prodotti accumulati, se passati tutti nelle mani dei consumatori, basterebbero non so per quanti mesi od anni a farli vivere senza preoccupazioni. Ora questo è falso. Kropotkine dimostra che a Londra per esempio, si morirebbe di fame dopo tre mesi, se d'un tratto uno sciopero generale tagliasso tutte lo comunicazioni e sospendesse il lavoro.

The Emma Goldman Papers

Supponiamo, per esempio che lo sciopero generale scòppi in un dato centro; dopo qualche giorno gli operai saranno costretti o a riprendere il lavoro, o a cambiare lo sciopero in insurrezione; in questo ultimo caso, dovranno riattivare certi servizi pubblici e di alimentazione, per evitare che la fame prima o poi riconduca il popolo a piegarsi alla reazione. Naturalmente io qui non ho accennato, per ciò che riguarda i possibili movimenti rivoluzionari, che a quanto sta in relazione coi temi da noi trattati del sindacalismo e dello sciopero generale.

Concludendo: come già un tempo mi lamentavo che i compagni si isolassero dal movimento delle unioni di mestiere, ora trovo deplorevole che molti giungano all'estremo opposto e si lascino completamonto assòrbire dal movimento sindacalista. L'organizzazione operaia, lo sciopero, lo scioporo generale, l'azione diretta, il boicottaggio, il sabotage, l'insurrezione ecc. sono tutti mezzi preziosi, ma sempre quando siano manifestazioni dirette a scopi anarchici. La rivoluzione che noi preconizziamo va al di là dell'interesse di singole classi; essa vuol giungere alla liberazione completa o integrale dell'umanità da tutte le schiavitù politiche, economiche o morali. Perciò il nostro metodo non può essere unilaterale. Ecco perchè il sindacalismo che è un metodo, ottimo per le forze operaie che mette a nostra disposizione, non può essere l'unico mezzo e tanto meno sostituirsi al nostro scopo vero e completo che è l'anarchia.

— Dopo la traduzione in tedesco del discorso Malatesta si sospende la seduta, e si rimanda alla seduta pubblica della notte la traduzione in olandese e la continuazione della discussione.

Seduta notturna.

Alle 9 pom. si traduce in olandese il discorso di Malatesta. Poi prosegue la discussione:

Friedeberg: Dopo quello che ha detto Malatesta, non credo di dover aggiungere altro, essendo io all'incirca della stessa opinione. L'anarchismo è un'idea che vuole l'emancipazione di tutti, e non di una classe soltanto: non può quindi essere tutto racchiuso nella questione operaia. Mi riservo di presentare una mozione sull'argomento.

Fuss-Amorè: Malatesta ha parlato di noi sindacalisti rivoluzionari, come se non ci curassimo dell'anarchia. Questo non è esatto. Noi siamo sindacalisti rivoluzionari ma anche anarchici; e nelle organizzazioni sindacaliste vediamo, oltre che un mezzo rivoluzionario, anche gli organismi più adatti ad assumere all'indomani della rivoluzione la gestione della produzione. Richiamo l'attenzione dei compagni su questo aspetto del sindacalismo.

Samson: A proposito del sabotage osservo che non mi sembra un'arma troppo utile e buona per noi anarchici. Mentre da un lato mi pare che esso abbia un'influenza poco simpatica per l'educazione della classe operaia, d'altra parte lo credo poco applicabile e poco fecondo di risultati.

Broutchoux: I minatori organizzati del Passo di Calais, hanno un sindacato, al quale io appartengo, di essenza essenzialmente rivoluzionaria. Questo sindacato ha sostenuto gli scioperi più energici accompagnati da atti violenti di propaganda col fatto. Io sono per la lotta violenta, e non per un sindacalismo di circostanza, che si manifesta solo quando l'occasione di agire è passata, e che non vuole e non sa dirigere i suoi attacchi con uno scopo deliberatamento rivoluzionario. Per ciò che riguarda le organizzazioni dei minatori del Passo di Calais, i fatti sono dei più significanti in senso rivoluzionario, e non sembrano giustificare i timori del compagno Malatesta.

Yohryzek: Mi riservo di presentare una mozione sullo sciopero generale politico, che noi anarchici dobbiamo disapprovare come tale, quando ha in vista la conquista dei poteri pubblici; ma al quale dobbiamo partecipare per essere in grado di spingere i sindacati a daro allo sciopero un carattere economico o rivoluzionario.

Ramus: Il punto di vista estremo di Malatesta è pienamente giustificato dal punto di vista estremo di Monatte, il quale, nel suo rapporto, ha sostenuto il modo di vedere sindacalista puro e semplice.

Bisogna che non perdiamo di vista il fatto che lo sciopero generale, il sindacalismo od i suoi mezzi non possono costituire che altrettanti metodi dell'anarchismo il quale, come scopo finale li abbraccia tutti, mentro nel sindacalismo non è sempre racchinso l'anarchismo.

Tutto il valore del sindacalismo, da noi tutti sempre ammesso, sta nel fatto ch'esso si contrappone alla tattica parlamentarista. Ma, allo stesso modo che lo sciopero generale non si può considerare come un surrogato della qualità distruttive o costruttivo della rivoluzione sociale, anche il sindacalismo è insufficiente per sè stesso a risolvere la questione sociale, e l'anarchismo avendogli fornito tutte le sue armi, bisogna ch'ei sia totalmente perveso anche della filosofia e dell'ideale dell'anarchismo. Noi siamo innanzitutto anarchici e subordinatamente e solo come tali siamo anche sindacalisti, mai vice-versa.

Monatte: Malatesta si è fatto qui l'eco dei vecchi militanti dell'anarchismo, a fondo un po' blanquista.

Ma se noi sindacalisti anarchici ci diciamo rivoluzionari, è perchè lo siamo in realtà e non subordiniamo l'anarchia o la rivoluzione a nessun'altro scopo. Solo, perchè i tempi sono cambiati, concepiamo il movimento e la rivoluzione un po' diversamente. Lo sciopero generale ci sembra chiamato a daro una forma più possibile alla rivolnzione, che nei tempi moderni non può più essere fatta con i metodi quarantottisti. Se in passato la pratica ancora poco organica del sindacalismo ha dato luogo ad errori o deviazioni, l'esperienza ora ci impedirà di cadere negli stessi falli. E gli anarchici sopratutto possono contribuire ad evitarli.

Thonar: Credo che fra le opinioni di Malatesta e quelle di Monatte non ci sia che una differenza di apprezzamento, e non una differenza troppo sostanziale, fino al punto di dividere il campo anarchico.

— E' passata la mezzanotte, e si decide, l'indomani di passare ai voti, potendo ormai considerarsi esauritissima la discussione.

Il voto sul sindacalismo. L'antimilitarismo

(30 AGOSTO)

Seduta antimeridiana.

Aristide Ceccarelli: dice poche parole sul movimento sindacalista nella Répubblica Argentina. Quelli che si dicono sindacalisti laggiù sono in fondo dei parlamentaristi; e gli unici a fare un lavoro serio in senso rivoluzionario e libertario nei sindacati sono gli anarchici. Le organizzazioni operaio della Federacion Obrera Regional Argentina hanno quasi tutto un indirizzo libertario, e molte fanno vera e propria propaganda anarchica. L'ultimo congresso operaio, dette di Unificazione, ha a grande maggioranza approvata una raccomandazione ai sindacati di aiutare la propaganda del comunismo anarchico.

L'oratore descrive le condizioni pessime dei lavoratori nell'Argentina, e per mandato ricevuto dai compagni di laggiù, propone al congresso un ordine del giorno invitante i compagni a fare una assidua propaganda per impedire l'emigrazione in quel paese, ove manca sempre più por la classe operaia il pane e la libertà.

Malatesta ed altri osservano che la questione meriterebbe una discussiono apposita, cosa che non si può fare ora, poichè si deve ultimare la discussione incominciata sul sindacalismo.

Si decide il passaggio all'ordine del giorno, e si passa alla votazione delle mozioni presentate sul sindacalismo e lo sciopero generale.

Ordine del giorno firmato Wilquet, Malatesta, Emma Goldmann, Vohryzek, Marmânde, Cornelissen, Rogdaeff, Knotek:

Il Congresso anarchico internazionale considera i sindacati allo stesso tempo come organizzazioni di battaglia nella lotta delle classi per il miglioramento delle condizioni del lavoro, e come unioni di produttori che possono servire alla trasformazione della società capitalista in una società comunista anarchica.

Così il Congresso, pur ammettendo l'eventuale necessità della creazione di gruppi sindacalisti rivoluzionarii speciali, raccomanda ai compagni di sostenere le organizzazioni sindacali generali in cui hanno accesso tutti gli operai dello stesso mestiere.

Ma il Congresso considera funzione degli anarchici il costituire in queste organizzazioni l'elemento rivoluzionario, e il propagare e sostenere solo quelle forme e manifestazioni di azione diretta (scioperi, boicottaggio, sabottaggio ecc.) che hanno in se stesse un carattere rivoluzionario e tendono alla trasformazione della società.

Gli anarchici considerano il movimento sindacalista e lo sciopero generale come potenti mezzi rivoluzionarii, ma non come sostituti della rivoluzione. Raccomandano d'altra parte ai compagni, nel caso della proclamazione d'uno sciopero generale per la conquista del potere, di aderire allo sciopero ma cercando nel tempo stesso di spingere con la propria influenza i sindacati a far valere le proprie rivendicazioni economiche.

Gli anarchici pensano che la distruzione della società capitalista ed autoritaria può realizzarsi soltanto mediante l'insurrezione armata e l'espropriazione violenta, e che l'impiego dello sciopero più o meno generale e il movimento sindacalista non devono far obliare i mezzi più diretti di lotta contro la forza militare dei governi.

Quest'ordine del giorno che congloba le mozioni di Cornelissen, Vohryzek e Malatesta, è approvato con 33 voti contro 10.

Mozione R. Friedeberg:

La lotta di classe e l'emancipazione economica del proletariato non sono identiche alle idee e tendenze dell'anarchismo.

L'anarchismo ha per scopo la completa emancipazione economica e psichica della personalità umana.

L'anarchismo tende a una società priva di autorità, e non a creare una nuova autorità, quella della maggioranza contro la minoranza.

L'anarchismo vede nella soppressione dell'autorità delle classi, nella scomparsa delle ineguaglianze economiche, un punto di passaggio assolutamente necessario e fondamentale per poter giungere al suo scopo finale. Ma gli anarchici non possono accettare quei mezzi proposti per l'emancipazione del proletariato che, nella loro azione, sieno in contraddizione con le idee anarchiche e debbano inevitabilmente allontanarli dal vero scopo dell'anarchismo.

Essi rifiutano quindi di praticare la lotta secondo i metodi del socialismo marxista per mezzo del parlamentarismo o di un sistema rappresentativo, e per mezzo di un movimento sindacale esclusivamente corporativo, che abbia cioè per scopo esclusivo il miglioramento economico del proletariato, — tutti mezzi che implicano come conseguenza l'autorità d'una nuova burocrazia, superiorità intellettuale diplomata o no, e l'oppressione della minoranza da parte della maggioranza.

Il Congresso anarchico-comunista respinge quindi lo sciopero generale per la conquista del potere, ma riconosce l'utilità dello sciopero generale economico e rivoluzionario, come il mezzo adatto a distruggere la struttura economica presente e liberare la classe operaia dalla schiavitù del salariato.

Per arrivare a questo sciopero generale è necessario che le organizzazioni sindacaliste sieno imbevute delle idee dell'anarchismo, e volte a distruggere con un sciopero generale rivoluzionario la dominazione di classe e ad aprire la via verso lo scopo dell'anarchismo. — la realizzazione d'una società senza autorità.

Quest'ordine del giorno è stato approvato con 36 voti contro 6 (1).

Ordine del giorno Dunois, Monatte, Fuss-Amorè, Nacht, Zielinska, Fabbri, Walter:

Gli anarchici riuniti in Congresso considerando, che il regime economico e giuridico attuale è caratterizzato dallo sfruttamento e dall'asservimento della massa dei produttori, e determina fra questi ed i beneficiarii del regime attuale un antagonismo d'interessi assolutamente irreduttibili che determina la lotta di classe;

che l'organizzazione sindacale solidarizzando le resistenze e le ribellioni sul terreno economico senza preoccupazioni dottrinarie, è l'organo specifico e fondamentale di questa lotta del proletariato contro la borghesia e contro tutte le istituzioni borghesi;

che è necessario che uno spirito rivoluzionario sempre più audace orienti gli sforzi dell'organizzazione sindacale verso l'espropriazione capitalista e la soppresssione di ogni potere;

che l'espropriazione e la presa di possesso collettiva degli strumenti e dei prodotti del lavoro non potendo essere compito che dei lavoratori stessi, il sindacato è destinato a trasformarsi in associazione produttrice ed è quindi nella società attuale il germe vivente della società futura; invitano i compagni di tutti i paesi, senza perder di vista che l'azione anarchica non è tutta intera contenuta nell'orbita dell'organizzazione di mestiere, a partecipare attivamente al movimento autonomo della classe operaia e a svilappare nelle organizzazioni sindacali le idee di rivolta, d'iniziativa individuale e di solidarietà che sono l'essenza stessa dell'anarchismo.

Quest'ordine del giorno è approvato con 28 voti contro 7.

(1) Chi scrive s'è astenuto dal votare questa mozione, perchè la riteneva, specie nel primo capoverso, poco chiara, o per lo meno bisognevole d'una più lunga spiegazione. L'accenno al marxismo richiedova anche esso una maggiore spiegazione. Più che un'ordine del giorno questa mozione può considerarsi una dichiarazione di principii, tanto per la forma che per la sostanza.

The Emma Goldman Papers

[The Anarchist congress of Amsterdam. In Italian] Resoconto generale del Congresso Anarchico di Amsterdam / Emma Goldman, et al. — 26 cm. In Il Pensiero [Rome]. — no. 20-21 (Nov. 1, 1907).

Malatesta chiede la parola per una spiegazione: — Si sono delineate in questo congresso, a proposito di sindacalismo, due correnti di idee, quella che s'è espressa con l'ordine del giorno firmato anche da me, e l'altra con l'ordine del giorno Dunois, Monatte ecc. Ora il congresso ha votato, con poca differenza, a maggioranza, tutte e due le mozioni. Questo significa che gli ordini del giorno non sono riusciti ad esprimere precisa la differenza fra le due correnti, e che queste due correnti non sono ancora giunte a delinearsi nettamente in modo da costituire una divisione sostanziale fra noi.

Ordine del giorno sullo sciopero generale, proposto da Dunois, Monatte, Fuss-Amorè, Nacht, Zielinska:

Gli anarchici riuniti a congresso, dichiarano di considerare lo sciopero generale espropriatore come un notevole stimolante dell'organizzazione e dello spirito di ribellione nella società attuale, e come la forma con cui può giungersi all'emancipazione integrale del proletariato; lo sciopero generale non può essere confuso con lo sciopero generale politico, che non è altro che un tentativo di politicanti per stornare lo sciopero generale dai suoi fini economici e rivoluzionarii.

Con scioperi generalizzati per località, per regioni, per professioni intere, si solleverà progressivamente la classe operaia e la si trascinerà verso lo sciopero generale espropriatore, che comprenderà la distruzione della società attuale e l'espropriazione dei mezzi di produzione e dei prodotti.

Quest'ordine del giorno raccoglie 25 voti (1).

Ordine del giorno sul terrorismo individuale e collettivo nella lotta contro la borghesia, presentato da Emma Goldmann e Max Baginski:

Il Congresso Internazionale Anarchico di Amsterdam, riconosce, tanto all'individuo come alla massa il diritto alla ribellione nel suo senso più ampio. In generale gli atti di rivolta e gli attacchi energici contro i rappresentanti dello Stato, della plutocrazia ecc. sono psicologicamente il risultato delle impressioni subite sotto la pressione terribile della ingiustizia sociale che ci opprime.

Si può stabilire una regola, che sono appunto i caratteri più delicati e più simpatici quelli su cui le impressioni, spingenti alla ribellione interna od esterna, agiscono più profondamente.

Sotto questo punto di vista, gli atti di rivolta sono le conseguenze socio-psicologiche di un presente insopportabile; e sono soggetti ad essere più o meno ammirati, a seconda del grado di comprensione dei loro motivi interni od esterni.

Nel corso di un qualsiasi periodo rivoluzionario, come in Russia, bisogna anche avere in considerazione quali atti di rivolta sieno un'attacco più diretto contro la base della tirannide, poichè dall'audacia della loro esecuzione proviene l'entusiasmo che dà la possibilità di continuare l'opera di liberazione. Questa possibilità è soprattutto data dal fatto, che gli attentati abbiano luogo contro i più brutali istrumenti o rappresentanti del despotismo.

Il congresso riconosce, con l'accettazione di questa dichiarazione, dal punto di vista morale come do quello dell'atto stesso come propaganda, la sua adesione agli atti individuali di rivolta ed esprime la sua solidarietà con l'azione insurrezionale delle masse.

Data lettura a quest'ordine del giorno, Malatesta propone che esso sia votato piuttosto come una dichiarazione di principio, e non come mozione; ciò data la sua forma, e anche per non essere in rapporto diretto con la questione del sindacalismo. Emma Goldmann e Baginski accettano.

Messa ai voti, la dichiarazione di principii suddetta è approvata all'unanimità.

La discussione sul sindacalismo o lo sciopero generale è terminata.

E' all'ordine del giorno ora il tema: L'Antimilitarismo come tattica dell'anarchismo. (Relatori R. de Marmande e P. Ramus).

Friedeberg, stante l'ora tarda a che è già cominciato in mattinata in una sala attigua il « Congresso Internazionale antimilitarista » (1), propone che il Congresso Anarchico, per questa questione, si fonda con quello.

Malatesta è d'accordo, purchè però prima il Congresso anarchico dica in una risoluzione il suo punto di vista, che poi i suoi delegati sosterranno in quello antimilitarista. Del resto non c'è bisogno di discussione, poichè gli anarchici non possono che essere completamente d'accordo su questa questione.

Marmande: E' del parere di Malatesta e propone che egli e Ramus, relatori su l'antimilitarismo, facciano il loro rapporto al congresso antimilitarista.

Cornelissen: Sarebbe di parere che una vera e propria discussione si facesse invece nel congresso anarchico; poichè dopo il congresso socialdemocratico di Stoccarda ove l'antimilitarismo è stato esaurito e combattuto bisogna che si sappia che gli anarchici non hanno sfuggita la discussione.

Malatesta: Si oppone energicamente poichè il tempo manca, e preme di recarsi al congresso antimilitarista dove si potranno fare tutte le discussioni che si vogliono. Propone un ordine del giorno, il quale poi dovrebbe essere sostenuto da Marmande e Ramus nel congresso antimilitarista.

Il congresso approva la proposta di Malatesta, Friedeberg e Marmande. Si passa alla votazione dell'ordine del giorno Malatesta, cui appongono la loro firma anche altri. E' approvato all'unanimità.

Ordine del giorno Nieuwenhuis, Malatesta, Marmande, Thonar, Cornelissen e Ramus:

Gli anarchici, volendo la liberazione integrale dell'umanità e la libertà completa dell'individuo, sono naturalmente nemici dichiarati di ogni specie di forza ormata nelle mani dello Stato (esercito, gendarmeria, polizia, magistratura ecc.)

Incoraggiano i compagni, secondo le circostanze ed il proprio temperamento, e con tutti i mezzi, alla rivolta individuale, al rifiuto isolato e collettivo del servizio militare, alla disobbedienza passiva od altiva, ed allo sciopero militare per la distruzione radicale degli strumenti di dominazione.

Esprimono la speranza che tutti i popoli interessati risponderanno ad ogni dichiarazione di guerra con l'insurrezione.

E dichiarano di pensare che gli anarchici daranno l'esempio.

Seduta pomeridiana

Nel pomeriggio gli anarchici assistono in massa al congresso antimilitarista, di cui diamo una breve relazione a parte.

L'alcoolismo, L'Associazione produttiva e l'anarchismo, L'educazione integrale, L'Esperanto. — Chiusura del congresso.

Seduta notturna (30 Agosto)

La seduta, diciamo così, ufficiale del congresso è poco numerosa. I delegati sono suddivisi fra il congresso antimilitarista che dura ancora, ed un'adunanza privata dei sindacalisti.

Van Rees (Olanda): Fa un breve rapporto contro l'alcoolismo, in cui sostiene che gli anarchici sono interessati a combattere l'uso dell'alcool, anche nella forma più moderate.

Si decida di rimandare la discussione all'indomani.

Samson: Legge un rapporto breve ma interessante sull' « Associazione produttiva e l'anarchismo ». Sostiene le forme di associazione cooperativa, e le colonia libertarie, come mezzi utili di rifornimento per la classe operaia in tempo di rivoluzione, come complamanto dell'organizzazione sindacale, e come inizio di una organizzazione della società in senso libertario.

— Purtroppo la mancanza di tempo e l'assenza di molti delegati occupati altrove impedisce la discussione. Veramente ormai il congresso che dura da ben sei giorni è stanco e non ascolta più con troppa attenzione gli oratori. Si rimanda anche per quest'argomento dell'Associazione produttiva la prosecuzione della discussione al giorno dopo.

(31 AGOSTO)

Seduta antimeridiana

Il congresso è adunato in seduta privata pel disbrigo di affari di interna organizzazione, per prendere cioè le ultime disposizioni sull' « Internazionale Anarchica ». Presiede E. Malatesta.

Beylie e Broutchoux presentano questo ordine del giorno di solidarietà coi sindacalisti e anarchici francesi condannati per propaganda antimilitarista:

Il congresso constata che il governo della Repubblica Francese agisce contro i lavoratori allo stesso modo come tutti i governi han sempre agito.

Manda un fraterno saluto ai compagni Yvetot, Marck, Levy, Bousquet, Cortot, Soruhot, Berthet, Clementine Delmoth, Labriolle, Petit, ai dodici antimilitaristi che ora si trovano in prigione a Parigi e a tutti i compagni reclusi nelle prigioni della repubblica.

Il congresso invia nello stesso tempo il suo migliore saluto a tutti i difensori della libertà chiusi nelle bastiglie borghesi del mondo intero, e invita l'Ufficio Internazionale, come suo primo atto, a organizzare la difesa e l'aiuto per gli amici prigionieri. (Approvato per acclamazione).

Alla discussione che segue, che non è tale da poter interessare il pubblico, partecipano Thonar, Lange, Schapiro, Wilquet, Goldmann, Baginski, Ceccarelli, Frigario, Vohryzek, Chapeliar a qualche altro.

Si stabilisca che l'Ufficio Internazionale di corrispondenza e di archivio debba essere a Londra, o sia composto dai compagni A. Schapiro, J. Wilquet, R. Rocher, J. Turner ed E. Malatesta.

Si discute poi sul prossimo congresso. Si propongono dai vari congressisti varie località; ma si conclude col lasciare all'Ufficio Internazionale di fare in seguito ai compagni una proposta possibile. Si decide che il prossimo congresso si tenga fra due anni.

Seduta pomeridiana

Presiede Emma Goldmann

L'assemblea si presenta piuttosto stanca. Siamo alla fine. Sull' Educazione integrale dell'infanzia doveva riferire il compagno Léon Clément di Parigi; ma egli non è potuto venire ed ha inviato un lungo rapporto a Marmande il quale lo riassume brevemente. Il congresso approva che questo rapporto sia al più presto pubblicato, ma non si discute e non si prende alcuna risoluzione.

Sulla Rivoluzione in Russia si è già inteso, durante la discussione sul sindacalismo, il rapporto di Rogdaeff, e si è approvato già un'ordine del giorno.

P. Ramus rinuncia a svolgere il suo tema sulla Letteratura moderna e l'Anarchismo; lo stesso fa G. Rijnders per la questione Anarchismo e Religione. Essendo per terminare il tempo stabilito per il congresso non ci sarebbe tempo di discutere.

Sulla questione dell'Alcoolismo è stata presentata questa lunga risoluzione dall'olandese J. Van Rees:

Ordine del giorno sull'alcoolismo, proposto da Van Rees, olandese, con una aggiunta di Chapelier, belga:

1° L'alcoolismo è un'insieme di fenomeni sociali caratterizzati dall'abitudine degli uomini alle bevande alcooliche.

2° Benchè soltanto l'uso smodato del bere con le sue funeste conseguenze vada sotto il nome di alcoolismo, pure anche l'uso moderato delle bibite alcooliche costituisce un fenomeno speciale dell'alcoolismo.

3° Questo alcoolismo generale, e cioè l'alcoolismo moderato che ci rende condiscendenti verso l'abitudine di bere moderatamente, è molto più pericoloso e più inguaribile della stessa intemperanza.

4° L'alcoolismo costituendo una minaccia per i progressi già acquisiti dall'umanità e per il progresso futuro, è necessario che ogni uomo d'intelletto e di cuore smetta l'abitudine di bere.

5° L'anarchismo vuol dire concezione di una vita che ha respinto ogni credenza nella necessità di una autorità esteriore per gli uomini normali.

6° L'influenza che ha l'abitudine « alcoolica » sulle idee e sul modo di vivere degli individui, esercita precisamente una di quelle autorità esteriori che gli anarchici disapprovano.

7° Così l'alcoolismo, oltre ad essere uno dei più grandi flagelli dell'umanità intera, è anche sopratutto una forma di autoritarismo, contrario per conseguenza all'idea anarchica che vuole la liberazione dell'intelletto e della coscienza da ogni autorità esteriore.

8° Gli anarchici, nemici di ogni misura legislativa, sono anche più di tutti gli altri socialisti

(1) La nota alla mozione Friedeberg vale anche per questa. Del resto, tanto l'una che l'altra furono presentate per semplice lettura senza che i congressisti prima ne avessero preso visione a fosse stato possibile discuterle. Moltissimi, fra cui il sottoscritto, si sono astenuti dal votare anche questo ordine del giorno. Del resto quelli che hanno maggiore importanza sono il primo (Malatesta ecc.) e il terzo (Dunois, Monatte ecc.)

(1) Di questo congresso, e della altre adunanze speciali, daremo cenno a parte. La mattina del 30 il Congresso Antimilitarista dedicò le sue sedute limitatamente alle sezioni olandesi dell'Alleanza Internazionale Antimilitarista.

tenuti a combattere l'alcoolismo con mezzi puramente individuali.

9° La propaganda di ogni idea socialista e anarchica è enormemente intralciata da l'alcoolismo smodato o moderato.

10° La società futura anarchica, o sarà nemica di tutte le bevande intossicanti o non sarà anarchica.

Aggiunta Chapelier:

1° L'alcoolismo è, a causa della demoralizzazione che provoca, uno dei più potenti sostegni della società capitalista.

2° I governi sono incapaci di combattere l'alcoolismo e sono del resto interessati ad incoraggiarlo, perchè lo spaccio dell'alcool giova loro ad aumentare le entrate.

La maggior parte dei congressisti si oppone alla discussione per mancanza di tempo. Parecchi sono d'opinione che si debba raccomandare un uso moderato delle bevande alcooliche, ma i più sono ben lungi dal condividere le opinioni estremo del relatore, espresse nella sua mozione. Qualcuno osserva che l'argomento sarebbe più adatto per un congresso sanitario che per un congresso rivoluzionario. Perciò si passa all'ordine del giorno, senza votare la mozione.

Ci sarebbe da discutere il tema: L'Anarchismo come vita e attività individuale; ma sono assenti, non intervenuti al congresso, i relatori E. Armand e Mauricius di Parigi. Il congresso passa oltre senza trattare l'argomento.

All'incirca la stessa cosa avviene per il tema l'Associazione produttiva e l'Anarchia, di cui si dovrebbe seguitare la discussione incominciata la sera prima. E. Chapelier uno dei relatori rinuncia alla parola; l'altro relatore Samson distribuisce al congresso copia poligrafata di questa mozione:

Ordine del giorno Samson sull'associazione produttrice:

Il Congresso internazionale anarchico di Amsterdam è di parere che l'associazione per la produzione, tanto separata che unita al movimento sindacale rivoluzionario, può accordarsi e sorreggersi con l'ideale di una società anarchica.

Sarebbe vantaggioso per la classe operaia che, tanto prima che dopo lo sciopero generale, una quantità di associazioni di produzione potessero venire in aiuto, forti dell'esperienza, a tutta la classe emancipata, organizzando la produzione e lo scambio su una base nettamente anticapitalista ed antiparassitaria.

Il congresso è di parere altresì che nel momento attuale le organizzazioni sindacali rivoluzionarie, come pure tutta la classe operaia, possano trarre un utile dall'applicazione dell'associazione di produzione.

Però, non essendoci più tempo di discutere, si passa all'ordine del giorno senza votare neppure su questa mozione; la quale rimane solo come espressione dell'opinione dei relatori.

E. Chapelier dice poche parole sul tema: La Lingua internazionale e gli Anarchici di cui è relatore per conto della colonia di Boitsfort e della rivista in lingua Esperanto Internacia Socia Revuo. Mancando il tempo egli rinuncia a fare una vera e propria relazione. Propone però al congresso che come linea di massima approvi il seguente ordine del giorno accettato anche da Malatesta e Rogdaeff:

Ordine del giorno sull'Esperanto, proposto da Chapelier, Malatesta e Rogdaeff:

Il congresso comunista anarchico internazionale di Amsterdam, considerando:

1° Che la molteplicità delle lingue costituisce delle frontiere intellettuali e morali ed è quindi un'intralcio alla propaganda delle idee rivoluzionarie;

2° che anche durante le sue discussioni ha potuto costatare che le difficoltà e le inesattezze fatali di traduzione gli hanno fatto perdere almeno i tre quarti del tempo;

3° che l'impiego di una lingua comune faciliterebbe lo scambio delle comunicazioni dell'Internazionale libertaria;

4° che nessuna lingua vivente riunisce le condizioni necessarie di facilità, di neutralità e di flessibilità;

5° che fra tutte le lingue artificiali l'Esperanto è la sola che possa essere seriamente impiegata e che sembri poterlo essere con successo;

fa voti che tutti gli anarchici o per lo meno tutti i militanti studino l'Esperanto, e che in un'avvenire prossimo i nostri congressi internazionali possano farsi in una lingua internazionale.

Amedée Dunois, Robert de Marmande e Fuss-Amoré si oppongono alla votazione, dicendo che il congresso è ben lungi dall'avere un'idea chiara sulla questione, e che del resto un congresso anarchico non è il più adatto per discuterla.

E. Chapelier osserva che [illegible] dovrà fare il suo rapporto, per mostrare come [illegible]sto sia una lingua non solo facile, ma tale da [illegible]le relazioni internazionali dei rivoluzionari [illegible]ne è tutt'altro che futile e inadatta in questo [illegible]. Del resto egli è delegato di numerosi gruppi di [illegible]antisti, e non può permettere che si passi sotto silenzio un problema per discutere il quale è intervenuto al congresso.

E. Malatesta riconosce, pure essendo un cultore della lingua Esperanto, non potersi votare l'ordine del giorno senza discussione, dal momento che non c'è unanimità. Ma poichè manca il tempo per discutere propone al congresso di votare quest'altra mozione, in sostituzione della prima:

Il congresso fa voti che tutti gli anarchici studino il problema di una lingua internazionale.

Il congresso approva, senza che alcuno si dichiari contrario, questo secondo ordine del giorno: mentre non si vota sul primo.

Emma Goldmann, dichiara che essendo esaurito l'ordine del giorno delle discussioni, il congresso è chiuso. L'ordine del giorno da discutersi era forse troppo carico di temi, e perciò quelli di secondaria importanza rimasti per ultimo non si son potuti discutere; ciò che si farà in un congresso susseguente. Invita Errico Malatesta a dire qualche parola di saluto ai congressisti, per chiudere così definitivamente le discussioni.

Errico Malatesta: Compagni, il nostro congresso è finito. Prima che le sedute cominciassero i giornali borghesi di tutti i colori annunciando queste nostre riunioni, facevano la previsione che esse sarebbero state piene di confusione e tumultuose, e sarebbero finite col portare la discordia fra noi. Ebbene questo non si è avverato affatto. Malgrado le difficoltà delle lingue, malgrado che il nostro congresso non avesse avuto quella preparazione materiale che rende più facile l'ordine negli altri congressi, pure il nostro è riuscito uno dei più ordinati che si potesse desiderare; sfatando così le male profezie dei nemici e superando la stessa speranza di molti di noi. Si è detto che il congresso avrebbe provocata una scissione fra gli anarchici; invece, per quanto le nostre opinioni differiscono in molti punti, pure nelle cose principali ci è stato sempre l'accordo. Nè poteva essere diversamente, poichè tutti siamo d'accordo nel volere la stessa cosa: la liberazione dell'umanità da tutte le forme dell'oppressione capitalistica e statale, per mezzo della rivoluzione. Noi pensiamo che il congresso porterà i suoi frutti; ma per questo bisogna che tutti noi, ritornando ai nostri paesi non ci addormentiamo sugli allori di questa odierna manifestazione. Mettiamoci tutti al lavoro!

— Fra il più grande entusiasmo, e al canto dell'Internazionale, quest'ultima seduta del congresso anarchico si scioglie. Si odono in tutte le lingue grida di viva l'anarchia e viva la rivoluzione sociale!

Nella serata, nella grande sala del Plancius, si tenne un comizio pubblico di propaganda anarchica di fronte a più di duemila olandesi. Parlarono P. Ramus, C. Cornelissen, E. Chapelier, Samson, Fuss-Amoré, P. Monatte, Munjits, Oerter, Frauböse, Ludwig.

Le altre riunioni

Il Congresso Antimilitarista.

Il congresso antimilitarista, indetto per cura dell'« Alleanza Internazionale Antimilitarista » si aprì la mattina del 30 agosto.

La seduta antimeridiana fu dedicata completamente alle sezioni olandesi; le riunioni internazionali cominciarono nel pomeriggio dello stesso giorno, alle ore 15.

Presiedeva Vorhyzek, delegato della Federazione anarchica boema.

Eran presenti anche dei socialisti sindacalisti e rivoluzionari francesi, tedeschi e olandesi. Noto anche madama Sorgue.

Portavoce delle idee del congresso anarchico parlò applauditissimo Roberto de Marmande di Parigi, che fece la storia del movimento antimilitarista in Francia, parlando del voltafaccia di Briand, delle persecuzioni subite dai nostri amici per parte del governo repubblicano, ed infine elogiando ed illustrando la propaganda fatta dal nostro amico Gustavo Hervè. Finì col presentare l'ordine del giorno degli anarchici, approvato all'unanimità.

Per la Germania parlarono il dott. Friedorberg, e un altro di cui non ricordo il nome; per la Russia il Rodgaeff, per l'Olanda lo stesso Domela Nieuwenhuis ed il Croiset, per l'Inghilterra Pierre Ramus, per gli Stati Uniti Emma Goldmann, per la Francia oltre il Marmande anche la signora Sorgue; e così altri per altre nazioni, che qui sarebbe inutile enumerare. Aristide Ceccarelli vi rappresentava la Repubblica Argentina. Luigi Fabbri per l'Italia o a nome specialmente della « Sezione Italiana » dell'Alleanza e del giornale La Pace, fece un rapporto sul movimento antimilitarista italiano, parlando della Pace, dell'azione esplicata dai gruppi antimilitaristi, di anarchici e di socialisti, e anche un po' sulla necessità di intensificare questa azione, — oggi un po' troppo circoscritta.

Domela, nel tradurre in tedesco o olandese il discorso di Fabbri ebbe parole di elogio entusiastico per la Pace e per la propaganda del Bartalini. La signora Sorgue pure parlò del movimento italiano che disse di aver conosciuto da vicino, e accennò a un progetto appunto abbozzato in Italia del boicottaggio in tempo di guerra, da parte dei lavoratori del mare, di tutte le navi delle nazioni belligeranti.

A lungo si è discusso sulla opportunità e utilità o meno, di consigliare la diserzione oppure la ribellione ai coscritti. Vari erano i pareri, ma tutti, come capirete, tali che è inutile che i nostri lettori nemici sappiano.

Infatti questa discussione è stata proseguita a porte chiuse l'indomani, con esclusione dei giornalisti.

In seduta privata il 31 agosto, si sono discusse anche parecchie questioni d'indole interna, sull'azione pratica, sul modo di raccogliere mezzi finanziarii, ecc.

Benchè io scriva per un giornale non borghese, pure non cesso per ciò di fare opera giornalistica. E poichè, come giornalista ero escluso dal congresso, e vi partecipavo come congressista, — così mi consentirete di non scendere a particolari sulle discussioni fatte e le decisioni prese nelle sedute private dell'ultimo giorno.

Solo, sono autorizzato a dire che il comitato esecutivo della Alleanza Internazionale Antimilitarista non sarà più da ora in poi composto di soli olandesi, ma di francesi e olandesi insieme; e dovo essere nominato dai compagni delle sezioni delle due nazionalità.

E' stato deliberato anche di scegliere per ogni nazione un corrispondente speciale; dietro proposta di Fabbri, è stato scelto per l'Italia Ezio Bartalini di Genova.

Il congresso si è chiuso con entusiasmo al grido di « Viva l'Internazionale Antimilitarista! ».

Le riunioni sindacaliste

Profittando della presenza al congresso anarchico di Amstordam di un gran numero di militanti sindacalisti di quasi tutti i paesi d'Europa, il Nationaal Arbeiders-Secretariat (Segretariato nazionale dei lavoratori) di Olanda li aveva invitati ad una rinnione nella sua sede la sera del 27 agosto, per intendersi con essi sulla necessità di stabilire rapporti internazionali fra tutte le organizzazioni sindacaliste rivoluzionarie.

Era presente, venuto a tale scopo, Fritz Kater, socialista, presidente dell'Unione libera dei Sindacati tedeschi; Vohryzek e Knotok della Federazione ceca di tutti i mestieri avevano avuto egualmente incarico dalle organizzazioni sindacali boeme di entrare in rapporto con gli altri sindacalisti degli altri paesi.

Monatte della Confederazione Generale del Lavoro di Francia, Broutchoux dell'« Federazione dei Minatori del Passo di Calais, Henri Fuss-Amoré della Federazione del Lavoro del Belgio, Amédée Dunois della Federazione delle Unioni operaie della Svizzera francese, Karl Walter della Unione degli operai industriali per l'Azione diretta di Inghilterra, Aristide Ceccarelli rappresentante di un Sindacato operaio della Repubblica Argentina, presero tutti parte attiva alla discussione, insieme ad altri sindacalisti non operai, come Cornelissen, la Goldmann, Friedeberg, Fabbri ecc.

Ciascuno fece una relazione sul movimento sindacalista del proprio paese. Interessante fu specialmente ciò che disse il Anter per l'« Unione libera dei Sindacati tedeschi » la quale intende rifiutare ogni adesione e collaborazione all'organizzazione centralizzata diretta dai politicanti della social democrazia. Questa fortissima organizzazione tedesca, a cui aderiscono attualmente quindici federazioni di mestiere e sedici organizzazioni locali (Camere o Borse del lavoro), il cui organo centrale ha una tiratura di più che sedicimila copie, si è vista ultimamente esclusa dall'ufficio sindacale internazionale.

Monatte disse che anche le relazioni fra la Confederazione del Lavoro francese e l'Ufficio Internazionale sono molto tese, poichè quest'ultimo si rifiuta di mettere all'ordine del giorno dei congressi internazionali lo sciopero generale, l'antimilitarismo ecc.

Opinione generale fu di costituire un nuovo ufficio internazionale completamente sindacalista e rivoluzionario.

Si discusse a lungo, ma si riconobbe che il far ciò sarebbe stato prematuro, anche perchè la maggior parte dei compagni presenti non avevano avuto alcun mandato in proposito dalle loro organizzazioni. Però ciascuno dei militanti s'impegnò di inviare al più presto al Segretariato nazionale dei lavoratori d'Olanda un rapporto sulla situazione sindacale del proprio paese. I rapporti saranno pubblicati prima in olandese nel giornale quotidiano sin-dacalista di Amsterdam il Volksdagblad; poi saranno tradotti e pubblicati in tedesco, inglese e francese.

Il 30 agosto a sera si tenne la seconda riunione. Dopo molto discutere fu deciso la creazione di un bollettino internazionale sindacalista, di cui si affidò la redazione al compagno Christian Cornelissen. Questo bollettino raccoglierà dai giornali corporativi di tutti i paesi le notizie più importanti, riceverà le corrispondenze dai varj militanti, e trasmetterà questo materiale agli organi centrali delle diverse organizzazioni operaie aderenti alla tattica sindacalista.

Le prime spese di questo ufficio internazionale saranno coperte dai sindacati rivoluzionari di Germania, Boemia e Olanda, i quali avevano dato ai loro delegati un mandato speciale in proposito.

Altre misure d'indole interna e speciale furono adottate, che non è il caso di rendere di pubblica ragione, onde evitare che qualche gesuita della social democrazia possa mettere i bastoni fra le ruote alla nuova iniziativa.

Comunicazioni importanti.

L'INTERNAZIONALE ANARCHICA

Il congresso anarchico di Amsterdam ha creduto utile di creare un organo di comunicazione fra i compagni dei diversi paesi ed ha nominato, a questo scopo, un' Ufficio Internazionale di Corrispondenza.

Questo ufficio non ha altro scopo che quello di facilitare le relazioni fra i compagni che fossero nell'impossibilità di corrispondere direttamente e di trasmettere a tutti gli interessati le notizie e le proposte che gli fossero comunicate.

L'ufficio è incaricato altresì di costituire degli archivi del movimento anarchico che saranno a disposizione di tutti i compagni.

Per adempiere a quest'incarico, l'Ufficio Internazionale si rivolge a tutti gli anarchici e li prega ad inviargli almeno due copie di tutte le pubblicazioni interessanti il movimento.

L'Ufficio Internazionale apre nel tempo stesso una sottoscrizione per coprire il deficit lasciato dal congresso di Amsterdam e per provvedere alle spese del proprio funzionamento.

L'ufficio pubblicherà prossimamente le risoluzioni adottate dal congresso e prega i diversi gruppi o federazioni di fargli sapere il numero di copie che ne desiderano.

IL BOLLETTINO SINDACALISTA

Il Bollettino Internazionale del movimento Sindacalista esce settimanalmente a Parigi, secondo fu deciso in seduta privata dei sindacalisti ad Amsterdam. Suo scopo è di informare i sindacalisti rivoluzionari sul movimento internazionale sindacale. E' necessario che tutti gli organi sindacalisti e corporativi di tutte le tendenze e di tutte le lingue sieno inviati al segretario di redazione: C. Cornelissen 5, rue de la Vallée du Bois, Clamart (Seine) Francia. I compagni, i gruppi e i sindacati che volessero attirar l'attenzione specialmente su qualche notizia o articolo, sono pregati di segnare in lapis bleu i brani di giornale interessanti.

La redazione, che vuol essere di carattere collettivo, accetterà con piacere tutto le critiche e i consigli che le si vorranno dare; e riceverà con piacere tutte le comunicazioni e notizie che i compagni vorranno inviarle.

I compagni sono particolarmente pregati di inviare al più presto possibile al suddetto, tutti gli indirizzi dei Centri Nazionali del movimento sindacale. Questi indirizzi saranno pubblicati nel bollettino.

PER LE SPESE DEL CONGRESSO

Gli organizzatori del congresso internazionale anarchico di Amsterdam pregano caldamente i compagni di aiutarli a colmare il deficit delle spese del congresso, che somma a circa 260 franchi. Ciascuno invii il suo piccolo obolo al cassiere F. L. Bruijn Kepplerstraat 170, Den Haag. — L'Aia. — (Olanda).

PEI COMPAONI ITALIANI

Per l'Italia, in attesa che si costituisca regolarmente l' « Alleanza Anarchica » decisa al Congresso nazionale di Roma, i compagni che aderiscono alle idee ed al lavoro del congresso di Amsterdam, e vogliono contribuire alle spese dell' Ufficio Internazionale o a colmare il deficit delle spese pel congresso di Amsterdam, — quando non volessero rivolgersi direttamente agli indirizzi segnati nei comunicati surriferiti, — possono anche rivolgersi al compagno Luigi Fabbri, Casella postale n. 142, Roma.

Commissioner of Immigration,

Boston, Mass.

Sir:

Pursuant toyour verbal instructions I proceeded last night to Paine Memorial Hall on Appleton St. to listen to a lecture Delivered by Emma Goldman. The lecture was announced totake place at 7.30, but it did not commence until 8.40. There was no one on the platform tointroduce the speaker. Miss Emma Goldman stepped on the platform at 8.40 and promptly began by saying that she was well enpugh known to the audience to need any introductions.

There was a murmur of disappointment in the Hall when it was found that she was to ledture in English, as at least one third of the people assembled could not understand the English language.

There were about 200 people in the Hall (about a dozen of them were women), all belonging to the foreigh element. A young Russian who was sitting next to me tcld me that he was only six months in this country, and felt confident that Miss Goldman would not speak in English, from fear of the Police. He was therefore greatly disappointed when he found that the lecture was tobe in English.

Shortly before the lecture began a young man distributed a leaflet entitled "The Assassination of McKanley from an Anarchas-tic stand point" (appended to this report as Ex. A.) and a card announcing the Annual Anarchistic Ball, known as the "Baueren Ball" (The Peasants Ball), which is totake place on the 3rd of January. (Ex. B).

Not having a note-book with me I did not take notes, but will try to give a digest of the lecture last night.

The lecturer after making the statement mentioned before, that introductions were superfluous inher case, went right on tosay that the subject for her lecture would be "Direct Action as the logical tactic of Anarchism". Christianity-she said-, as wellas the Government of the United States, have failed by employing methods which were not in harmony with the underlying principles or ideas. Anarchism in order to succeed must work out its policy by direct action and not to prepare and delay thereby the achievement aimed at. We cannot expect toaccomplish to-morrow, what we don't begin to do to-day.

She then went on to criticise the tactics of the trade unionism in this country. "They-she said-delay matters by preparing for a strike and negotiating with their masters; by putting it up to arbitration; giving the employers time toprepare themselves for a strike, instead of employing direct action, and that is to strike at once without waiting for to-morrow. The trade unions in France have accomplished more in a few days than the trade unions have in this country for te last 20 years. The strike of the Electricians inParis was won in 24 hours, because they resorted to direct action. They didn't say to their employers: "We are going tostrike six months hence. Prepare yourselves", but enveloped the entire city in darkness striking at once."

She then scored the Public School system in this country. She said, that the children here are taught old and work out and decayed ideas; taught tobow dwn toauthority, to be law abiding; they are killing the individuality of the child, by teaching false history; submission to government, etc. She related the most modern school as introduced by a wellknown French Anarchist, Sebastian Faure, where children don(t have to gothrough the humdrum methods of discipline, where the child's mind is allowed tobe developed intonormality. She said, that this new system isbeing greatly propagated through the European countries.

She then took upthe matter of voting and abjured allthose whoare radically inclined from going to vote. She said" Refrain from voting. By going tovote you acknowledge yourself tobe a weakling unable to manage your own affairs; you give the power into the hands of unscrupulous legislators, be they Republicans, Democrats or Social Democrats, to get the best of you. Try and train the people to shun the Army, or militarism in any form. Let them see that when they are increasing the Army and Navy in this country, it is not for the purpose, as given out, tofight for your country; but for the purpose of shooting your poor and down trodden brethern down in case of a strike. It is to protect Capital and nothing else. It is not tofight the External Enemy, but to crush down the Internal Enemy. Enlistment in the Army is not compulsory in this country, stillthere are enough fools here who voluntarily allow themselves to be trained as murderers.

Some of the startling statements she made were:

"A Revolution in this country is bound tocome and not in the very remote future".

"Law abiding citizens, who believe in Government, Law and Order, are as a rule men with very little brains".

"It is not wrong for people in time of a strike to destroy their own products".

Outside of these statements, one could easily perceive that great precaution was used by her in couching her statements. While it was easily understood what she meant by "Direct Action", it was left tothe public toconjecture, as tothe real meaning of it. When after the meeting was over she invited the audience toask questions and the question was put to her, as towhat she meant by direct action, she gave an evasive answer.

She wound up her lecture by taking up the Institution of marriage, and ridiculed the idea of having the State or Chur[illegible] anything todo with such private affairs. " I have yet-she said-tofind a man who really believes in the sanctity of marriage; but man expects woman to believe in the sanctity of married life. Donot allow any one to meddle in your love affairs. Neither priest, minister, Rabbi or Justice has anything tosay in matters of such a private nature."

Among those who participated in the debate at the close of the lecture was a Russian Leth; an Armenian; a Russian Jew and one who spoke with a strong English accent.

I tried very hard tofind out as tohow Miss Goldman gained entrance tothis country, but there was no one who could throw any light upon it.

I may add, that contrary toexpectations, the meeting was of an extremely orderly nature. There seemed to be even a damped air of apathy, but that may be due to the fact that as I said, at least a third of the audience could not follow the lecture in English.

The meeting closed at 10.30 with the announcement by Miss Goldman that copies of the November issue of "Mother Earth", could be procured at the door, at 10 cents a copy. Mother Earth is an Anarchistic magazine (Monthly) published by Emma Goldman. I procured a cpy of it, but had no time as yet toperuse it.

Respectfully,

Louis J. Domas

I hear them call, and every sun-kissed sail
Dipping across the swollen twilight tide
Draws forth my life on crimson quest. They call!
The birds can answer with their screaming flight,
The clouds obey and float into the sun,
Or trail across the moon like midnight prayers.
All nature answers but the soul of man,
Who longs but cannot leave his lazy gods.

Awake! away! the voices call to you,
To wander and become a throbbing part
Of all sweet things life yields the hungry years;
To feel earth's pulse in cyclic rhythm beat
Beneath her sacred dust, each grain a heart,
The passionate heart of some wild wayfarer
In quest of peace, he found, if found at all,
In that last sunless, starless sleep of death;

To climb the heights above life's noise and fret,
With rapt prophetic eye behold the earth,—
The warm, the welcome, patient earth of man,
Scarred by his toil, made scarred by his blood;
To sit at eve and watch the lights leap forth,
And burn and fade and flicker into gloom,
In shadowy towns whose sad chimes voice the hush
Of honied twilight golden in its grief;

To clutch life in her naked strength and know
A deeper sense of vital common things;
To take the rough and smooth with equal faith,
Content with little and not proud with much;
To nurse your heart upon the hill's wild breast,
Beating in unison with better things,
Till it become the harbor of the dreams
And aspirations of time's wisest souls,—

The spirits of the mighty dead whose feet
Have kissed the stony highways of the world,
Divine outcasts, forgotten or betrayed,
Careless af life's rewards, who wend their way
With cosmic disregard and starry faith,—
Companions brave whose lonely muttered prayers
Become the battle hymns that nations sing
When whirlwind-like they shatter thrones and creeds.

The forests whisper and the rivers plead:
"All palaces are prisons to the free,
Whose hopes o'erleap life's fetters, and whose hearts
Beat yearning toward that nameless goal where suns
And seas melt in a golden dream, and love,
Grown strong with tears and wiser through the years,
Alone upon the silent verge of night,
Looks out and sees the vision of the stars."

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

We doubt whether it were possible twenty years ago for a high officer of the army to suggest the introduction into this country of the outrageous European system of conscription, or compulsory military service. Under no previous régime, not even under that of the plutocratic President McKinley, would anybody have dared to insult the nation by such a suggestion as was recently made officially to the War Department.

Indeed, you shall know the tree by its fruit. An impartial examination of Roosevelt's administration clearly establishes this all-important fact: the anti-social spirit of imperialism and militarism has found its most determined exponent in the Rough Rider. The last vestiges of American liberty are being summarily annihilated, and if the people do not at once take a determined stand against the encroachments of militarism, they will soon find themselves bound hand and foot.

It has been well said that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance. Where are the liberty-loving Americans to raise their voice in a thunderous protest against this no less humiliating than dangerous suggestion of converting the citizen into a professional murderer, whenever the White House clique will deem conscription timely? The first step in that direction has already been made. There is a law on the national statute books, according to which every citizen between eighteen and forty-five years of age can be made a soldier and impressed into service at any time. That is the so-called Dick Military law, passed by Congress and signed by the President in a quiet, sneaking manner. Not one man in a thousand is aware of the existence of this outrageous statute; but the people will quickly realize its sinister meaning once the law is put into operation. But then it may be too late. The time for a mighty protest is now—let the people as one man raise their voice against this systematic, Jesuit-like undermining of the spirit of liberty.

The matter concerns the nation as a whole. But the working class especially must realize the dire peril threatening organized labor from this spectre of imperialism and militarism. We sound the warning note to you, workingmen of America: the capitalist class is forging these new chains for labor. Awake and act—or it may soon be too late!

The experience of past generations echoes and re-echoes this one great lesson of all history: the persistence of the ideal. Prison and scaffold, guillotine and garrotte—how miserably impotent are they all to stifle the human aspirations towards liberty and joy! Persecution but serves to accentuate the ideal, to strengthen its votaries in their devotion and self-sacrifice.

The plutocracy of America is probably beginning to realize this eternal truth. Twenty years ago they successfully strangled, they thought, the voice of Anarchism. But lo! the blood of the martyrs has proven the seed of the Church. Out of the silent graves have grown, hundredfold, the crimson blossoms, and the winds of time have carried the fructifying pollen far and wide—Anarchy lives!

It were too much, however, to expect the police providence of New York to appreciate the lessons of history. Their vision does not transcend the station blotter; their interest is absorbed in the question of graft. But even graft is conditioned by a certain kind of zeal. It is necessary to remind the people, now and then, of the protecting activity of the Department. And it is equally necessary to improve the opportunity of impressing upon the people the liberty which we enjoy in the United States—hence a mass-meeting is prohibited and the majesty of the law once more vindicated by the big stick.

But nothing equals the arbitrariness and brutality of the police like their stupidity. Brute force made it impossible for us to hold the announced mass meeting at Manhattan Lyceum, in commemoration of the men judicially strangled in 1887. But fortunately the Anarchists and their sympathizers possess more wit than police captains. The meeting was held, though in a different place. And although the police decreed, with transcendent wisdom, that no English should be spoken in a public meeting in New York, their orders were ignored, while the bluecoats were admonished to listen to the English speeches that they might for once in their lives hear the truth and profit thereby,—if possible for them.

But it is time to call a halt to the dictatorial proceedings of the New York Police Department which even invades our ballrooms and strives with all might to create trouble.* This "arm of the law" is a common disturber of the public peace. We hereby serve notice on Commissioner Bingham to call off his bloodhounds, the uniformed loafers, and we demand him to protect the public peace against the police ruffians.

This year's convention of the American Federation of Labor had a golden opportunity. It could have gone down in history as an epoch-making factor in the movement of organized labor. For many are the problems, many and serious indeed, that face the workingman and are awaiting intelligent and courageous solution. Unfortunately, however, it cannot be truthfully said that the convention will prove a milestone in the economic emancipation of labor.

We note with satisfaction, however, that the convention defeated the resolution in favor of government ownership of railways. It is to be hoped that the objection to the resolution was based on a thorough understanding of the true mission of government, as the servant of the capitalist class.

The arguments against the resolution were to the effect that if the railways were owned and operated by the government, all the railway workers would be government employees; then any organized attempt on their part to improve the conditions of labor by the strike or similar action would be construed as a seditious movement against the government and would be suppressed, as has been done in various European countries.

* Enraged by the perfect, really Anarchist order that prevailed in the ballroom, the police vented their spite by arresting comrade J. Edelson, absolutely without provocation, at 2 A. M. as he was about to leave the hall. A young lady, protesting against the clubbing of Edelson, was also arrested. Both were fined.

These are sound arguments. We trust that back of them is the realization that government and its ally, capitalism, are the eternal enemies of labor. Once this is thoroughly understood by the rank and file, and fearlessly acted upon, an important step will have been taken on the road to complete industrial emancipation.

We sincerely regret that the convention failed to officially honor the solemnity of the day on which it assembled. Had the delegates forgotten that it was the twentieth anniversary of the judicial murder of the martyrs of Chicago? Or perchance did they lack the courage of publicly bearing witness to their solidarity with those victims of capitalism?

In what cause did the Chicago Anarchists die? Were they not the foremost champions of labor? Had they not offered up their precious lives on the altar of the oppressed? Had they not suffered death in the very attempt to better the conditions of American labor?

The martyrs of 1887 forfeited their lives because of their courageous and intelligent devotion to the cause of the workingman. It was they who inaugurated the eight-hour movement in this country. They demanded, and taught the workingman to demand, more human conditions for the producers of all wealth. For this they died. Shall labor, then, which now enjoys the fruits of those noble men's lives and deaths, fail to appreciate their devotion and sacrifice? Shall the great central body of organized labor of America play the rôle of a Judas?

Reverently may we honor the memory of our noble dead.

A recent issue of the American Industries, the official organ of the National Manufacturers' Association, makes some very serious charges against Samuel Gompers and other labor officials of national reputation.

Mr. Gompers is charged with getting big private commissions on the great amount of printing given out by the A. F. of L., with being in various partnerships for the issuing of official labor publications (in this case a facsimile of an alleged receipt, given by him for his share of profits in such a private undertaking, is printed), with being interested in schemes whereby enormous commissions are paid out to advertising agents for the American Federationist with the suggestion that out of it he gets thousands of dollars of graft, with selling printing privileges in connection with the souvenirs that were formerly gotten out and putting the money in his pocket, and with being guilty of many other offenses, in his private and official capacity.

It has been argued in some quarters that, as the charges emanate from an unscrupulous and malevolent source, they could not be dignified by a denial. But such an argument is entirely fallacious. The allegations against Mr. Gompers are far too serious and the charges too specific to be ignored. As the official representative of an important labor body, Samuel Gompers owes it both to himself and to the American workingmen at large to clear himself entirely and absolutely of the charges made against him. The question of his honesty and integrity is at stake—he must demand an immediate and searching investigation by impartial persons.

We trust that Mr. Gompers will face the charges squarely, for the sake of the American labor movement.

We fondly hope that the good name of Mr. Gompers will soon be cleared. We offer our services as impartial investigators.

In a recent communication to the press a certain reverend gentleman takes pains to prove that the occupation of brakeman is more than twice as dangerous as the murderer's.

He supports his claim by figures. During the year 1904, out of 106,734 trainmen employed on the railways of the United States 3,632 were killed. During the same year 8,482 murders and homicides were committed in this country, for which crimes 116 persons were executed. In other words, during the year in question one brakeman in about thirty met his death, and one murderer in about seventy-three. Thus the brakeman's occupation is more than twice as dangerous as the murderer's.

The reverend is quite right. He might have added that not only brakemen, but workmen in scores of other trades and occupations are as brutally and recklessly sacrificed to the Moloch of greed. But what is the clergyman's remedy? He says:

"In view of the above facts, was I not right in urging upon the recent Diocesan Convention that to infuse a modicum of theistic morals into the teaching of the public schools would do no harm?"

Does the reverend idiot mean that by "infusing theistic morals" the brakeman would be saved from the crushing wheels? Or is he concerned only with saving the soul?

At the risk of shocking our sky-pilot we suggest that it would do no harm to infuse a modicum of respect for human life into the gold-dust heart of the capitalist and—a grain of sense into reverend heads.

Some parsons want to force religious instruction—especially their own particular brand—into the curriculum of our public schools. But why should Jewish or Mohammedan citizens be forced to pay for the Christian instruction of their children? And besides, what connection is there between education and religious instruction? Do they not mutually exclude each other?

The citizens who have the welfare of their children at heart will not permit the public schools to be converted into hot-beds of idolatry and jingoism.

A rather sensible question was asked by one of the participants at the Presbyterian Brotherhood, recently in session at Cincinnati, O. "How may one be a Christian and at the same time earn a living?" was the query. "I do not see how a man can be a Christian working for concerns which practically force him to steal and lie," argued the questioner.

We welcome most heartily this very unusual Christian display of honesty and common sense. The press dispatches report that "the debate was stopped by the operation of the two-minute rule." We regret that the brethren lacked the courage to go on record on this important question. Evidently they clearly realized the "danger" of such questions. For if a Christian is synonymous with an honest man, then how can a follower of the Nazarene rob, steal and take advantage of the misfortune or needs of his fellow man?

But it were dangerous for divine and earthly parasitism to allow this question to be discussed. Has it not been said that the camel could as easily pass through the eye of a needle as a rich man land in heaven? An Oriental allegory which in modern speech has crystallized into the truism—property is theft.

The Pittsburg Railways Company, operating all the street car lines in that city, has served notice on its employees that it will rigidly enforce the rule against the use of cigarettes or liquor while the men are either off or on duty.

Of course, this is a free country. But even the plantation "nigger" was never such an abject slave in antebellum days as the American workingman is to-day, when his economic masters dare to commit such rape upon the manhood of labor.

We read in the press that—

"The Queen of Spain has not forgotten the dastardly act of the Anarchists on her wedding day. So when the visit to England was arranged she despatched her beloved baby two days ahead, safely and surreptitiously in the care of nurses and detectives. Then she and the King brought with them another baby, and it was only when Kensington Palace was reached that the devoted mother again clasped her own infant in her arms.

"Had the King and Queen been blown up with the substitute baby, the real one would have had a poor chance of recognition. It is easy to imagine the Carlist onslaught on such a pretender. But a mother's love did not concern itself with this. All she wanted was to safeguard her child.

"As a sidelight on this story it may be mentioned that the baby which accompanied the royal couple was constantly on show in Paris and was extensively photographed there in its nurse's arms when the party stopped there en route for England. Nobody there seemed to think it was a bogus prince."

It would be interesting to know whether the great "mother's love" paused to consider the feelings of that other mother whose baby she wilfully exposed to the danger of being blown up.

It is just such cruel and inhuman indifference to the lives of the "subjects" that may have prompted "the dastardly act of the Anarchists." "Dastardly," indeed, when one thinks of a Morales, intelligent, brilliant, beautiful, with all the ease possible at his command, yet cheerfully laying down his life to avenge the crimes and brutalities committed by royal parasites upon the people of Spain.

Morales dastardly; and the Queen an "affectionate, loving mother," quite willing to sacrifice—not one, but thousands of innocent babes to save her "prince."

The idolatry of the golden calf has produced a goodly crop of evils. The spirit of commercialism has created and is fostering many forms of prostitution. But the most despicable prostitute—because the most corrupting and fatal in his wide influence—is the man who sells his pen for filthy lucre—the literary time-server, the deifier of the rich and powerful.

The author of the recently published "Ethics in Action" is making a bold bid as the heavyweight of the literary tenderloin. His pretended moral philosophy is a wild eulogy of Diaz, the Perfidious, the executioner of Mexico, the jailer of liberty, the torturer of helpless innocents. "The character of Porfirio Diaz," says this ethical author, "will serve as an example and a model of the virtues for the youth of the country"!

Well does the world know the character of Perfidious Diaz. Has he not throttled every free expression in Mexico? Has he not faithfully aided the home exploiters to press out the last drop of blood from widows and orphans? Has he not reduced labor to the last extremity, and steadily encouraged peonage, enslaving the country for the benefit of the ring of masters? Has he not thrown men and women by the hundreds into the prisons? Has he not ordered men to be tortured into alleged confessions? Has he not proven himself a Mexican Tsar, the hangman of his country?

There are naive people who believe that the province of literature is to emphasize what is beautiful and noble, to inspire mankind with the ideal, and by truthfully picturing the pettiness and sordidness of our lives to cultivate in us the ambition for better and higher things. In fine, literature means truth, real and possible—can one imagine a more pitiful, degraded sight than the literary prostitute?

CHRISTMAS ADVENTURES OF JESUS

SEVERAL weeks before the Christmas holidays Christ decided to descend on earth in human form, in order to inspect his work of salvation.

The first place he came to was Golgotha. He recognized it, as well as the entire neighborhood of Jerusalem, by the poverty and filth prevailing there. Those places had changed little during the two thousand years of Christianity's reign.

The heathens had disappeared; the Romans were not in evidence. Turks, Christians and Jews had taken their place; the disciples of Mahomed and of the Nazarene were bickering over the exclusive possession of the Holy Sepulcher.

"How anxious they are about me," thought Christ, deeply moved. But, upon closer inspection, he found that the monks and dervishes were quarreling because each side wanted to monopolize the legend of the angels for business purposes.

"Thus I serve these people as an advertisement to attract the gullible; how peculiar the success of my vicarious atonement!"

Then Christ asked to be told about the various religions.

He was shown a bottle containing the blood-drops of Gethsemane—the blood that man's fear had made him shed through the treachery of Judas Iscariot.

"Blood of my bleeding?" thought Jesus, gazing wonderingly at the strange-looking contents of the bottle. He soon learned that it was the blood of a sheep—a parallel to Christ, who was led to the block, the victim of calculating greed.

Then he was shown nails, the very ones with which he was crucified.

"How vicious to preserve these horrible things," thought Christ. He was mistaken, however; the nails he saw were of American manufacture, furnished to the foreign markets at lower prices than at home. They were probably a gift to the pious hucksters of Jerusalem by an American priest—no doubt, a disciple of Archbishop Ireland.

Among other things Christ saw the sacred head band-well as of the aims, remote and immediate, of Anarchist work—which should be binding on every one who chooses voluntarily to declare himself a member of the organization, and for whose political acts the party is morally responsible to the public.

Federalist principles and autonomous home-rule should be the basis of the general organization of the party, allowing free scope to each local group to do its local work, except in matters of general importance, when it should be expected to follow the decision of the party—to which every group gives its voluntary allegiance and from which it may at any time secede at will. And

(3) That the Anarchist Congress declare for pacific methods of propaganda generally (emphasizing the broad distinction between the Anarchist movement proper and the trade union or syndicalist movements with which Anarchists are in very strong sympathy), and specifically —for the participation in the political life of the people. Not, indeed, with any view of ultimately seizing the political power and decreeing the Anarchist society, but by taking advantage of the political issues of the day, or by creating new issues, solely to spread decentralizing principles of government and to counteract the manifest tendencies of State Socialism.

Since our work is primarily educational in character, and since the great social transformation contemplated by Anarchism can never be realized except through the process of evolution, it is clear that our office is that of the educator and not of the chastiser, that of the teacher, not of the hangman. The tyrant may be conspired against and removed; the despotic brood may be eradicated by the bomb of the patriot, but you cannot remove "the tyranny of the majority" by firearms. Our method of work must, therefore, be the evolutional method—superceding the old forms of life by the introduction of new ones—which is itself a process of incessant struggle between the forces of liberation and the forces of oppression. But the arena where the Anarchist battle may be fought and won is too extensive to be confined within the narrow limits of trade unionism; it must needs embrace the wide field of the social and political life of the people at large.

DR. J. A. MARYSON.

REPLY

Since Dr. Maryson wanted the Amsterdam Congress to act on his resolutions, it seems strange that he failed to submit them to the Congress, instead of sending them to MOTHER EARTH four months later.

Needless to say, our magazine will always maintain "the liberal principle of 'hear the other side.'" But as the majority of delegates to the Amsterdam Congress do not read English, it will do Dr. Maryson but poor service to have his resolutions in MOTHER EARTH.

True, the Doctor's resolutions were discussed at a small meeting (not at a representative conference) shortly before I left for Europe. But even there few of the comrades could see the logic of the resolutions or agree with Maryson's proposals.

It was suggested that I take them to the Congress. But as I was—and still am—absolutely opposed to them, I could not consistently represent the Doctor's views. Knowing that a five-cent stamp could carry Dr. Maryson's paper to the Congress, I did not wish to take it along.

I hold that the Doctor's position is illogical and contradictory.

"The Anarchist Congress is to adopt a resolution declaring in explicit and unmistakable terms its abhorrence of the practice of assassination for the purpose of protest—the so-called propaganda by deed."

Well and good. But Doctor Maryson wants such acts "clearly distinguished from acts of tyrannicide, in specific cases, and from acts of resistance to oppression generally." That is, he wanted the Congress to exercise the power of decision as to what constitutes "tyrannicide, acts of resistance to oppression or acts purporting to avenge crying wrongs." The former, Dr. Maryson himself thinks, "nowadays may need to be encouraged rather than discouraged."

The doctor may be able to reconcile such inconsistency with his conception of Anarchism, but to expect it from an Anarchist Congress is, to say the least, very naïve.

I do not think that I mistake the conception of freedom or the judgment of the Amsterdam delegates when

I venture to say that not one of them would have assumed the right to decide when "the practice of assassination" is "for the purpose of protest," or when it is "tyrannicide," or "an act of resistance to oppression generally."

My contention is supported by the fact that the Congress unanimously accepted the suggestion of the American delegates that "the Congress declare itself in favor of the right of rebellion on the part of the individual, as well as on that of the masses; that all terrorist acts be considered from a psychological standpoint, being the result of the impression made on the individual by the terrible pressure of our social injustice."*

The second resolution of the Doctor was acted upon by the Congress, though the latter did not have the benefit of Mr. Maryson's suggestions. The International, based upon sectional, national and international relations, was formed. But the delegates were probably too Anarchistic to make their declarations "binding" for those willing to join the organization.

The third point was also touched upon, but hardly to the satisfaction of Doctor Maryson. The Congress has indeed discussed "specific methods," such as the participation of Anarchists in the syndicalist and anti-militarist agitation. As to "participation in the political life of the people," I am glad to say that herein, too, the delegates were too Anarchistic and too well aware of the corrupting influence of politics to advise such participation. Of course, Dr. Maryson does not want Anarchists to participate in politics "with any view of ultimately seizing the political power and decreeing the Anarchist society." Nor did the Social Democrats aim at that when they originally urged participation in politics. They, too, looked upon it as a means "of taking advantage of the political issues," etc. Where they have landed every one knows who is at all acquainted with the Social Democratic movement. Or does Dr. Maryson want us to believe that he, as Prime Minister à la MM. Millerand, Clemenceau and Briand, would act differently?

A political party, to be successful, must become centralized. Yet the Doctor would have us participate in politics "for the purpose of spreading decentralizing principles of government."

Indeed, we cannot "remove the tyranny of the majority by fire-arms." Nor by anything else, dear Doctor, if we are to become a political party.

"Our methods of work must be the evolutional method, superceding the old forms of life by the introduction of new ones." Exactly. But what are those new forms of life? Surely not participation in politics, which means the continuation of government, hence the conserving of old forms. Do not the new forms of life rather consist in the attempt to practically apply the ideas of Anarchism right now,—that we should not, for instance, try to enrich ourselves at the expense of others; nor seek the protection of government and hold government positions; nor to benighten our children in the public schools, cater to public opinion, tyrannize over and dictate to others, and bow to the existing standards of morality. It seems to me that these are the new forms of life, and that they will take the place of the old not by preaching or voting, but by living them.

THE NECESSITY FOR TERRORISM IN RUSSIA

By KELLOGG DURLAND.

TERRORISM, in Russia, is a phase of warfare essential to the side of the people because of the peculiar circumstances under which the revolution is being conducted. The terrorist bears the same relation to the general movement that the skirmisher or the sharpshooter bears to a regular army.

It is not true that the Russian people "set an example" of murder and assassination. The arch murderers and wholesale assassins of Russia are to be found in the clique surrounding Nicholas II. and lesser minions in the police and military service throughout the country.

I know of no more cruel or absurd judgment than that so often passed in America condemning terroristic activity. Such censure is invariably based on profound and deplorable ignorance. Terrorism does not precipitate "rivers of blood." It dams these rivers, which have already been started by the officials of the government.

before a court of might, which to me is synonymous with the highest injustice. I do not speak to impress the Court, but to propagate our ideas, as I know that what I say here will be carried to the people at large."

Comrade Sophus Rasmussen, editor of Skorpionen, who had suffered much persecution at the hands of the police, was recently exiled to Sweden, owing to the expected visit to Denmark of the Tsar's mother.

As the presence of Rasmussen was vital to the continuation of his publication, our comrade returned home after a few days' absence. Unfortunately, the police got wind of his presence. His arrest was ordered, but Rasmussen resisted, killing one police officer and then committing suicide. Another noble victim added to the long list of governmental cruelty and persecution.

ARGENTINE.

Our contemporary, La Protesta, is still in the field in spite of all governmental attempts at suppression, and our movement is growing in spite of all persecution.

One of the most, if not the most, magnificent of strikes has recently terminated. The railway traffic of the whole republic was almost paralyzed, and it was a strike of pure solidarity on the part of all the railways but one.

The Argentine Great Western, which runs about eighty leagues from Mendoza in the Andes to the City of San Luis, refused to accede to the demands of the engine drivers. So they struck, and as the government and the other railway companies helped that one every way they could, the engine drivers of all the others also struck work, thus bringing the manager of the Great Western to his senses. Prices went up in the city of Buenos Ayres enormously. Meat and bread were already very scarce when the men's committee agreed to accept arbitration on a very favorable basis. There is a very extensive web of rails in this country (19 railways).

MEXICO.

The régime of Dictator Diaz is daily growing more outrageous. Recently the government adopted a new method of throttling labor organizations and making strikes impossible. The government declared that labor leaders and agitators advocating strikes will be deported to the island of Las Ores Marias, the Mexican Devil's Island.

A CORRECTION

Owing to a perhaps natural misunderstanding, it was stated in the American report to the Amsterdam Congress that I am a worker in the cause of Anarchist Communism. The report should have said Anarchism, simply, as I am not now, and never have been at any time, a Communist. I was for several years an individualist, but becoming convinced that a number of the fundamental propositions of individualistic economy would result in the destruction of equal liberty, I relinquished those beliefs. In doing so, however, I did not accept the proposed economy of Communism, which in some respects would entail the same result, destruction of equal freedom; always, of course, in my opinion, which I very willingly admit should not be weighed by others as of equal value with the opinions of those who make economy a thorough study, but which must, nevertheless, remain supreme with me. I am an Anarchist, simply, without economic label attached.

NOTES

The paper read at the Amsterdam Congress on the "Situation in America," and the report of the proceedings at the Congress itself, are excellent propaganda material. We therefore offer the September, October and November issues of MOTHER EARTH—which contain the reports referred to—for the nominal sum of 10 cents per set of three numbers. We urge our readers to send in their orders at once.

We take occasion to call the attention of all those interested in radical literature that we have made arrangements to take subscriptions to MOTHER EARTH and "Eugenics" at the yearly price of $1.75 for both magazines. As the regular subscription price of "Eugenics" is now $1.50, we advise all sympathizers to take advantage of this offer.

Commissioner of Immigration,

Boston, Mass.

Sir:

Pursuant to your instructions I proceeded to Lowell, Mass., last night and attended a lecture given by Emma Goldman at the Odd Fellows Hall, #84 Middlesex St. The lecture was given in English and the subject was "TradeUnionism". Inmany respects it was a repetition of the lecture she gave here in Boston at Paine's Memorial Hall several weeks ago, a report of which I submitted to you at the time. "Direct Action by Trade Unions" was mainly what she advocated

I shallattempt to give the substance of her lecture in brief.

241

"Conservative trade unionism, the way it is carried on in thi country, consists of a body of certain workingmen of a certain trade getting together and organizing for the purpose of getting a few minutes less labor and a few pennies more pay. They will get together and discuss the advisability of a strike and then confer with their employers. They willgive their employers sufficient time tp prepare for the strike, while they themselves remain entir ly unprepared for it.

124

Just take the Printers Strike for instance in New York. The printers in the different publishing houses in New York gave their employers notice that within four months they have decided to go out on a strike. The publishers at once proceeded to inform their contributors and urged them tosend material four months in advance and the most ardent among the printers, who got up the strike, worked overtime to get the stuff out and the reby preparing their employers for the strike, and naturally killed allprospects of ever winning that strike.

"I had the good fortune to be present in San Francisco when the Carmen strike broke out. For a month before they struck the employers were informed that on a certain day at a certain time they would go out on a strike if their grievances were not adjusted. The employers at once sent for enough blacklegs or scabs, who were quietly stored away tobe used on the occasion. Then on one morning at two oc'lock when every body was in bed and street cars were not needed, the workmen took the cars tothe sheds, left them in proper order and good shape, and then the strike was declared on. The following morning the cars were out as usual and manned by the scabs wo were brought over by the Company for the emergency. In addition to that when it was found that these scabs were not through in their work, and one of the cars was stuck in middle of the street thereby blockading traffic, the president of the Carmen's Union, who had not done any workhimself for over five years and was receiving a good salary, paid by the hard eraned money of the poor carmen, boarded that car and took it tote station. How could they win the strike this way?--Just think how easily they could have won, if instead the carmen decided to strike on the spur of the moment,at a busy time of the day, left the cars on the tracks, and refused to move them a step further unless they were granted their just demands the employers would have to come to terms".

"The Electricians strike in Paris illustrates the wisdom of drect action ~~of a str~~ in a strike. They struck at a time when the streets of Paris were gay with allsorts of festivities; when the fashionable ladies wre out in their automobils; when all the fashionable restaurants were brilliantly lighted; when the theatres were filled to the doors. All of a sudden the entire city was enveloped in darkness, and naturally the strike had to be settled at once, without any more ado. It also showed these gay and fashionable people, who take everything as theirdue that back of these Electric Lights there is a force they never dreamt of, and never took the trouble to consider.

"Another great error of the Trade Unions nowadays, inthis country, is that every branch of trade looks out for its own interests only. There should be no such think as the Union of the Textile Workers; the Shoemakers Union; The Bakers Union. There should be an international brotherhood of workingmen, and when they are to strike they should strike all at once and together. Just imagine two millions and a half of the American Federation of Labor going out on a strike, without any notice to employers, how quickly a settlement would be feached at, as it is not so easy to replace two millions and a half of workingmen all at once.

"Mind you, that in my personal opinion, even if you bring the eight hour law, around and get a few more pennies for your labor, that is far from bringing around the millenium, as long as there is somebody to direct you to work, even four hours a day or even four ~~months~~ minutes a day. But I am speaking to-night from a trad unionists point of view, and I will simply tell you that conservative trade unionism has had its day and served its purpose. A new method of action must be adopted to vanquish capital.

"Conservative Trade Unionism believed that there is a felationship existing between capital and labor, in spite of the fact that big brother "Capital" tramples under feet poor weak sister "Labor". They th refore tried to get their demands settled in a lawful way and their managers wee law abiding citizens and desirable citizens, who were dined and "wined" at the White House, and declared by Teddy tobe in avery respect desirable citizens, wholook for peace and quiet. I tellyou friends, the law is the friend of the capitalist and never had any frie ndly feeling for the poor downtrodden laborer. An eminent Lawyer of New York once said that there are more laws on the Statute Books then one could observe even in a life lasting three hundred years. But laws are not made for the purpose of being observed. They are made tobe held out as scarecrows tothe poor in case they get restless and cease tobe law abiding citizens. At the point of the bayonet and supported by law the poor are quickly hushed and everything assumes a peaceful mien.

"You are being taught in your Sunday Schools that there is a Supreme Being, who supervises everything on earth, and that there must be rich and poor; that it is in the order of things to have and employer and an employee.)) Voltaire very wisely said: "If there is a supreme being and could not manage any better than he did in these many years, it is hight time that he be deposed from his throne of rule". The Church is always with the rich and the successful. They preach to you about loyalty to your country. Whose country? The Country of the Rockefellers, the Morgans, the Astors and the Vanderbilts? It is about time you woke up and see the absurdity of allthese myths. We are cavilized and losing our sense of hearing and seeing. The savage indian put is ear to the earth and can hear the hoofs, and the sound of his enemy coming on miles distant but you hear not nor do you see beycnd your noses.

"Another essential thing for the Trade Unionists is to organize the body of "unemployed", as they are doing now abroad. Get them together and greet them as your brothers and promise toshare with them while they are out of work, so that they could not be used by your enemies the capitalists as scabs in case of a strike.

"Why shpuld the workmen be under moral obligations tonotify his employer when he wants tostrike? Does your mill owner ever thinkof notifying you whenhe intends tolockycu out for an indefinite period?

"Theed is a panic to take place, although our authorities the tools of the rich are trying to hush it up, even appealing to the Church to appease the people. But is bound to come. Now, let me tellyou , no man, woman or child has any right to go h ungry or go without shelter as long as there are mansions and house enough shelter all of us, and the warehouses are full.

" I know this is high treason you will day. It is criminal to lay hands on private property. But whose property is it? Does it belong the man who produced it or to the one who appropriates what others have produced? Who ix the thief, you who are demanding what is yours, or the one whotakes away from you what belongs toyou. I am not telling you tosteal, I am merely telling you to help yourselves towhat by every right belongs toyou.

"I will sumup my lecture by these three points:

a)There must he an international union of workmen and act in Harmony.

b)Direct Action in case of a strike without notice to employers.

c)Organization of the unemployed with the motto: "No body willstarve while the warehouses are full, of all earthly goods.

There were about two hundred pepple present at the lecture and as allof them understood English, there was a great deal of enthusiasm displayed by the audience, which was evidenced by the frequent ~~enthusiasm~~ applause. As at her lecture in Boston, the lecturer was very cautious in coaching her sentiments. When she mentioned the word "undesirable citizens", which she did frequently it was with great emphasis, and the audience seemed to understand whom she was referring to. She made brief mention of the Haymarket affair, saying that thir idea of trade unionism was the same as outlined by her.

At the close of the lecture she announced that she had several copies of the "Mother Earth", which could be had for ten cents a cppy, or a dollar a year by subscription. She called special attention to the frontispiece on the cover of the magazine, a drawing by some great French Artist, representing mother earth chained and fettered and kept guard over by Capital with a revolver in one hand and ;aw in the other thus driving the people, the children of the earth from their "mother earth".

Sir:

Following your instructions, I proceeded last night to #15 Leverett St., to listen to a lecture given by Emma Goldman at that place. At about 8.45 the speaker was introduced by a man, whose name I learned is Shoub, a member of the "Group of Anarchists" of this city. The speaker then apologized for her inability to lecture in Yiddish, as her Yiddish was not fluent enough for that but that she would endeavor to use a plain German so that she c uld be understood by the audience.

The subjedt for last night's lecture was "The Revolutionary Spirit in the Modern Drama".

"It is commonly thought-she said-that the Revolutionaspirit pervades only through the masses of laborers, factory hands, prisoners of Siberia, or those who suffer oppression at the hands of the tyrannic autocrats. Very few stop to realize that the modern drama ~~dam~~ and out higher literature are full of the spirit of rebellion. The short time allotted to me to-night will not allow me to enumerate allthe different plays of that nature, but I willtry to depict a few.

"Gorki's play "Na-Dnie" (At the bottom) presents two grand characters. that of old Luka,--a grand old man, who is a friend of allwho suffer, allwho are downtroden; who sympathizes withthe degraded prostitute and petty criminal,fully understanding that they are the victims of the fouldsy stems of the present Society. Then, these is the character of Nastasia, an ignorant girl, who is mistreated by her brother,brought up amidst vice and immorality, --in spite of allthat she comes out pure and homest; ijnstead of being bitter and vengeful she is sympathetic and compassionate with all suferers of mankind, and in her own crud way she understands that there is smething wrong in the present state of affairs, and her spirit cries out: Rebellion against society.

"There is another play, "The Jews", by Chirikov. Nachman, the hero of the play, rebels against Russian Tyranny, not because he is himself oppressed but because his nation is trampled under the feet of the autocratic Czar. He is told that the Jew must wait until there is a universal emancipation. Nachman ridicules that idea. He says the Jew has suffered long enough; he has been beaten and maltreated and he must get up and rebel, even with weapons in his hands demand justice.

"Tchikov is another one of the Russian playwrights, who endowed his plays with the spirit of rebellion. Tchicov is termed in Russia "The Modern Turgeniev". In his play "Tchaika" he takes up a new field. He does not dal with the poor peasant but with the ~~so-called~~ "Middle Class".

"The principal characters of that play are a Jourhalist and a Poet, an Idealist. The Journalist discovered that this is not an age of ideals; that in order to make use of his pen for remunerative purposes he must strip himself bare of any ideal, and suit the taste of the publisher and the editor, who cater to the Men in Power. The Poet,made the same dicovery, but unlike the Jourhalist, chose toremain loyal tohis conscience and his ideals. In spite of the protestations of his friend the Journalist that he is lacking in experience in practical life, he refuses to give up his ideals and prostitute himself by selling out to the Reigning Power. He struggled on and when he found that he could not win out he ended his life with a bullet through his brains.

"Some people ridicule this idea; they say if you beat your head against a thickwall, you are bound to crush your head without affecting the wallany. But, I say, every head crushed against the wallcounts, and the time will come when these heads crushed against the wall, and the precious blood besprinkling it, will crash own that thickwallof darkness; the thick wall of tyranny, the thick wall of despotism. People say what did t his fool gain by ending his own life. Nay, my friends, it only proves that in the foul atmosphere of the present corrupt Society it is impossible for a man of pure and idealistic tendencies to live.

"We will now enter the Scandinavian Drama.

"It was said that Ibsen threw more bombs into the present system of social life, than a hundred men could have done.

"Nora of the"Dolls House", after living with her husband eight years and bringing him three children, wakes up one day and leaves him. Not because she was ill-treated; not because she was beaten. She was provided with every luxury by her husband; elegant dresses beautiful home, etc. Sheleaves her husband because she woke up to the realization of the fact that she lived with her husband for eight years and found that she was living with s stranger. That their ideas were far apart; that her husband loved her not as a companion; not as a fellow associate,but for material reasons,--pleasures of the flesh, and nothing higher than that. She was his puppet, his plaything. She rebelled against it and refusd to live any more with a man whowas a perfect stranger to her.

"In the "Ghosts", Ibsen portrays a woman who had the misfortune to marry a man whois afflicted wi th loathsome diseases, and being afraid that her offspring might suffer by it, goes to Pastor Mondes. She pleads with him, and shows him how dstasteful her life would be with the man whom the Law and Church bound her to. Tge Pastor,what cares he for the suffering of humanity; he is devoid of any feeling for a tortured fellow being, he knows his duty towards GOD, and points out to her her duty to her husband, no matter what her feelings are.She febels against it but finally submits to the moralizing of the "spiritual adviser", and is recompensed for her yeare of martyrdom, finding after long years of agony and torture, that the sins of the father are visited on her beloved son, in spite of all precautions she took.

"In the modern German Drama, Gerhard Happtman, in his strong play the "Weavers", describes the sufferings of the poor proletariat, the starved and uner paid weavers, and when a spirit of discontent began topervade among them, the bombastic employer, surrounded by all kinds of comfort and luxury; smoking expensive cigars, laughed to scorn these poor ignorant "animals". But he finally found that it was a metter of more gravity than he ever thought and ultimately found it expedient to submit to the just demands of the poor weavers.

"Of the American Drama I will just mention "Mrs. Warren's Profession", by Bernard M. Shaw.

"Mrs.Warren who conducted several houses of ill fame, reared her daughter, surrounding her with everything she desired, giving her the best of education, and the best of moral training, but she was brought up in absolute ignorance of the mode of life led by her mother and the source of her income. When she discovered that she became very despondent and ran away from home, refusing to benefit by money made through prostitution. A friend of hers, when told by her the reason for her desertion of her mother's home, said to her:"Your mother's money is not any more tainted than all the money there is in the world. There is a mill owner employing six hundred girls paying them $3 a week. Do you mean to say that these girls are able to live on this miserly salary? They are forced to prostitution. The owner of the Department Stores is doing the same. Carnegie with allhis libraries he gave to the people who have not the time to read the books inthose libraries, produced more prostitution than your mother did. And finally, whose money was it that enriched your mother, and paid or your education? Your mothers numerous establishments were patronized by cannons of the Church, by Pillars of Society, by representatives of the Army and by representatives of every walk in life.

The Hallwas crowded to the doors by Yiddish speaking people, but owing to the fact that the lecture was given in German, instead of Yiddish, as it was announced, there was a spirit of discontent, and I heard murmurs of regret by many people there, saying that they could not follow her.

At the end of the lecture Miss Goldman invited the audience/ audience to ask her questions and that she woukd endeavor to answer them. But save for a few very silly questions asked by a couple of young men, who it could be easily perceived could not follow the trend of hee lecture,none cared to ask any questions. She scored the women present for the lackof interest displayed by them, by not coming forward and debate with her upon questions paramount to their own welfare, but after waiting a considerable length of time,for answers

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

December 24, 1907.

Hon. Robert Watchorn,
Commissioner of Immigration,
Ellis Island, N. Y. H.

Sir:

I have the honor to report that pursuant to your verbal instructions, I proceeded to Paterson, N. J., on the 7:21 p.m. December 23, 1907, train from Rutherford, arriving at the first-named place at 7:57 p.m. A police officer at the Station directed me to the Paterson Police Headquarters on Washington Street, where I presented your letter. The police stated that they had no knowledge of an anarchist meeting at 184 Main Street. The Chief of Police was not there, but the Acting Captain promptly detailed two plain clothes men to accompany me to the place indicated. The hall was on the top floor of the building over The New York Dental Parlors. To avoid attracting attention, I went up ahead and had the officers follow a little while afterward. I found about five hundred men, women and children in the hall, Hebrews predominating. A number of Italians were also present. Two men seated at a table near the door were collecting money from members, but no admission fee was charged.

Emma Goldman began her address about 8:30 o'clock p.m., and spoke continuously until 9:45. She stated the subject of her ad-

Anarchism does not stand for what the newspapers tell you it stands for, namely, bomb throwing, and the free use of dynamite and daggers. Such a conception of anarchism arose and exists only in the shallow brains of newspaper editors. Anarchism does not aim at the destruction of life and property. I stand here to-night to advocate no such practices. I advocate the same principles that Thoreau, Emerson, Stuart Mills, and many other great thinkers advocated. The majority of people who denounce anarchism and the anarchists have never taken the trouble to investigate what these terms really mean. It is fashionable to be against the anarchists, so they condemn them without a hearing. Now what does anarchism really stand for? It stands for the universal brotherhood of man, for the emancipation and complete freedom of the individual. As we look at the present state of society, we cannot help but notice that something is radically wrong. Why? Because we notice unwholesome and distressing abnormalities. On the one hand we notice people like John D. Rockefeller, with his uncounted millions, gained by the defraudation of his fellow men and the relentless crushing of every competitor. On the other hand we see men like Tschaikowsky, who is even now in the hands of the Czar's minions, because he dared to speak and to act in the interests of the common people. These two men are types of the two extremes in society as it is constituted at the present day. Rockefeller has amassed great wealth by reaping the profits of the hard labor of others. He represents the individualistic principle carried to excess. He is a man who thinks first, last and always of himself. Tschaikowsky on the other hand lives

...to be bettering the condition of his fellowmen. He teaches them what is their right, teaches them how to help themselves and each other, and in this way works for the betterment of society in his own country and the world at large.

Some people will tell you that the anarchists want to destroy all property rights and divide up everything equally. Nothing was ever more erroneous than this. I myself do not want any such division. You do not want it either. What we anarchists demand is this: Each man is entitled to, and should be protected in the enjoyment of the fruits of his own individual labors - no more, and no less. If one man by his greater ability accumulates greater possessions than another - well and good, - there is nothing objectionable in that to the anarchists. But when a man reaches out his hand in greed to grasp the profits and earnings of his fellow men, and appropriates to his own use the results of the labor of another, or of ten, or fifteen, or a hundred, or of thousands of others, and thereby causes them to lose their share of this world's legitimate pleasures, the anarchist is aroused to action. Just what that action will be depends upon his personal disposition and character entirely.

The claim is made that anarchists are opposed to all forms of government. That may be true or it may not be true. If government really does the people good, by all means let us have government. But does the government really do all that is claimed for it? It is claimed that the government protects our property. Does it? What the government really protects is the property of the rich. It does not protect your property, because you have [illegible] When there is a great strike, does the Government protect the workingmen? No, indeed. The Government in such a case sends out its militia or its regular army to protect the very people who are responsible for the strike through their selfishness. Was not this what happened in the mining districts of Nevada? They tell us we cannot get along without laws. But who knows all the laws? A noted lawyer said not so long ago that at the present time there were so many laws on the statute books that no man could possibly live long enough to learn them all. And all these laws were not made for your protection, mind you. They were made for the protection of the fellow that robs you. We are told that these laws guarantee to us our freedom and our equality. That is the same old lullaby that has been repeated over and over again to us. Every Fourth of July something like this is sung to us, and to the unthinking masses it is a lullaby that puts them to sleep for the rest of the year. We are told that America is the most civilized country in the world, while Russia is uncivilized and barbarian. Is this really so? Can any of you who have watched events in this country, I will not say for the past twenty-five, or twenty, or ten years, - let us say for the past five years only,-can you truthfully say that America, with its laws favoring the rich and persecuting the poor is really so far advanced? I tell you Russia has done more during the past five years to advance the world in science, literature and art, and general civilization than America has in twenty-five.

It is said that the Government educates our children. Does it? What is education? True education is a training that leads the individual the power to help himself and others. Your children are not given this kind of an education. When they are taught history, for instance, they are told about a few emporers, kings and presidents who waged war on neighboring or distant countries, and they are taught that the greatest of these is the one who holds the record for the largest number of deaths through the wanton slaughtering of so-called Christian warfare. Does such instruction instill good principles and build up pure character? It is as Carlyle says regarding two rulers, too cowardly to do their own fighting, who force a lot of young men into uniforms, stick guns into their hands and then turn them upon each other like so many savage beasts. And this they label patriotism! These are the prinoiples the Government instills into the minds of your children. They are taught to allow themselves to be led like sheep to the slaughter, simply because some official orders it. President Roosevelt has a big stick and a little brains, very little brains, but then - he has a big stick. As long as people will not make use of their own brains, they will always be easy marks for men with big sticks. The idea that we need the Government to preserve order has been repeated so often that the unthinking accept it as absolutely true; and even when they reach the point where they believe that they themselves can get along without the policeman and his club, they still cling to the idea that the other fellow needs such restraining power. In this same class are the majority of reformers. Such people will do many things for their fellow men: They will give them soup-kitchens, free lectures and libraries, sewing is, get off the other fellow's back and give him a chance to plan and work out his own life. They want to exercise control in return for their gifts. You know the old fable in the Bible about Adam and Eve. How God placed them in a garden and told them not to eat of the tree of knowledge, and when they did, he kicked them out of heaven. This is exactly what our Governments do. As soon as we strive after real knowledge, the kind that is not taught in their schools, they will kick us out too. The Government strives to suppress crime by imprisonment and execution. Do you know that it taxes you over a million dollars a year for the maintenance of prisons? And yet these prisons contain only people who have been foolish enough to steal small sums of money or articles of little value. Most of these prisoners have been forced by the existing economic conditions to commit the offences for which they have been arrested. The real thieves, the men who do their stealing on a large scale, under the mantle of business operations, they go free; and not only do they go free, but the laws actually protect and legalize their robberies. I think the man who steals my pocketbook is a harmless person compared to the man who steals my chances of employment and ruins the possibilities of my making a living for myself and my family.

Anarchism has no set rules. Its precepts and its methods vary according to the age, the temperament and the surroundings of its followers, but there is one principle it teaches which is fundamental, and that is the imperative duty of direct action of the individual. For instance, take the matter of eighty cent gas.

[illegible]ngly happy. But it is one of those problems which can only be solved by the direct action of each individual consumer. The law will not help you. That has been proven by the fact that the Supreme Court has declared the eighty cent law unconstitutional How can you achieve the desired end? Very easily. When the collector comes with his bill made out at the one dollar rate, pay him only eighty cents, and if he protests, politely throw him downstairs. If all of you did that the gas company would soon come to the conclusion that eighty cents is all it can expect. The real trouble is that you think you cannot get along without the gas company, when the fact is, the gas company cannot get along without you. You have convinced your mind that the company is really very kind because it does not ask $1.25, and is letting you off easy at a dollar. The same principle holds true in regard to carfare. If you all boarded street cars and when the conductor came around for the fare paid him only two or three cents, he would have to accept that ot nothing; and you would be justified in doing this, because you know that the company would be making great profit even at the lower fare. Just so, in every department of life, direct action by the individual will solve all the problems that come up. I believe with Nietzshe that the time has come for a trans-valuation of things. In the past we have been taught to regard many worthless and harmful things as necessary and benificent. I tell you friends, the time has come for a transvaluation, that is, for a rs-consideration of the value of things, and to this end each of you must do his share by his

you. You will know that you have comrades striving for the same results as yourself, helping you by their example, but not interfering with your personal efforts. Some people say the world is not ready for anarohism, that it must first pass through many preparatory stages, but I tell you, if the prinoiple is right at all, it is as right now as it ever was, or ever will be. Study these great principles and apply them in your own lives - now. That is all, friends. I thank you for your attention."

Miss Goldman was the only speaker of the evening. After her speech the persons in the hall gathered in groups to discuss her remarks. As I was about to leave the hall I found that two more plain clothes men had been detailed for my protection. The Paterson police were prompt and courteous in taking up this matter, which was unexpectedly brought to their attention.

One of the two men first detailed accompanied me to within two blocks of the railroad depot. I boarded the 10:14 train for Rutherford.

PATRIOTISM:

A MENACE TO LIBERTY

WHAT is Patriotism? Is it the love of one's birthplace, the place of childhood's recollections and hopes, dreams and aspirations? Is it the place where, in childlike naïveté, we would watch the flecting clouds and wonder why we, too, could not run so swiftly? The place where we would count the milliard glittering stars, terror-stricken lest each one "an eye should be," piercing the very depths of our little souls? Is it the place where we would listen to the music of the birds, and long to have wings to fly, even like they, to distant lands? Or the place where we would sit at mother's knee, enraptured by wonderful tales of great deeds and conquests? In short, is it love for the spot, every inch representing dear and precious recollections of a happy, joyous, and playful childhood?

If that were Patriotism, few American men of to-day could be called upon to be patriotic, since the place of play has been turned into factory, mill, and mine, while deafening sounds of machinery have replaced the music of the birds. Nor can we longer hear the tales of great deeds, for the stories our mothers tell to-day are but those of sorrow, tears, and grief.

What, then, is Patriotism? "Patriotism, sir, is the last resort of scoundrels," said Dr. Johnson. Leo Tolstoy, the greatest living anti-patriot, defines Patriotism as the principle that will justify the training of wholesale murderers; a trade that requires better equipment for the exercise of man-killing than the making of such necessities of life as shoes, clothing, and houses; a trade that guarantees better returns and greater glory than that of the average workingman.

Gustave Hervé, another great anti-patriot, justly calls Patriotism a superstition,—one far more injurious, brutal, and inhumane than religion. The superstition of religion originated in man's inability to explain natural phenomena. That is, when primitive man heard thunder or saw the lightning, he could not account for either, and therefore concluded that back of them must be a force greater than himself. Equally so, he saw a supernatural force in the rain, or in the various other changes in nature. Patriotism, on the other hand, is a superstition artificially created and maintained through a network of lies and falsehoods; a superstiton that robs man of his self-respect and dignity, and increases his arrogance and conceit.

Indeed, conceit, arrogance, and egotism are the essentials of Patriotism. Let me illustrate. Patriotism assumes that our globe is divided into little specks, each one surrounded by an iron gate. Those who have had the fortune of being born on some particular speck, consider themselves better, nobler, grander, more intelligent than the living beings inhabiting any other speck. It is, therefore, the duty of everyone living on that chosen spot to fight, kill, and die in the attempt to impose his superiority upon all the others.

The inhabitants of the other specks reason in like manner, of course, with the result that, from early infancy, the mind of the child is poisoned with blood-curdling stories about the Germans, the French, the Italians, Russians, etc. When the child has reached manhood, he is thoroughly saturated with the belief that he is chosen by the Lord himself to defend his country against the attack or invasion of any foreigner. It is for that purpose that we are clamoring for a greater army and navy, more battleships and ammunition. It is for that purpose that America has within a short time spent four hundred million dollars. Just think of it—four hundred million dollars taken from the produce of the people. For surely it is not the rich who contribute to Patriotism. They are cosmopolitans, perfectly at home in every land. We in America know well the truth of this. Are not our rich Americans Frenchmen in France, Germans in Germany, or Englishmen in England? And do they not squander with cosmopolitan grace fortunes coined by American factory children and cotton slaves? Yes, theirs is the Patriotism that will make it possible to send messages of condolence to a despot like the Russian Tsar, when any mishap befalls him, as President Roosevelt did in the name of his people, when Sergius was punished by the Russian Revolutionists.

It is a Patriotism that will assist the arch-murderer, Diaz, in destroying thousands of lives in Mexico, or that will even aid in arresting Mexican revolutionists on American soil and keep them incarcerated in American prisons, without the slightest cause or reason.

But, then, Patriotism is not for those who represent wealth and power. It is good enough for the people. It reminds one of the historic wisdom of Frederick the Great, the bosom friend of Voltaire, who said, "Religion is a fraud, but it must be maintained for the masses."

That Patriotism is rather a costly institution, no one will doubt after reading the following statistics:

The progressive increase of the expenditures for the leading armies and navies of the world during the last quarter of a century is a fact of such gravity as to startle every thoughtful student of economic problems. It may be briefly indicated by dividing the time from 1881 to 1905 into five-year periods, and noting the disbursements of several great nations for army and navy purposes during the first and last of those periods. From the first to the last of the periods noted the expenditures of Great Britain increased from $2,101,848,936 to $4,143,226,885, those of France from $3,324,500,000 to $3,455,109,900, those of Germany from $725,000,200 to $2,700,375,600, those of the United States from $1,275,500,750 to $2,650,-900,450, those of Russia from $1,900,975,500 to $5,250,-445,100, those of Italy from $1,600,975,750 to $1,755,500,-100, and those of Japan from $182,900,500 to $700,-925,475.

The military expenditures of each of the nations mentioned increased in each of the five-year periods under review. During the entire interval from 1881 to 1905 Great Britain's outlay for her army increased fourfold, that of the United States was tripled, Russia's was doubled, that of Germany increased 35 per cent., that of France about 15 per cent., and that of Japan nearly 500 per cent. If we compare the expenditures of these nations upon their armies with their total expenditures for all the twenty-five years ending with 1905, the proportion rose as follows:

In Great Britain from 20 per cent. to 37; in the United States from 15 to 23; in France from 16 to 18; in Italy from 12 to 15; in Japan from 12 to 14. On the other hand, it is interesting to note that the proportion in Germany decreased from about 58 per cent. to 25, the decrease being due to the enormous increase in the imperial expenditures for other purposes, the fact being that the army expenditures for the period of 1901-5 were higher than for any five-year period preceding. Statistics show that the countries in which army expenditures are greatest in proportion to the total national revenues are Great Britain, the United States, Japan, France, and Italy, in the order named.

The showing as to the cost of great navies is equally impressive. During the twenty-five years ended with 1905 naval expenditures increased approximately as follows: Great Britain, 300 per cent.; France, 60 per cent.; Germany, 600 per cent.; the United States, 525 per cent.; Russia, 300 per cent.; Italy, 250 per cent., and Japan, 700 per cent. With the exception of Great Britain, the United States spends more for naval purposes than any other nation, and this expenditure bears also a larger proportion to the entire national disbursements than that of any other power. In the period 1881-5, the expenditure for the United States Navy was $6.20 out of each $100 appropriated for all national purposes; the amount rose to $6.60 for the next five-year period, to $8.10 for the next, to $11.70 for the next, and to $16.40 for 1901-5. It is morally certain that the outlay for the current period of five years will show a still further increase.

The rising cost of militarism may be still further illustrated by computing it as a per capita tax on population. From the first to the last of the five-year periods taken as the basis for the comparisons here given it has risen as follows: In Great Britain, from $18.47 to $52.50; in France, from $19.66 to $23.62; in Germany, from $10.17 to $15.51; in the United States, from $5.62 to $13.64; in Russia, from $6.14 to $8.37; in Italy, from $9.59 to $11.24, and in Japan from 86 cents to $3.11.

It is in connection with this rough estimate of cost per capita that the economic burden of militarism is most appreciable. The irresistible conclusion from available data is that the increase of expenditure for army and navy purposes is rapidly surpassing the growth of population in each of the countries considered in the present calculation. In other words, a continuation of the increased demands of militarism threatens each of those nations with a progressive exhaustion both of men and resources.

The awful waste that Patriotism necessitates ought to be sufficient to cure the man of even average intelligence from this disease. Yet Patriotism demands still more. The people are urged to be patriotic and for that luxury they pay, not only by supporting their "defenders," but even by sacrificing their own children. Patriotism requires allegiance to the flag, which means obedience and readiness to kill father, mother, brother, sister.

The usual contention is that we need a standing army to protect the country from foreign invasion. Every intelligent man and woman knows, however, that this is a myth maintained to frighten and coërce the foolish. The governments of the world, knowing each other's interests, do not invade each other. They have learned that they can gain much more by international arbitration of disputes than by war and conquest. Indeed, as Carlyle said, "War is a quarrel between two thieves, too cowardly to fight their own battle; therefore they take boys from one village and another village, stick them into uniforms, equip them with guns, and let them loose like wild beasts against each other."

It does not require much wisdom to trace every war back to a similar cause. Let us take our own Spanish-American war, supposedly a great and patriotic event in the history of the United States. How our hearts burned with indignation against the atrocious Spaniards! True, our indignation did not flare up spontaneously. It was nurtured by months of newspaper agitation, and long after Butcher Weyler had killed off many noble Cubans and outraged many Cuban women. Still, in justice to the American nation be it said, it did grow indignant and was willing to fight, and that it fought bravely. But when the smoke was over, the wounded buried, and the cost of the war came back to the people in an increase of the price of commodities and rent,—that is, when we sobered up from our patriotic spree, it suddenly dawned on us that the cause of the Spanish-American war was the consideration of the price of sugar; or, to be more explicit, that the lives, blood, and money of the American people were used to protect the interests of American capitalists, which were threatened by the Spanish government. That this is not an exaggeration, but is based on absolute facts and figures, is best proved by the attitude of the American government to Cuban labor. When Cuba was firmly in the clutches of the United States, the very soldiers sent to liberate Cuba were ordered to shoot Cuban workingmen during the great cigarmakers' strike, which took place shortly after the war.

Nor do we stand alone in waging war for such causes. The curtain is beginning to be lifted on the motives of the terrible Russo-Japanese war, which cost so much blood and tears. And we see again that back of the fierce Moloch of war stands the still fiercer god of Commercialism. Kuropatkin, the Russian Minister of War during the Russo-Japanese struggle, has revealed the true secret behind the latter. The Tsar and his Grand Dukes, having invested money in Corean concessions, the war was forced for the sole reason of speedily accumulating large fortunes.

The contention that a standing army and navy are the best security of peace is about as logical as the claim that the most peaceful citizen is he who goes about heavily armed. The experience of every-day life fully proves that the armed individual is invariably anxious to try his strength. The same is historically true of governments. Really peaceful countries do not waste life and energy in war preparations, with the result that peace is maintained.

However, the clamor for an increased army and navy is not due to any foreign danger. It is owing to the dread of the growing discontent of the masses and of the international spirit among the workers. It is to meet the internal enemy that the Powers of various countries are preparing themselves; an enemy, who, once awakened to consciousness, will prove more dangerous than any foreign invader.

The Powers that have for centuries been engaged in enslaving the masses have made a thorough study of their psychology. They know that the people at large are like children whose despair, sorrow, and tears can be turned into joy with a little toy. And the more gorgeously the toy is dressed, the louder the colors, the more it will appeal to the million-headed child.

An army and navy represent the people's toys. To make them more attractive and acceptable, hundreds of thousands of dollars are being spent for the display of these toys. That was the purpose of the American government in equipping a fleet and sending it along the Pacific Coast, that every American citizen should be made to feel the pride and glory of the United States. The city of San Francisco spent one hundred thousand dollars for the entertainment of the fleet; Los Angeles, sixty thousand; Seattle and Tacoma, about one hundred thousand. To entertain the fleet, did I say? To dine and wine a few superior officers, while the "brave boys" had to mutiny to get sufficient food. Yes, two hundred and sixty thousand dollars were spent on fireworks, theater parties, and revelries at a time when men, women, and children through the breadth and length of the country were starving in the streets; when thousands of unemployed were ready to sell their labor at any price.

Two hundred and sixty thousand dollars! What could not have been accomplished with such an enormous sum? But instead of bread and shelter, the children of those cities were taken to see the fleet, that it may remain, as one of the newspapers said, "a lasting memory for the child."

A wonderful thing to remember, is it not? The implements of civilized slaughter. If the mind of the child is to be poisoned with such memories, what hope is there for a true realization of human brotherhood?

We Americans claim to be a peace-loving people. We hate bloodshed; we are opposed to violence. Yet we go into spasms of joy over the possibility of projecting dynamite bombs from flying machines upon helpless citizens. We are ready to hang, electrocute, or lynch any one, who, from economic necessity, will risk his own life in the attempt upon that of some industrial magnate. Yet our hearts swell with pride at the thought that America is becoming the most powerful nation on earth, and that it will eventually plant her iron foot on the necks of all other nations.

Such is the logic of Patriotism.

With all the evil results that Patriotism is fraught with for the average man, it is as nothing compared with the insult and injury that Patriotism heaps upon the soldier himself,—that poor, deluded victim of superstition and ignorance. He, the saviour of his country, the protector of his nation,—what has Patriotism in store for him? A life of slavish submission, vice, and perversion during peace; a life of danger, exposure, and death during war.

While on my late lecture tour in San Francisco, I visited the Presidio, the most beautiful spot overlooking the Bay and Golden Gate Park. Its purpose should have been playgrounds for children, gardens and music for the recreation of the weary. Instead it is made ugly, dull, and gray by barracks,—barracks, wherein the rich would not allow their dogs to dwell. In these miserable shanties soldiers are herded like cattle; here they waste their young days, polishing the boots and brass buttons of their superior officers. Here, too, I saw the distinction of classes: sturdy sons of a free republic, drawn up in line like convicts, saluting every passing shrimp of a lieutenant. American equality, degrading manhood and elevating the uniform.

Barrack life further tends to develop tendencies of sexual perversion. It is gradually producing along this line results similar to European military conditions. Havelock Ellis, the noted writer on sex psychology, has made a thorough study of the subject. I quote: "Some of the barracks are great centers of male prostitution. . . . The number of soldiers who prostitute themselves is greater than we are willing to believe. It is no exaggeration to say that in certain regiments the presumption is in favor of the venality of the majority of the men. . . . On summer evenings, Hyde Park and the neighborhood of Albert Gate, are full of guardsmen and others plying a lively trade and with little disguise, in uniform or out. . . . In most cases the proceeds form a comfortable addition to Tommy Atkins' pocket money."

To what extent this perversion has eaten its way into the army and navy can best be judged from the fact that special houses exist for this form of prostitution. The practice is not limited to England; it is universal. "Soldiers are no less sought after in France than in England or in Germany, and special houses for military prostitution exist both in Paris and the garrison towns."

Had Mr. Havelock Ellis included America in his investigations of sex perversion, he would have found that the same conditions prevail in our army and navy as in those of other countries. The growth of the standing army inevitably adds to the spread of sex perversion; the barracks are the incubators.

Aside from the sexual effects of barrack life, it also tends to unfit the soldier for useful labor after leaving the army. Men, skilled in a trade, seldom enter the army or navy, but even they, after a military experience, find themselves totally unfitted for their former occupations. Having acquired habits of idleness and a taste for excitement and adventure, no peaceful pursuit can content them. Released from the army, they can turn to no useful work. But it is usually the social riffraff, discharged prisoners and the like, whom either the struggle for life or their own inclination drives into the ranks. These, their military term over, again turn to their former life of crime, more brutalized and degraded than before. It is a well-known fact that in our prisons there is a goodly number of ex-soldiers; while on the other hand, the army and navy are to a great extent supplied with ex-convicts.

Of all the evil results I have just described, it seems to me none so detrimental to human integrity as the spirit Patriotism has produced in the case of Private William Buwalda, now serving a term of three years in military prison. Because he foolishly believed that one can be a soldier and exercise his rights as a man at the same time, the military authorities punished him severely. True, he had served his country fifteen years, during which time his record was unimpeachable. According to Gen. Funston, who reduced Buwalda's sentence to three years, "the first duty of an officer or an enlisted man is unquestioned obedience and loyalty to the government, and it makes no difference whether he approves of that government or not." Thus Funston stamps the true character of allegiance. According to him, entrance into the army abrogates the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

What a strange development of Patriotism that turns a thinking being into a loyal machine!

In justification of this most outrageous sentence of Buwalda, Gen. Funston tells the American people that the soldier's action was "a serious crime equal to treason." Now, what did this "terrible crime" really consist of? Simply in this: Wm. Buwalda was one of fifteen hundred people who attended a public meeting in San Francisco; and, oh, horrors, he shook hands with the speaker, Emma Goldman. A terrible crime, indeed, which the General calls "a great military offense, infinitely worse than desertion."

Can there be a greater indictment against Patriotism than the one that will brand a man a criminal, throw him into prison, and rob him of the results of fifteen years of faithful service?

Buwalda has given to his country the best years of his life and his very manhood. But all that was as nothing. Patriotism is inexorable and, like all insatiable monsters, demands all or nothing. It does not admit that a soldier is also a human being, who has a right to his own feelings and opinions, his own inclinations and ideas. No, Patriotism can not admit of that. That is the lesson which Buwalda was made to learn; made to learn at a rather costly, though not at a useless, price. When he returns to freedom, he will have lost his position in the army, but he will have regained his self-respect. After all, that is worth three years of imprisonment.

A writer on the military conditions of America, in a recent aricle, commented on the power of the military man over the civilian in Germany. He said, among other things, that if our Republic had no other meaning than to guarantee all citizens equal rights, it would have just cause for existence. I am convinced that the writer was not in Colorado during the patriotic régime of General Bell. He probably would have changed his mind had he seen how, in the name of Patriotism and the Republic, men were thrown into bull-pens, dragged about, driven across the border, and subjected to all kinds of indignities. Nor is that Colorado incident the only one in the growth of military power in the United States. There is hardly a strike where troops and militia do not come to the rescue of those in power, and where they do not act as arrogantly and brutally as do the men wearing the Kaiser's uniform. Then, too, we have the Dick military law. Has the writer forgotten that?

A great misfortune with most of our writers is that they are absolutely ignorant on current events, or that, lacking honesty, they will not speak of these matters. And so it has come to pass that the Dick military law was rushed through Congress with little discussion and still less publicity,—a law which gives the President the power to turn a peaceful citizen into a bloodthirsty man-killer, supposedly for the defense of the country, in reality for the protection of the interests of that particular party whose mouthpiece the President happens to be.

Our writer claims that militarism can never become such a power in America as abroad, since it is voluntary with us, while compulsory in the Old World. Two very important facts, however, the gentleman forgets to consider. First, that conscription has created in Europe a deep-seated hatred of militarism among all classes of society. Thousands of young recruits enlist under protest and, once in the army, they will use every possible means to desert. Second, that it is the compulsory feature of militarism which has created a tremendous anti-militarist movement, feared by European Powers far more than anything else. After all, the greatest bulwark of capitalism is militarism. The very moment the latter is undermined, capitalism would totter. True, we have no conscription; that is, men are not usually forced to enlist in the army, but we have developed a far more exacting and rigid force—necessity. Is it not a fact that during industrial depressions there is a tremendous increase in the number of enlistments? The trade of militarism may not be either lucrative or honorable, but it is better than tramping the country in search of work, standing in bread line, or sleeping in municipal lodging houses. After all, it means thirteen dollars per month, three meals a day, and a place to sleep. Yet even necessity is not sufficiently strong a factor to bring into the army an element of character and manhood. No wonder our military authorities complain of the "poor material" enlisting in the army and navy. This admission is a very encouraging sign. It proves that there is still enough of the spirit of independence and love of liberty left in the average American to risk starvation rather than don the uniform.

Thinking men and women the world over are beginning to realize that Patriotism is too narrow and limited a conception to meet the necessities of our time. The centralization of power has brought into being an international feeling of solidarity among the oppressed nations of the world; a solidarity which represents a greater harmony of interests between the workingmen of America and his brothers abroad than between the American miner and his exploiting compatriot; a solidarity which fears not foreign invasion, because it is bringing all the workers to the point when they will say to their masters, "Go and do your own killing. We have done it long enough for you."

This solidarity is awakening the consciousness of even the soldiers, they, too, being flesh of the flesh of the great human family. A solidarity that has proven infallible more than once during past struggles, and which has been the impetus inducing the Parisian soldiers, during the Commune of 1871, to refuse to obey when ordered to shoot their brothers. It has given courage to the men who mutinied on Russian warships during recent years. It will eventually bring about the uprising of all the oppressed and downtrodden against their international exploiters.

The proletariat of Europe has realized the great force of that solidarity and has, as a result, inaugurated a war against Patriotism and its bloody spectre, militarism. Thousands of men fill the prisons of France, Germany, Russia, and the Scandinavian countries, because they dared to defy the ancient superstition. Nor is the movement limited to the working class; it has embraced representatives in all stations of life, its chief exponents being men and women prominent in art, science, and letters.

America will have to follow suit. The spirit of militarism has already permeated all walks of life. Indeed, I am convinced that militarism is growing a greater danger here than anywhere else, because of the many bribes capitalism holds out to those whom it wishes to destroy.

The beginning has already been made in the schools.

Evidently the government holds to the Jesuitical conception, "Give me the childish mind, and I will mould the man." Children are trained in military tactics, the glory of military achievements extolled in the curriculum, and the youthful minds perverted to suit the government. Further, the youth of the country is appealed to in glaring posters to join the army and navy. "A fine chance to see the world!" cries the governmental huckster. Thus innocent boys are morally shanghaied into Patriotism, and the military Moloch strides conquering through the nation.

The American workingman has suffered so much at the hands of the soldier, State and Federal, that he is quite justified in his disgust with, and his opposition to, the uniformed parasite. However, mere denunciation will not solve this great problem. What we need is a propaganda of education for the soldier: anti-patriotic literature that will enlighten him as to the real horrors of his trade; one that will awaken his consciousness to his true relation to the man to whose labor he owes his very existence.

It is precisely this that the authorities fear most. It is already high treason for a soldier to attend a radical meeting. No doubt, they will also stamp it high treason for a soldier to read a radical pamphlet. But, then, has not authority from time immemorial stamped every step of progress as treasonable? Those, however, who earnestly strive for social reconstruction can well afford to face all that; for it is probably even more important to carry the truth into the barracks than into the factory. When we have undermined the patriotic lie, we shall have cleared the path for that great structure wherein all nationalities shall be united into a universal brotherhood,—a truly FREE SOCIETY.

LES MOUVEMENTS DE RÉVOLTE

Poursuivant un long tour les événements survenus dernièrement sont trop encombrants. Nous ne mentionnerons que ceux dont la véracité nous est allouée et qui sont dignes de l'attention.

3 septembre. — A six heures du matin, trois tapissiers servant au transport des jeunes sont démolies à coup de tuiles et l'on y met le feu en pleine rue. Les habitants jettent des bidons de pétrole par la fenêtre pour activer les flammes. L'on passe plusieurs Anglais à tabac, de telle manière que les agents les arrachent des mains des dockers plutôt mourants que vivants. Voyant cela, tout un groupe d'Anglais demandent instamment à repartir. — Six voitures de boulangers sont pillées et l'on se partage le pain à la rue ; l'on fait de même avec les charrettes de charbon. —

Ces carrains ne cessent point le pied à terre que pour le lit où le garçon et dorment à bord du Zeelerman. La foule, très sympathique aux dockers, fête copieusement les grands bols d'Anglais à leur passage. Le garde civique va partir, trop gendarmes vont la remplacer.

Dès le début, en quelques jours fort nombreux ont donc été les événements qui ont marqué cette grève. Et pourtant, la grande masse des dockers n'est pas du tout éduquée, ni consciente. Elle n'est certes pas non plus fanatique, mais elle a une forte tendance à se laisser mener par les beaux parleurs et c'est ce qui la perdra sans doute.

La Fédération maritime risquera des millions dans cette lutte contre les dockers ; comme excuse elle affirme qu'elle combat une manœuvre politique qui aspirerait à faire du port d'Anvers une véritable forteresse socialiste où les ouvriers du syndicat dicteraient leurs lois et les armateurs n'auraient plus qu'à se soumettre.

Chose curieuse, c'est que ces armateurs sont, pour la plupart, des étrangers : le Stoomvaart est Allemand, l'Red Star est belge, la Ligne Wilson est suédoise, etc. La lutte contre l'étranger couvre cependant ce motif autrement plus noble : la question de nationalité. INTRODUCTORY.

In fact and in truth Miss Goldman is a mild mannered little woman who would not kill a fly or a spider. On the contrary she teaches peace, harmony and brotherly love among all men regardless of race, creed or color.

We are publishing this little booklet so that she may have an impartial hearing before the public, as it is a well known fact that none of the newspapers will pretend to give her a hearing under any circumstances.

Respectfully,

ANARCHY

AND WHAT IT STANDS FOR

"To the popular mind anarchism stands for destruction; to the more enlightened it stands for an ideal—a beautiful but thoroughly impracticable ideal.

Anarchism does stand for the destruction of the institutions that have been and are keeping the human mind in bondage and that are robbing mankind of the right to the use of the necessities of life.

Viewed from the standpoint of cents and dollars, anarchism is truly impracticable, and those whose aim in life is wealth and power will do well to keep out of the anarchist movement. But measured by true value, namely, human character, integrity and real usefulness to society, anarchism is the most practical of all theories—a proposition which I shall attempt to prove.

"Anarchism is a theory of human development which lays no less stress than socialism upon the economic or materialistic aspect of social relations; but while granting that the cause of the immediate evil is an economic one we believe that the solution of the social question confronting us today must be wrought out from the equal consideration of the whole of our experience.

"To understand society as a whole it behooves the social student to analyze the separate atoms of society—namely, the individual and the motives that prompt every individual and every collective act. What are these motives?

"First, the individual instinct, standing for self-expression; second, the social instinct, which inspires collective and social life. These instincts in their latent condition are never antagonistic to each other.

"On the contrary, they are dependent upon one another for their complete and normal development. Unfortunately, the organization of society is such that these instincts are being brought into constant antagonism.

"Indeed, the history of our experience in thought and action is the record of this strife within each individual and its reflection within each society.

"To better illustrate my point, let me give you two cases, representing the extreme development of individual and social instinct.

Take Russell Sage, for instance, a man whose individual instincts knew no bounds; a man who, to use a common proverb, did not even observe the ordinary honesty existing among thieves.

"I mean that his methods of accomplishing his aim, the accumulation of wealth, were so obscure, so unscrupulous, that even his own colleagues, had little regard for him.

"Indeed, it is safe to say that the instinct that prompted the actions of Russell Sage were so antisocial that every one of his steps resulted in crushing out human life and in bringing untold misery and poverty upon those whom his iron heel did not actually crush.

"Such a type of a man is possible only in a society based upon inequality, a society that is held together not by natural bonds, but by artificial and arbitrary methods.

"Again, let us take a type of human being with the social instinct developed to the extreme—Louise Michelle, the world-renowned anarchist, "Mother Louise," as she was called by every child of the gutter. Her love for man and beast knew no bounds.

"It mattered not whether it was a forlorn kitten or a homeless dog, or a shelterless human being—she gave to all, even the last crust of bread.

"Yet to satisfy her great soul she was compelled to deny her individual instinct to the extent of living in great and constant poverty, of exposing herself to many dangers, to imprisonment, and to the heat of New Caledonia, whither she had been sent with many other political prisoners after the Paris Commune of '71.

"Anarchists insist that conditions must be radically wrong, if human instincts develop to such extremes at the expense of each other.

"Anarchism in its scientific and philosophic calculations represents that force in human life which can harmonize and bring into unity the individual and social instincts of the individual and society.

"The greatest obstacle in the way of such harmonious blending, are property, or the monopoly of things—the denial of the right of others to their use, and authority—the government of man by man, embodied in majority rule, or the absolute disregard of individual life in the organization that for want of a better name stands for society.

"Therefore the first tendency of anarchism is to make good the dignity of the individual human being by freeing him from every kind of arbitrary restraint—economic, political, social.

"In so doing anarchism proposes to make apparent, in their true force the social bonds, which always have and always will knit men together and which are the actual basis of a real normal and sane society. The means of doing this rests with each man's latent qualities and his opportunities.

"I have already spoken of the coercive and arbitrary tendency of centralization in either the industrial or political life of a people, and I now wish to say a few words of what seema to the anarchist the most dangerous side of centralization.

"Man has been degraded into a mere part of a machine and all that makes for spontaneity, for originality, for the power of initiative, has been either dulled or completely killed in him until he is but a living corpse, dragging out an aimless, spiritless and idealess existence.

"Man is here to be sacrificed upon the altar of things, heaps and heaps of things, that are as dark and dull as the human machines that have produced them.

"Yet how can we talk of social wealth when the production of that wealth can be attained only at the expense of human lives, thousands and thousands of human lives? And what are these lives worth without the power of initiative, of spontaneity?

"Anarchism holds that the simplest human life, if given opportunity and scope, is infinitely more important to society than all the scientific regulation and adjusting of social arrangements.

"For, in proportion as that simple life grows into a conscious, intelligent, well-rounded factor, recognizing its true relation to its fellow, regulations and forms will take care of themselves.

"Anarchists believe that organized authority, or the state, is necessary only in the interest of monopoly. They fail to see that it has at any time in the history of man promoted human welfare or aided in any way in the building of human character or human possibilities. Anarchism, therefore, aims at the simultaneous overthrow of monopoly and government.

"It is well to distinguish here between government as organized authority, whose purposes are realized at all times through the exercise of brute force—police clubs, state militias, the armies, and the navies of the world— and government in the sense of a spontaneously arising social order and happiness, whose immediate appearance among men awaits only, the disappearance of the world-enslaving and world-slaughtering forces of monopoly.

"The centralized method of production has necessitated a centralized form of government that is constantly increasing its power and forever prying into the minutest detail of human life.

"In fact, it is safe to say that man's whole life, from the cradle to the grave is under constant surveillance of authority.

I think that America illustrates this point perfectly. So long as this country was young, its people battling with the elements and striving for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, every man counted for something.

"People were more closely related to each other and the sense of comradeship and brotherhood was keener and deeper.

"But in proportion as America grew in wealth its method of governing became more centralized, more far-reaching, more contrary to the life and rights of man, until today he is suffered to drag along his wretched existence, not by 'the grace of God, but by the grace of a network of laws which he knows nothing about and which are absolutely foreign to his natural growth and development.

"With this in view, anarchism stands for voluntary productive and distributive associations, using a common capital and loosely federated into communities, eventually developing into communism in production and consumption, recognizing at all times, however, the right of the individual or a number of individuals to arrange their mode of work—in harmony with their taste or inclination.

"As to crimes and criminals, anarchists know, only too well that they are naught else but symptoms of an artificial social arrangement, enforced by authority. They will disappear to a large extent with the destruction of their creators, namely, capitalism and government.

"Crime, resultant from a defective brain, can surely not be cured by brute force. But certainly modern medical methods and an increased sense of fraternity, aided by improved education, can accomplish more than prison bars, handcuffs, locksteps, or chains.

"The American methods proposed or employed to hound down anarchists have been practiced in European powers for nearly one hundred years and have been given up in despair.

"The truth can not be silenced by constant discoveries of 'anarchist plots,' or by designating every demented being as an anarchist, nor even by burning anarchist literature, or establishing a system of espionage, which invades the sanctity of individual privacy and makes the life of its victims an intolerable evil.

"There are thousands of people in this country who see in such methods the last desperate efforts of a dying age. The new, strong in thought and ideals, strong in human sympathy and fellowship is fast approaching, and when it arrives the present will be remembered as a nightmare, that humanity dreamed, rather than as an awful reality it actually lived."

WHAT I BELIEVE

"WHAT I believe" has many times been the target of hack writers. Such blood-curdling and incoherent stories have been circulated about me, it is no wonder that the average human being has palpitation of the heart at the very mention of the name Emma Goldman. It is too bad that we no longer live in the times when witches were burned at the stake or tortured to drive the evil spirit out of them. For, indeed, Emma Goldman is a witch! True, she does not eat little children, but she does many worse things. She manufactures bombs and gambles in crowned heads. R-r-r-r!

Such is the impression the public has of myself and my beliefs. It is therefore very much to the credit of The World that it gives its readers at least an opportunity to learn what my beliefs really are.

The student of the history of progressive thought is well aware that every idea in its early stages has been misrepresented, and the adherents of such ideas have been maligned and persecuted. One need not go back two thousand years to the time when those who believed in the gospel of Jesus were thrown into the arena or hunted into dungeons to realize how little great beliefs or earnest believers are understood. The history of progress is written in the blood of men and women who have dared to espouse an unpopular cause, as, for instance, the black man's right to his body, or woman's right to her soul. If, then, from time immemorial, the New has met with opposition and condemnation, why should my beliefs be exempt from a crown of thorns?

"What I believe" is a process rather than a finality. Finalities are for gods and governments, not for the human intellect. While it may be true that Herbert Spencer's formulation of liberty is the most important on the subject, as a political basis of society, yet life is something more than formulas. In the battle for freedom, as Ibsen has so well pointed out, it is the struggle for, not so much the attainment of, liberty, that develops all that is strongest, sturdiest and finest in human character.

Anarchism is not only a process, however, that marches on with "sombre steps," coloring all that is positive and constructive in organic development. It is a conspicuous protest of the most militant type. It is so absolutely uncompromising, insisting and permeating a force as to overcome the most stubborn assault and to withstand the criticism of those who really constitute the last trumpets of a decaying age.

Anarchists are by no means passive spectators in the theatre of social development; on the contrary, they have some very positive notions as regards aims and methods.

That I may make myself as clear as possible without using too much space, permit me to adopt the topical mode of treatment of "What I Believe":

I. As to Property.

"PROPERTY" means dominion over things and the denial to others of the use of those things. So long as production was not equal to the normal demand, institutional property may have had some raison d'être. One has only to consult economics, however, to know that the productivity of labor within the last few decades has increased so tremendously as to exceed normal demand a hundred-fold, and to make property not only a hindrance to human well-being, but an obstacle, a deadly barrier, to all progress. It is the private dominion over things that condemns millions of people to be mere nonentities, living corpses without originality or power of initiative, human machines of flesh and blood, who pile up mountains of wealth for others and pay for it with a gray, dull and wretched existence for themselves. I believe that there can be no real wealth, social wealth, so long as it rests on human lives—young lives, old lives and lives in the making.

It is conceded by all radical thinkers that the fundamental cause of this terrible state of affairs is (1) that man must sell his labor; (2) that his inclination and judgment are subordinated to the will of a master.

Anarchism is the only philosophy that can and will do away with this humiliating and degrading situation. It differs from all other theories inasmuch as it points out that man's development, his physical well-being, his latent qualities and innate disposition alone must determine the character and conditions of his work. Similarly will one's physical and mental appreciations and his soul cravings decide how much he shall consume. To make this a reality will, I believe, be possible only in a society based on voluntary co-operation of productive groups, communities and societies loosely federated together, eventually developing into a free communism, actuated by a solidarity of interests. There can be no freedom in the large sense of the word, no harmonious development, so long as mercenary and commercial considerations play an important part in the determination of personal conduct.

II. As to Government.

I BELIEVE government, organized authority, or the State, is necessary only to maintain or protect property and monopoly. It has proven efficient in that function only. As a promoter of individual liberty, human well-being and social harmony, which alone constitute real order, government stands condemned by all the great men of the world.

I therefore believe, with my fellow-Anarchists, that the statutory regulations, legislative enactments, constitutional provisions, are invasive. They never yet induced man to do anything he could and would not do by virtue of his intellect or temperament, nor prevented anything that man was impelled to do by the same dictates. Millet's pictorial description of "The Man with the Hoe," Meunier's masterpieces of the miners that have aided in lifting labor from its degrading position, Gorki's descriptions of the underworld, Ibsen's psychological analysis of human life, could never have been induced by government any more than the spirit which impels a man to save a drowning child or a crippled woman from a burning building has ever been called into operation by statutory regulations or the policeman's club. I believe—indeed, I know—that whatever is fine and beautiful in the human, expresses and asserts itself in spite of government, and not because of it.

The Anarchists are therefore justified in assuming that Anarchism—the absence of government—will insure the widest and greatest scope for unhampered human development, the cornerstone of true social progress and harmony.

As to the stereotyped argument that government acts as a check on crime and vice, even the makers of law no longer believe it. This country spends millions of dollars for the maintenance of her "criminals" behind prison bars, yet crime is on the increase. Surely this state of affairs is not owing to an insufficiency of laws! Ninety per cent. of all crimes are property crimes, which have their root in our economic iniquities. So long as these latter continue to exist we might convert every lamp-post into a gibbet without having the least effect on the crime in our midst. Crimes resulting from heredity can certainly never be cured by law. Surely we are learning even to-day that such crimes can effectively be treated only by the best modern medical methods at our command, and, above all, by the spirit of a deeper sense of fellowship, kindness and understanding.

III. As to Militarism.

I SHOULD not treat of this subject separately, since it belongs to the paraphernalia of government, if it were not for the fact that those who are most vigorously opposed to my beliefs on the ground that the latter stand for force are the advocates of militarism.

The fact is that Anarchists are the only true advocates of peace, the only people who call a halt to the growing tendency of militarism, which is fast making of this erstwhile free country an imperialistic and despotic power.

The military spirit is the most merciless, heartless and brutal in existence. It fosters an institution for which there is not even a pretense of justification. The soldier, to quote Tolstoi, is a professional man-killer. He does not kill for the love of it, like a savage, or in a passion, like a homicide. He is a cold-blooded, mechanical, obedient tool of his military superiors. He is ready to cut throats or scuttle a ship at the command of his ranking officer, without knowing or, perhaps, caring how, why or wherefore. I am supported in this contention by no less a military light than Gen. Funston. I quote from the latter's communication to the New York Evening Post of June 30, dealing with the case of Private William Buwalda, which caused such a stir all through the Northwest. "The first duty of an officer or enlisted man," says our noble warrior, "is unquestioning obedience and loyalty .

to the government to which he has sworn allegiance; it makes no difference whether he approves of that government or not."

How can we harmonize the principle of "unquestioning obedience" with the principle of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness"? The deadly power of militarism has never before been so effectually demonstrated in this country as in the recent condemnation by court-martial of William Buwalda, of San Francisco, Company A, Engineers, to five years in military prison. Here was a man who had a record of fifteen years of continuous service. "His character and conduct were unimpeachable," we are told by Gen. Funston, who, in consideration of it, reduced Buwalda's sentence to three years. Yet the man is thrown suddenly out of the army, dishonored, robbed of his chances of a pension and sent to prison. What was his crime? Just listen, ye free-born Americans! William Buwalda attended a public meeting, and after the lecture he shook hands with the speaker. Gen. Funston, in his letter to the Post, to which I have already referred above, asserts that Buwalda's action was a "great military offense, infinitely worse than desertion." In another public statement, which the General made in Portland, Ore., he said that "Buwalda's was a serious crime, equal to treason."

It is quite true that the meeting had been arranged by Anarchists. Had the Socialists issued the call, Gen. Funston informs us, there would have been no objection to Buwalda's presence. Indeed, the General says, "I would not have the slightest hesitancy about attending a Socialist meeting myself." But to attend an Anarchist meeting with Emma Goldman as speaker—could there be anything more "treasonable"?

For this horrible crime a man, a free-born American citizen, who has given this country the best fifteen years of his life, and whose character and conduct during that time were "unimpeachable," is now languishing in a prison, dishonored, disgraced and robbed of a livelihood.

Can there be anything more destructive of the true genius of liberty than the spirit that made Buwalda's sentence possible—the spirit of unquestioning obedience? Is it for this that the American people have in the last few years sacrificed four hundred million dollars and their hearts' blood?

I believe that militarism—a standing army and navy in any country—is indicative of the decay of liberty and of the destruction of all that is best and finest in our nation. The steadily growing clamor for more battleships and an increased army on the ground that these guarantee us peace is as absurd as the argument that the peaceful man is he who goes well armed.

The same lack of consistency is displayed by those peace pretenders who oppose Anarchism because it supposedly teaches violence, and who would yet be delighted over the possibility of the American nation soon being able to hurl dynamite bombs upon defenseless enemies from flying machines.

I believe that militarism will cease when the liberty-loving spirits of the world say to their masters: "Go and do your own killing. We have sacrificed ourselves and our loved ones long enough fighting your battles. In return you have made parasites and criminals of us in times of peace and brutalized us in times of war. You have separated us from our brothers and have made of the world a human slaughterhouse. No, we will not do your killing or fight for the country that you have stolen from us."

Oh, I believe with all my heart that human brotherhood and solidarity will clear the horizon from the terrible red streak of war and destruction.

IV. As to Free Speech and Press.

THE Buwalda case is only one phase of the larger question of free speech, free press and the right of free assembly.

Many good people imagine that the principles of free speech or press can be exercised properly and with safety within the limits of constitutional guarantees. That is the only excuse, it seems to me, for the terrible apathy and indifference to the onslaught upon free speech and press that we have witnessed in this country within the last few months.

I believe that free speech and press mean that I may say and write what I please. This right, when regulated by constitutional provisions, legislative enactments, almighty decisions of the Postmaster General or the policeman's club, becomes a farce. I am well aware that I will be warned of consequences if we remove the chains from speech and press. I believe, however, that the cure of consequences resulting from the unlimited exercise of expression is to allow more expression.

Mental shackles have never yet stemmed the tide of progress, whereas premature social explosions have only too often been brought about through a wave of repression.

Will our governors never learn that countries like England, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark, with the largest freedom of expression, have been freest from "consequences"? Whereas Russia, Spain, Italy, France and, alas! even America, have raised these "consequences" to the most pressing political factor. Ours is supposed to be a country ruled by the majority, yet every policeman who is not vested with power by the majority can break up a meeting, drag the lecturer off the platform and club the audience out of the hall in true Russian fashion. The Postmaster General, who is not an elective officer, has the power to suppress publications and confiscate mail. From his decision there is no more appeal than from that of the Russian Czar. Truly, I believe we need a new Declaration of Independence. Is there no modern Jefferson or Adams?

V. As to the Church.

AT the recent convention of the political remnants of a once revolutionary idea it was voted that religion and vote getting have nothing to do with each other. Why should they? So long as man is willing to delegate to the devil the care of his soul, he might, with the same consistency, delegate to the politician the care of his rights. That religion is a private affair has long been settled by the Bis-Marxian Socialists of Germany. Our American Marxians, poor of blood and originality, must need go to Germany for their wisdom. That wisdom has served as a capital whip to lash the several millions of people into the well-disciplined army of Socialism. It might do the same here. For goodness' sake, let's not offend respectability, let's not hurt the religious feelings of the people.

Religion is a superstition that originated in man's mental inability to solve natural phenomena. The Church is an organized institution that has always been a stumbling block to progress.

Organized churchism has stripped religion of it's naïveté and primitiveness. It has turned religion into a nightmare that oppresses the human soul and holds the mind in bondage. "The Dominion of Darkness," as the last true Christian, Leo Tolstoi, calls the Church, has been a foe of human development and free thought, and as such it has no place in the life of a truly free people.

VI. As to Marriage and Love.

I BELIEVE these are probably the most tabooed subjects in this country. It is almost impossible to talk about them without scandalizing the cherished propriety of a lot of good folk. No wonder so much ignorance prevails relative to these questions. Nothing short of an open, frank, and intelligent discussion will purify the air from the hysterical, sentimental rubbish that is shrouding these vital subjects, vital to individual as well as social well-being.

Marriage and love are not synonymous; on the contrary, they are often antagonistic to each other. I am aware of the fact that some marriages are actuated by love, but the narrow, material confines of marriage, as it is, speedily crush the tender flower of affection.

Marriage is an institution which furnishes the State and Church with a tremendous revenue and the means of prying into that phase of life which refined people have long considered their own, their very own most sacred affair. Love is that most powerful factor of human relationship which from time immemorial has defied all man-made laws and broken through the iron bars of conventions in Church and morality. Marriage is often an economic arrangement purely, furnishing the woman with a life-long life insurance policy and the man with a perpetuator of his kind or a pretty toy. That is, marriage, or the training thereto, prepares the woman for the life of a parasite, a dependent, helpless servant, while it furnishes the man the right of a chattel mortgage over a human life.

How can such a condition of affairs have anything in common with love?—with the element that would forego all the wealth of money and power and live in its own world of untrammeled human expression? But this is not the age of romanticism, of Romeo and Juliet, Faust and Marguerite, of moonlight ecstasies, of flowers and songs. Ours is a practical age. Our first consideration is an income. So much the worse for us if we have reached the era when the soul's highest flights are to be checked. No race can develop without the love element.

But if two people are to worship at the shrine of love, what is to become of the golden calf, marriage? "It is the only security for the woman, for the child, the family, the State." But it is no security to love; and without love no true home can or does exist. Without love no child should be born; without love no true woman can be related to a man. The fear that love is not sufficient material safety for the child is out of date. I believe when woman signs her own emancipation, her first declaration of independence will consist in admiring and loving a man for the qualities of his heart and mind and not for the quantities in his pocket. The second declaration will be that she has the right to follow that love without let or hindrance from the outside world. The third and most important declaration will be the absolute right to free motherhood.

In such a mother and an equally free father rests the safety of the child. They have the strength, the sturdiness, the harmony to create an atmosphere wherein alone the human plant can grow into an exquisite flower.

VII. As to Acts of Violence.

AND now I have come to that point in my beliefs about which the greatest misunderstanding prevails in the minds of the American public. "Well, come, now, don't you propagate violence, the killing of crowned heads and Presidents?" Who says that I do? Have you heard me, has any one heard me? Has anyone seen it printed in our literature? No, but the papers say so, everybody says so; consequently it must be so. Oh, for the accuracy and logic of the dear public!

I believe that Anarchism is the only philosophy of peace, the only theory of the social relationship that values human life above everything else. I know that some Anarchists have committed acts of violence, but it is the terrible economic inequality and great political injustice that prompt such acts, not Anarchism. Every institution to-day rests on violence; our very atmosphere is saturated with it. So long as such a state exists we might as well strive to stop the rush of Niagara as hope to do away with violence. I have already stated that countries with some measure of freedom of expression have had few or no acts of violence. What is the moral? Simply this: No act committed by an Anarchist has been for personal gain, aggrandizement, or profit, but rather a conscious protest against some repressive, arbitrary, tyrannical measure from above.

President Carnot, of France, was killed by Caserio in response to Carnot's refusal to commute the death sentence of Vaillant, for whose life the entire literary, scientific and humanitarian world of France had pleaded.

Bresci went to Italy on his own money, earned in the silk weaving mills of Paterson, to call King Humbert to the bar of justice for his order to shoot defenseless women and children during a bread riot. Angelino executed Prime Minister Canovas for the latter's resurrection of the Spanish inquisition at Montjuich Prison. Alexander Berkman attempted the life of Henry C. Frick during the Homestead strike only because of his intense sympathy for the eleven strikers killed by Pinkertons and for the widows and orphans evicted by Frick from their wretched little homes that were owned by Mr. Carnegie.

Every one of these men not only made his reasons known to the world in spoken or written statements, showing the cause that lead to his act, proving that the unbearable economic and political pressure, the suffering and despair of their fellow-men, women and children prompted their acts, and not the philosophy of Anarchism. They came openly, frankly and ready to stand the consequences, ready to give their own lives.

In diagnosing the true nature of our social disease I cannot condemn those who, through no fault of their own, are suffering from a wide-spread malady.

I do not believe that these acts can, or ever have been intended to, bring about the social reconstruction. That can only be done, first, by a broad and wide education as to man's place in society and his proper relation to his fellows; and, second, through example. By example I mean the actual living of a truth once recognized, not the mere theorizing of its life element. Lastly, and the most powerful weapon, is the conscious, intelligent, organized, economic protest of the masses through direct action and the general strike.

The general contention that Anarchists are opposed to organization, and hence stand for chaos, is absolutely groundless. True, we do not believe in the compulsory, arbitrary side of organization that would compel people of antagonistic tastes and interests into a body and hold them there by coercion. Organization as the result of natural blending of common interests, brought about through voluntary adhesion, Anarchists do not only not oppose, but believe in as the only possible basis of social life.

It is the harmony of organic growth which produces variety of color and form—the complete whole we admire in the flower. Analogously will the organized activity of free human beings endowed with the spirit of solidarity result in the perfection of social harmony—which is Anarchism. Indeed, only Anarchism makes non-authoritarian organization a reality, since it abolishes the existing antagonism between individuals and classes.

INTRODUCTION HISTORIQUE

En France, le divorce entre anarchistes et démocrates-socialistes date de 1880. L'année précédente, au congrès de Marseille, toutes les tendances s'étaient confondues ; possibilistes, collectivistes et anarchistes s'étaient rangés sous un même drapeau. « Nous étions alors, écrivait naguère le vieux possibiliste Fournière, (1) séparés des anarchistes par une cloison extrêmement mince, purement idéale, ou plutôt verbale... Dans le groupe même de l'Egalité, il y eut des anarchistes jusqu'en 1880 : Jeallot, Maria, Jean Grave préposé avec moi à la confection des bandes, au pliage et à l'expédition du journal, dont j'étais le gérant, c'est-à-dire le délégué aux amendes et aux mois de prison, en même temps que j'étais le secrétaire du journal ouvrier le Prolétaire. Ils ne nous quittèrent qu'au moment où le jeune Parti ouvrier décida d'entrer dans l'action électorale, et c'est au congrès du Havre (2), où fut adopté le programme rédigé à Londres sous la dictée de Karl Marx et présenté à notre acceptation par Malon, que se consomma la scission entre anarchistes et collectivistes révolutionnaires. »

Le divorce était définitif et devait rapidement s'étendre aux anarchistes et aux social-démocrates de tous les pays. Toutefois les anarchistes, ou plus exactement un certain nombre d'entre eux, ne cessèrent jamais, malgré tout, de se rattacher spirituellement à la grande famille du socialisme universel. Aussi lorsque, à Paris en 1889, à Bruxelles en 1891, les social-démocrates s'efforcèrent de ressusciter la pratique des congrès socialistes internationaux, quelques anarchistes crurent-ils pouvoir y participer.

Leur présence y donna lieu aux plus âpres conflits. Les social-démocrates, ayant la force du nombre, étouffèrent toute contradiction de la part de leurs adversaires qui furent expulsés au milieu des huées : « Il est vrai, a écrit Bernard Lazare (1) qu'une grande partie des délégués ouvriers anglais, hollandais et italiens se retirèrent en manière de protestation. Cependant, comme les triomphateurs ne se sentaient pas assez forts encore, ils ne votèrent aucune résolution importante et ils préférèrent écarter la question du parlementarisme et celle de l'alliance avec les partis gouvernementaux. Néanmoins l'attitude de la majorité signifiait nettement : Nous ne nous occuperons plus de luttes économiques, mais de luttes politiques, et à l'action révolutionnaire nous substituerons l'action légale et pacifique. »

Au congrès international suivant, qui se tint à Zurich en 1893, les social-démocrates réussirent enfin (ils le croyaient du moins) à se débarrasser de leurs adversaires. Un règlement fut voté qui portait notamment : « Toutes les chambres syndicales seront admises au prochain congrès ; aussi les partis et groupements socialistes qui reconnaissent la nécessité de l'organisation des travailleurs et de l'action politique. »

Mais l'avenir n'est à personne, et ce qu'on n'avait pas prévu arriva. Au congrès suivant (Londres, 1896) de nombreux anarchistes se présentèrent, non plus, il est vrai, en qualité d'anarchistes mais de syndiqués, délégués de chambres syndicales (2). C'est alors que les social-démocrates, après une bataille de trois jours où ils faillirent avoir le dessous, édictèrent ces résolutions fameuses excluant des congrès futurs tous les groupements, même corporatifs, qui se refuseraient à confesser la « nécessité » du parlementarisme.

(1) Dans un article de l'Echo de Paris de juillet 1896.

(2) Jean Grave et Malatesta y représentaient les métallurgistes d'Amiens ; Emile Pouget, alors directeur du Père Peinard, les métallurgistes de Beauvais et les ardoisiers de Trélazé ; Tortelier, les menuisiers de la Seine ; Guérineau, les polisseurs sur métaux de Paris, etc, etc.

La majorité voulait en finir avec les anarchistes ; elle ne se doutait pas qu'elle venait d'éloigner d'elle, à jamais, le prolétariat organisé.

Mis dans l'impossibilité de participer désormais aux congrès socialistes internationaux, les anarchistes conçurent le projet de tenir des congrès spéciaux et d'y convier la classe ouvrière. Mais le « Congrès ouvrier révolutionnaire international » qui, préparé de longue main, devait s'ouvrir à Paris le 19 septembre 1900, fut interdit la veille par une décision du ministère Woldeck-Rousseau.

Plusieurs années s'écoulèrent. Il semblait que les anarchistes eussent abandonné toute velléité de congrès. Il n'en était rien cependant, et dans l'été de 1906, l'idée du congrès d'Amsterdam naquit, presque simultanément, dans l'esprit des compagnons belges et hollandais. Dès sa fondation (1905), la Fédération des Communistes libertaires de Hollande avait émis le vœu de voir s'établir entre les anarchistes des relations internationales. Ce vœu, le jeune Groupement communiste libertaire de Belgique songeait de son côté à le réaliser. Aussi un compagnon hollandais vint-il à l'assemblée que le Groupement tint à Stockel-Bois le 22 juillet 1906. C'est là que, d'un commun accord, un congrès international fut décidé pour l'année suivante. Il fut entendu qu'il se tiendrait à Amsterdam. Les Hollandais, à leur assemblée générale d'Utrecht (23 septembre) ratifièrent ces décisions. De plus ils prenaient à leur charge l'organisation matérielle du congrès, cependant que les Belges, soucieux d'assurer au congrès le plus de publicité possible, commençaient la publication d'un bulletin de propagande gratuit : le Bulletin de l'Internationale libertaire, dont le principal rédacteur fut Henri Fuss (1).

Les Hollandais se mirent sans tarder à l'œuvre. Leur premier soin fut de s'assurer l'adhésion formelle des organisations européennes déjà existantes. Ils l'obtinrent sans la moindre peine, toutes ces organisations ressentant également la nécessité d'un congrès. La première circulaire, qui fut lancée en décembre-janvier, portait donc les signatures suivantes : Joh. J. Lodewijk, pour la Fédération des Communistes libertaires de Hollande ; G. Thonar, pour le Groupement communiste libertaire de Belgique ; Paul Frauböse, pour la Fédération anarchiste d'Allemagne ; K. Vohryzek et L. Knotek, pour la Fédération anarchiste de Bohème ; et A. Schapiro, pour la Fédération des anarchistes parlant le jeddish, à Londres.

En voici les passages principaux :

Les Fédérations soussignées de groupes libertaires et communistes ont décidé de convoquer un quatrième congrès international (1), dont la préparation a été assumée par la Belgique et la Hollande et qui se tiendra, à une date à fixer ultérieurement pendant l'été de 1907, à Amsterdam.

Il est de notre intention d'admettre à ce congrès, non seulement les délégués des groupes libertaires et communistes, mais également les camarades venus à titre individuel.

En effet, tout en désirant peut-être compter les voix pour et contre certaines propositions, nous ne saurions attribuer à l'existence d'une majorité et d'une minorité le même sens que leur donnent les groupements et les congrès parlementaires, où les minorités sont tenues de se soumettre aux décisions de la majorité. Nous n'admettons pas de décisions à caractère obligatoire, ce qui ne nous empêche pas de trouver intéressant de savoir combien de groupes et de camarades partagent une opinion déterminée. Les discussions dans nos séances ont le même caractère que celles des congrès scientifiques internationaux. Nous ne voyons donc aucun inconvénient à ce que des camarades venus individuellement soient les bienvenus au congrès, au même titre que les délégués des groupements, pourvu que ces camarades puissent être supposés de bonne foi.

En plus des groupes et des camarades libertaires, tous délégués de syndicats et tous organisateurs syndicalistes venus individuellement, tous délégués des colonies communistes, etc., seront également les bienvenus. Nous nous adressons à tous ceux qui désirent travailler à la préparation d'une meilleure société, d'une société où régneront les principes du communisme et de la liberté..

La circulaire continuait ainsi :

Nous vous convoquons, à notre congrès, à des discussions, non seulement sur une partie de nos principes et de notre propagande libertaires et communistes, comme le font par exemple les congrès de la libre-pensée et les congrès antimilitaristes, mais à des discussions sur ces principes et sur cette propagande dans toute leur étendue. Car nous savons combien dans la vie sociale tous les problèmes se tiennent. Et nous croyons que la nécessité de nous entendre sur plusieurs points essentiels de principe et de tactique, rend utile, sinon indispensable, une rencontre ou réunion internationale.

Ces dernières années, les principes et la tactique communistes-libertaires et anarchistes ont montré des voies nouvelles. Sans vouloir anticiper sur l'ordre du jour, qui sera ultérieurement fixé par les groupes, nous remarquerons que l'action directe a été si fortement et si consciencieusement inaugurée dans plusieurs pays, précisément sous l'influence de nos camarades, témoignant ainsi du progrès que font nos idées dans les cercles ouvriers, que la discussion des problèmes qu'elle soulève justifierait déjà, à elle seule, la convocation d'un congrès international.

Mais il est d'autres questions aussi intéressantes, tels la propagande antimilitariste, les rapports entre le mouvement communiste-libertaire et anarchiste d'une part, et d'autre part, certains mouvements religieux (Tolstoïsme, anarchisme chrétien), point qui n'a pas pu être discuté au congrès de 1900. Enfin, les moyens à employer pour entrer internationalem ont en rolations plus directes, réclament une discussion approfondie, et ainsi de suite.

Cette circulaire rédigée en sept langues et répandue dans le monde entier, ne contribua pas médiocrement à éveiller l'intérêt des camarades. En France, un article de Cornélissen

Cependant, à leur conférence de Harlem (28 avril 1907), les Hollandais réglaient les derniers détails d'organisation. Il fut décidé que le congrès aurait lieu du 26 au 31 août 1907, et l'ordre du jour en fut dressé de la manière suivante :

1. L'ANARCHISME ET LE SYNDICALISME ; rapporteurs : Pierre Monatte (Paris) et John Turner (Londres).
2. GREVE GENERALE ET GREVE POLITIQUE; rapporteurs : Errico Malatesta (Italie) et Dr. R. Friedeberg (Berlin).
3. ANARCHISME ET ORGANISATION ; rapporteurs : Georges Thonar (Liège) Amédée Dunois (Paris) et H. Croiset (Amsterdam).
4. L'ANTI-MILITARISME COMME TACTIQUE DE L'ANARCHISME ; rapporteurs : R. de Marmande (Paris) et Pierre Ramus (Londres).
5. EDUCATION INTEGRALE DE L'ENFANCE ; rapporteur : Léon Clément (Paris).
6. L'ASSOCIATION PRODUCTRICE ET L'ANARCHISME ; rapporteurs : Em. Chapelier (Belgique) et I. I. Samson (La Haye).
7. LA REVOLUTION EN RUSSIE ; (rapporteur à désigner par les groupes russes).
8. ALCOOLISME ET ANARCHISME ; rapporteur: Dr. J. van Rees (Hollande) ;

9. LA LITTERATURE MODERNE ET L'ANARCHISME ; rapporteur : P. Ramus.
10. LES LIBERTAIRES ET LA LANGUE MONDIALE ; rapporteurs : Em. Chapelier et Gassy Marin.
11. L'ANARCHISME ET LA RELIGION ; rapporteur ; G. Rijnders (Amsterdam.)
12. L'ANARCHISME COMME VIE ET ACTIVITE INDIVIDUELLES ; rapporteurs : E. Armand et Mauricius (Paris).

De plus, deux séances devaient être réservées aux camarades partisans de relations internationales. Les points suivants y devaient être discutés :

1. ORGANISATION DE L'INTERNATIONALE LIBERTAIRE. Proposition du Groupement Communiste Libertaire de Belgique.
2. REDACTION D'UNE DECLARATION DE PRINCIPES COMMUNISTES-ANARCHISTES. Proposition de la Fédération Anarchiste d'Allemagne.
3. CREATION D'UN BULLETIN INTERNATIONAL, ORGANE DE RENSEIGNEMENTS Proposition du journal brésilien Terra Livre.
4. LE BUT DE LA NOUVELLE « INTERNATIONALE ». Proposition de Hans Peter (Autriche), rapporteur.

Dans les premiers jours de juin, le bruit courut à travers la presse que, sur la demande formelle des Puissances, le gouvernement hollandais venait d'interdire le congrès.

Ce bruit, dont l'origine policière ne saurait être mise en doute, était dénué de tout fondement. La monarchie hollandaise — le fait vaut d'être noté — observa du commencement à la fin, vis-à-vis du congrès et des congressistes, une attitude de neutralité que nous qualifierions de républicaine, si nous ne nous souvenions de notre congrès de 1900 interdit par la République française, Messieurs Waldeck-Rousseau et Millerand étant ministres.

LES PRÉLIMINAIRES

(24 et 25 Août)

Dans un article de la revue Pages Libres (1), le camarade Dunois a consacré un assez long passage à l'énumération des congressistes les plus connus. Empruntons-le lui :

« Une bonne soixantaine de militants étaient là, appartenant à des nationalités très diverses.

« Au premier rang des Hollandais figurait Christian Cornélissen, mince, élancé, le geste vif, la parole rapide, — le type bien caractérisé du révolutionnaire moderne en qui l'esprit scientifique s'allie intimement aux qualités de l'agitateur.

« L'Amérique avait envoyé l'ardente conférencière Emma Goldman, et le publiciste Baginsky ; l'Italie, le jeune et vaillant écrivain Luigi Fabbri et son ami Ceccarelli, lequel représentait aussi des groupes argentins ; la Bohême, K. Vohryzek, petit homme à tête ronde, infatigable et volontaire, et son inséparable frère d'armes, le grand, blond et doux Knotek.

« De Londres étaient venus, avec quelques silencieux Anglais, toute une escouade de réfugiés politiques : le jeune et intelligent Schapiro, l'Autrichien Siegfried Nacht, dont les démêlés avec toutes les polices d'Europe ont à maintes reprises défrayé les journaux bourgeois ; l'écrivain P. Ramus, de Freie Génération, R. Rocker, l'organisateur (je n'ose dire le rédempteur, et cependant...) de ces misérables ouvriers juifs de l'East End de Londres, rédacteur d'une revue, Germinal, et d'un journal hebdomadaire, l'Arbeiter Freund, en jargon juif ; Frigerio, Wilquet ; et surtout le célèbre révolutionnaire italien Errico Malatesta, le dernier représentant, peut-être — avec son ami Malato — de l'ancien anarchisme insurrectionnel, l'homme dont quarante ans de lutte sans merci n'ont affaibli ni le corps ni la confiance. Guére plus grand que Blanqui, noir et barbu comme un Napolitain, le geste aisé, l'éloquence imagée, vivante et familiére, Malatesta est certainement une des plus impressionnantes figures de l'anarchisme international. Après la disparition du bon doyen Reclus, il demeure, avec Kropotkine, avec Tcherkessof, avec James Guillaume, l'un des survivants fidèles de cette noble génération des bakounistes de l'Internationale, — nos vrais pères intellectuels ».

Cette énumération est, on le voit, particuliérement incompléte. On peut affirmer tout d'abord, sans exagération aucune, qu'à de certaines séances le nombre des congressistes atteignit et même dépassa quatre-vingts. Toutes les séances étaient publiques (sauf les deux séances consacrées à la création du Bureau international) et celles du soir furent suivies du commencement à la fin par une foule de travailleurs d'Amsterdam remarquablement silencieux et intéressés.

Il convient, malgré les difficultés de cette tâche, de dresser une liste approximative des camarades de tous les pays qui assistérent au Congrès et dont les noms nous sont connus.

Voici cette liste :

Hollande. — Christian Cornélissen (Paris), J. L. Bruijn, J. J. Lodewijk, I. I. Samson, Reijndorp, Schermerhorn, Klein, Stad, Koekoek, Domela Nieuwenhuis, Altink, Nelly Korver, Prof. J. Van Rees, G. Rijnders, Hesp, Croiset, etc., etc.

Dés le samedi 24 août, un assez grand nombre de congressistes étaient déjà arrivés à Amsterdam. Le soir, dans la grande salle du Plancius, aise Plantage Kerklaan, 61, où devait se tenir le Congrès, eut lieu en leur honneur une réunion privée que le compagnon I. I. Samson, au nom du comité d'organisation, ouvrit par quelques paroles de bienvenue. Beaucoup de ceux qui se trouvaient là se rencontraient pour la premiére fois ; d'autres se retrouvaient qui ne s'étaient pas vus depuis des années. Des vues diverses furent échangées entre les délégués sur le Congrès qui allait s'ouvrir et principalement sur la fixation do l'ordre du jour : rien cependant ne fut décidé, le Congrès seul étant souverain en cetto matiére.

Le lendemain, dimanche 25 août, fut marqué par un grand meeting international. Dès une heure de l'après-midi, une foule d'environ un millier de personnes emplissait le jardin du Plancius, chantant l'Internationale et des hymnes socialistes néerlandais, tandis que les orateurs et, derrière eux, une vingtaine de délégués prenaient place sur la petite scéne aménagée dans le fond du jardin.

Ce fut R. Friedeberg qui ouvrit la série des discours. Il fit une véhémente critique de la social-démocratie allemande, et de ce parlementarisme corrupteur en quoi consiste son unique moyen d'action. Au parlementarisme, il opposa l'action directe sous toutes ses formes et la propagation méthodique de l'idée de la gréve générale révolutionnaire.

Malatesta, aprés un salut aux révolutionnaires de la petite Hollande, déclara que le peuple ne doit compter que sur lui-même pour s'émanciper. Le progrès humain ne redeviendra possible que lorsque la violence ouvriére aura détruit les oppressions économiques, politiques et religieuses qui caractérisent la société actuelle.

R. de Marmande évoqua la conférence diplomatique de la Haye et le congrès social-démocratique de Stuttgart. C'est, affirma-t-il, une double banqueroute. Seuls les syndicalistes révolutionnaires et les anarchistes détiennent en leurs mains la force qui créera l'avenir, et c'est ce que prouvent les persécutions dont la République française les accable les uns et les autres. Il termina en déclarant que le Congrès d'Amsterdam ferait beaucoup pour la propagande des idées anarchistes dans le monde.

Pierre Ramus, lui aussi, parla de Stuttgart. Et il montra que, seuls, les anarchistes étaient restés fidéles à la cause de la Révolution abandonnée par les social-démocrates de tous les pays. Il releva vivement un mot outrageant pour l'anarchisme récemment prononcé par M. Troëlstra, député socialiste hollandais, et termina sa harangue par le cri de : Vive l'Anarchie !

Nicolas Rogdaeff parla de la révolution russe et du rôle considérable qu'y jouent les anarchistes. Tandis que libéraux, radicaux et socialistes bornent leurs efforts à la conquête d'une constitution, les anarchistes, dit-il, essaient de donner à la révolution commencée un caractére économique.

Emma Goldman esquissa à grands traits un tableau des progrès accomplis par les idées anarchistes dans les dernières années, aux Etats-Unis, où la révolution aura à vaincre la double force de la démocratie bourgeoise et do la démocratie socialiste.

Emile Chapelier prononça contre le militarisme, dont l'influence a corrompu profondément les sociétés, une vibrante harangue.

Pierre Mouonitch décrivit la misére qui régne parmi les tristes populations balkaniques, surtout parmi celles de la Macédoine.

Karl Vohryzek déclara que les anarchistes tchèques étaient d'accord pour souhaiter la constitution d'un groupement international où entreraient tous les ennemis de l'autorité de l'homme sur l'homme et de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme.

Paul Frauböse rapporta comment les anarchistes allemands, renonçant à l'individualisme, s'étaient organisés nationalement pour mieux combattre et dit qu'ils désiraien vivement que leur exemple fut partout suivi.

Christian Cornéliseen prit le dernier la parole. Il se félicita de voir son pays hospitaliser le premier congrès anarchiste international. Il rappela que la scission entre les éléments autoritaires et les éléments anarchistes de la grande Association internationale des Travailleurs avait eu lieu non loin d'Amsterdam, à la Haye, en 1872, et que les délégués hollandais s'étaient trouvés alors dans la minorité anarchiste. Il rappela encore qu'au lendemain de ce congrès tristement célèbre, les anarchistes s'étaient rendus à Amsterdam et, que parmi les internationaux de cette ville, ils avaient, selon le mot de James Guillaume, retrouvé « vivace et nettement réfractaire aux velléités centralisatrices, l'esprit de solidarité et d'indépendance qui jadis créa la Fédération des sept libres Provinces ». Et l'orateur déclara en terminant qu'il espérait que les anarchistes de 1907 emporteraient, d'Amsterdam et de la Hollande, la même impression que leurs ancêtres, les an-archistes de 1872.

Les camarades F. Tarrida del Marmol et John Turner, de Londres, qui devaient prendre la parole, le premier en espagnol et le second en anglais, s'étaient fait excuser. Quant au camarade chinois Tsunmin, inscrit lui aussi, il fut retenu à Paris par l'état de sa santé.

LE CONGRÈS

PREMIÈRE SÉANCE

Lundi 26 août. — Séance du matin.

La séance du matin est ouverte à 9 heures. Le camarade Henri Fues est nommé président. Il prie les congressistes de se grouper autant que possible par nationalités, ce qui est fait. Puis l'on passe à la fixation de l'ordre du jour.

C'est alors que F. Domela Nieuwenhuis soulève un long incident. Il dit que le vendredi suivant l'Association internationale antimilitariste (dont Domela est le secrétaire général) doit tenir, à Amsterdam même, son 2e congrès. Il propose donc que le Congrès anarchiste détache de son ordre du jour la partie relative à l'antimilitarisme et assiste en corps, le vendredi suivant, au Congrès de l'A. I. A. où la question sera discutée dans toute son étendue.

Cette proposition soulève une émotion considérable surtout parmi ceux des congressistes qui savent que, dès le premier jour, Domela s'est posé en adversaire du Congrès anarchiste et l'a combattu de tout son pouvoir. Pourtant R. Friedeberg et aprés lui Pierre Ramus, Max Baoineky et Emma Goldman appuient sa proposition.

Malatesta, que soutiendront tout à l'heure, Marmande, Thonar et Chapelier, s'oppose avec énergie à la proposition Domela-Friedeberg. — Ou bien, dit-il, le Congrès de vendredi, ne réunira que des anarchistes, et alors il fera double emploi avec celui-ci, et je n'en saisis pas du tout la nécessité ; ou bien des éléments non-anarchistes, voire même des élémcnts bourgeois et pacifistes, participeront aussi à ce Congrès, et alors notre devoir d'anarchistes est, avant de nous y rendre, de discuter ici-même, entre nous et à notre point de vue propre, la question de l'antimilitarisme. Et Malatesta demande, en terminant, le passage à l'ordre du jour.

Cette conclusion soulève une vive agitation parmi les partisans de Domela Nieuwenhuis, qui sont venus, ce matin-là, très nombreux. C'est alors que De Marmande demande et obtient une suspension de séance.

A la rentrée (11 h. ½), Emma Goldman au nom de Friedeberg et en son nom personnel, lit une proposition où il est dit que dans l'après-midi du vendredi 30 août, le Congrès anarchiste, après avoir pris position sur la question de l'antimilitarisme, se réunira au Congrès antimilitariste pour tenir avec lui une séance commune.

Malatesta répond que la question de savoir si l'on ira oui ou non au Congrès antimilitariste ne saurait être préjugée. De nouveau, il demande le passage à l'ordre du jour pur et simple, appuyé par une pétition de 32 délégués.

F. Domela Nieuwenhuis demande le vote de la proposition Friedeberg-Goldman.

Marmande demande en vain à Domela de se rallier à la proposition Malatesta ; après une discussion des plus confuses, on finit par passer au vote. Et, contrairement à la demande des amis de Domela, on décide de voter par tête et non par nationalité

La proposition Malatesta obtient 38 voix ; la proposition Friedeberg 33. La proposition Malatesta est donc adoptée.

DEUXIÈME SÉANCE

Lundi 26 août. — Séance de l'après-midi.

On décide d'entendre la lecture des rapports sur l'état du mouvement anarchiste international et de passer, aussitôt après, à la lecture et à la discussion du rapport Dunois sur l'organisation.

Belgique.

G. Thonar expose la situation de l'anarchisme en Belgique. C'est le 25 juillet 1905 qu'a été fondé le Groupement Communiste libertaire, lequel « se donne comme mobile essentiel de conserver les idées communistes-anarchistes intactes de toutes compromissions, de les propager, de faire l'éducation libertaire de ses membres, de les soutenir, de les défendre et d'assurer à sa propagande l'appui d'efforts communs ». Une brochure de Thonar : Ce que veulent les Anarchistes dont le texte a été approuvé par un congrès tenu à Charleroi en 1904, lui a servi jusqu'ici de déclaration de principes. Les groupes de Liège, de Court-St-Etienne, Flemalle, Charleroi sont les plus actifs du Groupement qui a tenu un congrès (d'où est sorti le Congrès International), en juillet 1906 à Stockel-Bois et un autre à Bruxelles le 4 août dernier.

Il existe à Boitsfort une colonie communiste qui a publié quelques numéros d'une petite feuille mensuelle, Le Communiste. A Anvers S. Rabauw publie depuis sept ans une revue flamande, Onkwating. Le Groupement a eu pour organe l'Emancipateur, actuellement disparu (1). A Bruxelles paraît enfin Opstanding, rédigé par Schouteten, et à Liège H. Fuss publie l'Action Directe, organe de propagande syndicaliste-révolutionnaire.

(1) Thonar a fait reparaître tout récemment l'Insurgé.

Suisse romande.

Amédée Dunois donne lecture d'un rapport du compagnon Jean Wintsch, de Lausanne, sur le mouvement anarchiste en Suisse romande.

Ce mouvement est en bonne voie. Les camarades, presque tous prolétaires, se placent nettement sur le terrain économique et ouvrier. Leur principale activité se dépense donc au sein des syndicats, et si ceux-ci sont entrés depuis deux ou trois années dans les voies du syndicalisme révolutionnaire (création de la Fédération des Unions ouvriéres romandes et de la Voix du Peuple) c'est pour une grande part aux anarchistes qu'on le doit.

C'est à Neuchâtel (9 décembre 1906), en une assemblée à laquelle assistaient une trentaine de camarades, que les quelques groupes anarchistes romands décidérent de se fédérer. La Fédération communiste-anarchiste de la Suisse romande compte actuellement 200 membres, répartis entre neuf groupes (groupes de la Chaux-de-Fonds, Neuchâtel, St-Imier, Genéve, Lausanne, Vevey, Montreux, Fribourg, et Groupement libertaire valaisan). Chaque groupe est entiérement autonome ; un secrétariat est le seul organe administratif.

A la 2e réunion générale (10 février 1907) on a décidé de se préoccuper tout spécialement de la propagande rurale. Une brochure de 20 pages, le Manifeste aux travailleurs des villes et de la campagne, due à la collaboration d'une centaine de camarades au moins, a été peu de temps aprés tirée à 15000 exemplaires et distribuée partout. Elle reflète très bien l'esprit profondément ouvrier des anarchistes romands.

Un des groupes fédérés publie à Genéve le Réveil, organe socialiste-anarchiste (en français et en italien) paraissant régulièrement depuis juillet 1900. Principaux rédacteurs : Louis Bertoni, Georges Herzig, Jean Wintsch, etc.

Le rapport contenait également un bref récit des grèves vaudoises de mars 1907. A la suite du renvoi brutal d'un travailleur, les ouvriers des chocolateries Peter-Kohler d'Orbe, de Bussigny et de Vevey s'étaient mis successivement en gréve. Le mouvement trainait depuis dix jours, quand le 25 mars, l'Union ouvriére de Vevey déclara soudain la gréve générale locale. Le travail s'arrêta net. Le même jour, les gendarmes tirérent sur la foule, blessant une dizaine de grévistes des deux sexes. A cette nouvelle, la gréve générale fut déclarée à Montreux, Lausanne et Genéve ; elle l'eut été ailleurs encore si, sous la pression gouvernementale, les patrons chocolatiers n'avaient cédé à temps sur tous les points en litige.

Ce mouvement mémorable montra tout ce qu'il est permis d'attendre de l'esprit de révolte et de solidarité de la classe ouvriére. Mais il surprit les camarades anarchistes, lesquels, n'étant prêts à rien, se trouvérent quelque peu désemparés et durent se borner à prendre part au mouvement sans pouvoir lui imprimer un caractére plus accentué de guerre sociale. Cette leçon n'a pas été perdue pour eux et quand le prolétariat romand se soulèvera de nouveau, il pourra compter cette fois sur le concours énergique des anarchistes préparés de longue main à toute les exigences de la situation.

Etats-Unis.

Max Baoinsky. — D'où vient que la propagande anarchiste s'effectue aux Etats-Unis plus difficilement que dans la plupart des monarchies ? Il est peu de nations cependant où le régime démocratique soit plus largement développé que dans notre grande République. N'est-ce pas une preuve que les « libertés politiques » si convoitées des peuples qui ne les ont pas encore obtenues, loin de favoriser l'expansion des idées révolutionnaires constituent pour elles un obstacle presque insurmontable ?

C'est en 1884 que le mouvement anarchiste commence à se dessiner aux Etats-Unis, dans la région de Pittsburg. Johann Most était arrivé d'Europe à New-York avec la Freiheit depuis décembre 1882 et il menait une propagande intense. Dans les années qui suivirent, les anarchistes — pour la plupart d'origine allemande — prirent part au mouvement ouvrier pour la journée de huit heures. Cette phase do notre activité se termina en 1886-1887 par la sanglante tragédie de Chicago, où périrent Spies, Parsons, et trois autres.

Une longue période de stagnation et d'atonie commence alors ; peut-être durerait-elle encore sans le coup de revolver dc Czolgosz qui, en tuant Mac-Kinley, ranima le mouvcmcnt et ouvrit pour nos idécs une èrc d'expansion nouvelle.

L'acte de Czolgosz fut vraiment un acte de lutte de classc. En tuant Mac-Kinley, Czolgosz frappait le capitalismo américain, cette ploutocratie barbare qui se nourrit vraiment de chair humaine, dans son représentant le plus qualifié. Nul plus que Mac-Kinley n'avait contribué à mettre la puissance politique aux picds du capital et à fonder lc règne brutal de l'argent.

L'exécution de Mac-Kinley valut aux anarchistes de longues pérsécutions ; nos idées cependant n'en ont pas souffert, loin de là. Most est mort en 1906, mais la Freiheit lui a survécu et se développe. Mother Earth a été fondée et fait parmi les Américains de langue anglaise unc activc et incessante propagande.

Emma Goldman. — Le mouvemcnt anarchiste a, aux Etats-Unis, des racines dans toutes les nationalités, et c'est pourquoi il est si difficile d'en parler d'une maniére satisfaisante. Les Allemands, les Russes, les Italiens ont chacun un mouvement anarchiste à cux, avec des organes spéciaux pour la propagande. Il y a même des groupcs arméniens et japonais. Les Japonais, concentrés en Californie ont récenimcnt montré la plus vive sympathie pour nos idées. Quant aux Juifs, ils sont peut-être les mieux organisés do tous et ils ont réussi depuis deux ans à faire passer en Russio plus do 40:000 dollars pour la lutte révolutionnaire.

Treize journaux et revues anarchistes (en comptant Liberty, l'organe individualisto de Tucker) se publient actuellement aux Etats-Unis. Ce sont : en languo anglaise Mother Earth (mensuel, 3.500 exemplaires) à New-York ; Démonstrator et Emancipator (mensuels) à Lake-Bay, colonie de Home (Etat de Washington) ; Liberty (individualiste, mensuel) à New-York ; — en langue allemande : Freiheit (hebd.) à New-York ; Arbeiterzeitung (quotidien), Fackel et Vorbote (hebdomadaires), tous trois antiparlementaires, paraissant à Chicago, et Freie Wort (mensuel) à New-York ; — en tchéque, Volné Listy (bi-mensuel) à New-York ; — cn italien, la Questione sociale (hebd.) à Paterson, et Cronaca sovvervisa (hebd.) à Barre ; — enfin en jeddish, Freie Arbeiterstimme (hebd.) à New-York.

Sous l'influence, en partie, de nos idées, la classe ouvrière, tend de plus en plus, surtout dans l'Ouest, à abandonner le vieux trade-unionisme routinier et conservateur, pour marcher dans les voies du syndicalisme révolutionnaire. Ainsi la grande Fédération des Mineurs do l'Ouest, dans ses luttes mémorables contre la bourgeoisie et le gouvernemcnt du Colorado, a usé énergiquement de l'action directe.

Hollande (II).

G. Rijnders demande à ajouter quelques mots au rapport de Samson sur le mouvemcnt hollandais. Samson, dit-il a trop regardé le mouvement avec les lunettes dc la Fédération. Il convient qu'on sache que les groupes non fédérés sont beaucoup plus nombreux que les groupes fédérés. Or les non-fédérés font, eux aussi, une propagande activo qu'il serait injuste de passer sous silence. C'est ainsi que le groupc d'Amsterdam a publié, cette année au vote, compris de cette façon. Si nous décidons de ne pas voter après chaque discussion, comment ferons-nous pour arriver à connaître quelle est l'opinion du Congrès, ou en combien de courants d'opinion le Congrès se partage ?

CINQUIÈME SÉANCE

Mardi 26 août. — Séance de l'après-midi.

La parole est donnée au camarade H. Croiset, d'Amsterdam, qui représente, dans le Congrès, la tendance individualiste.

H. Croiset. — Ce qui importe avant toute autre chose, c'est de donner une définition de l'anarchie qui servira de base à mes démonstrations. Nous sommes anarchistes en ce sens que nous voulons instaurer un état social dans lequel l'individu trouvera la garantie de sa liberté intégrale, dans lequel chacun pourra vivre pleinement sa vie ; autrement dit, dans lequel il sera donné à l'individu de vivre sans restriction d'aucune sorte, toute sa vie à lui, et non plus comme aujourd'hui, la vie des autres, je veux dire la vie que d'autres lui imposent.

Ma devise, c'est : Moi, moi, moi... et les autres ensuite !

Les individus ne doivent s'associer que lorsqu'il est démontré que leurs efforts individuels ne peuvent leur permettre d'atteindre isolément le but. Mais le groupement, l'organisation, ne doit jamais, sous aucun prétexte, devenir une contrainte pour celui qui y est entré librement. L'individu n'est pas fait pour la société, c'est au contraire la société qui est faite pour l'individu.

L'anarchie veut mettre chaque individu à même de développer librement toutes ses facultés. Or l'organisation a pour résultat fatal de limiter, toujours plus ou moins, la liberté de l'individu. L'anarchie est donc opposée à tout système d'organisation permanente. Par la vaine ambition de devenir pratiques, les anarchistes se sont réconciliés avec l'organisation. C'est une pente glissante sur laquelle ils se sont placés là. Ils finiront un jour ou l'autre par se réconcilier avec l'autorité elle-même, — tout comme les social-démocrates !

Les idées anarchistes doivent conserver leur pureté ancienne, plutôt que tendre à devenir plus pratiques. Retournons donc à l'ancienne pureté de nos idées !

Siegfried Nacht. — Je ne suivrai pas Croiset sur le terrain où il s'est placé. Ce qui, par dessus tout, me parait devoir être élucidé, ce sont les rapports entre l'anarchisme, ou plus exactement les organisations anarchistes, et les syndicats ouvriers. C'est pour faciliter la tâche de ces derniers que nous, en tant qu'anarchistes, nous devons constituer des groupes spéciaux de préparation et d'éducation révolutionnaire.

Le mouvement ouvrier a une mission qui lui est propre et qui découle des conditions de vie faites au prolétariat par la société actuelle : cette mission, c'est la conquête de la puissance économique, l'appropriation collective de toutes les sources de production et de vie. C'est à quoi aussi aspire l'anarchisme : mais celui-ci ne saurait y parvenir avec ses seuls groupements de propagande idéologique. Pour bonne qu'elle soit, la théorie ne pénètre pas profondément le peuple, et c'est avant tout par l'action que celui-ci s'éduque. L'action, peu à peu, lui donnera une mentalité révolutionnaire.

Les idées de gréve générale et d'action directe exercent une grande séduction sur la conscience des masses ouvriéres. Ces masses, dans la révolution future, constitueront en quelque sorte, l'infanterie de l'armée révolutionnaire. Nos groupes anarchistes, spécialisés dans les besognes téchniques, en formeront, pour ainsi dire l'artillerie, laquelle, pour être moins nombreuse, n'est pas moins nécessaire que l'infanterie.

Georges Thonar. — Communisme et individualisme, dans l'ensemble de l'idée anarchiste, sont égaux et inséparables. L'organisation, l'action en commun, est indispensable au développement de l'anarchisme et n'est pas contradictoire avec nos prémisses théoriques. L'organisation est un moyen, et pas un principe ; mais il va de soi que, pour être acceptable, elle doit être constituée libertairement.

L'organisation a pu être inutile, au temps où nous n'étions qu'un très petit nombre d'anarchistes, se connaissant tous et se fréquentant assidûment. Nous sommes devenus légion, et nous devons veiller à ce que nos forces ne s'éparpillent pas. Organisons-nous donc, non seulement pour la propagande anarchiste, mais encore et surtout pour l'action directe.

Je suis loin d'être hostile au syndicalisme surtout quand ses tendances sont à la révolution. Mais enfin l'organisation ouvriére n'est pas anarchiste, et par conséquent nous ne serons jamais, dans son sein, absolument nous-mémes ; notre activité n'y pourra jamais être intégralement anarchiste. D'où la nécessité pour nous de créer des groupements et des fédérations libertaires, fondées sur le respect de la liberté et de l'initiative de tous et de chacun.

K. Vohryzek. — C'est en qualité d'individualiste que je veux plaider la cause de l'organisation ! — Il est impossible de prétendre que l'anarchisme, du fait méme de ses principes, ne saurait admettre l'organisation. L'individualiste attitré lui-même ne condamne pas radicalement l'association entre les individus.

Dire, comme on le fait quelquefois : ou Stirner ou Kropotkine, en opposant ainsi ces deux penseurs, c'est faire une erreur. Kropotkine et Stirner ne peuvent être opposés l'un à l'autre : ils ont exposé la même idée à des points de vue différents. Voilà tout. Et la preuve que Max Stirner n'était pas l'individualiste forcené qu'on se plait à dire, c'est qu'il s'est prononcé en faveur de « l'organisation ». Il a même consacré un chapitre entier à l'association des égoïstes.

Notre organisation n'ayant aucun pouvoir exécutif ne sera pas contraire à nos principes. Dans les syndicats ouvriers, nous défendons les intérêts économiques des travailleurs. Mais pour tout le reste, nous devons nous grouper à part, créer des organisations à bases libertaires.

Emma Goldman. — Moi aussi, je suis en principe favorable à l'organisation. Cependant je redoute que celle-ci, un jour ou l'autre, ne tombe dans l'exclusivisme.

Dunois a parlé contre les excès de l'individualisme. Mais ces excès n'ont rien à faire avec l'individualisme vrai, pas plus que les excès du communisme n'ont à faire avec le véritable communisme. J'ai exposé ma manière de voir dans un rapport dont la conclusion est que l'organisation tend toujours, plus ou moins, à absorber la personnalité de l'individu. C'est là un danger qu'il faut prévoir. Aussi n'accepterai-je l'organisation anarchiste qu'à une seule condition, c'est qu'elle soit basée sur le respect absolu de toutes les initiatives individuelles et ne puisse en entraver le jeu ni l'évolution.

Le principe essentiel de l'anarchie, c'est l'autonomie individuelle. L'Internationale ne sera anarchiste que si elle respecte intégralement ce principe.

Pierre Ramus. — Je suis favorable à l'organisation et à tous les efforts qui seront faits parmi nous en ce sens. Pourtant il ne me semble pas que les arguments présentés dans le rapport de Dunois aient toute la qualité désirable. Nous devons nous efforcer de revenir aux principes anarchistes, tels que, tout à l'heure, les a formulés Croiset, mais en même temps nous devons systématiquement organiser notre mouvement. En d'autres termes, il faut que l'initiative individuelle s'appuie sur la force de la collectivité, et que la collectivité trouve son expression dans l'initiative individuelle. Mais pour qu'il en soit pratiquement ainsi, nous devons garder intacts et purs nos principes fondamentaux. Au reste nous sommes loin de créer du nouveau. En réalité, nous sommes les successeurs immédiats de ceux qui, dans la vieille Association internationale des Travailleurs, étaient avec Bakounine contre Marx. Nous n'apportons donc rien de nouveau et le plus que nous pouvons faire, c'est de donner à nos vieux principes une impulsion nouvelle, en favorisant partout la tendance à l'organisation.

Quant au but de la nouvelle Internationale, ce ne doit pas être de constituer une force auxiliaire de celle du syndicalisme révolutionnaire. Ce doit être de travailler à la propagande de l'anarchisme dans son intégrité.

SEPTIÈME SÉANCE

Mercredi 28 août. — Séance du matin.

La séance s'ouvre quelques minutes après 9 heures. On commence par confirmer le compagnon R. Lange dans ses fonctions de président. Puis après que le discours de Malatesta a été traduit en hollandais et en allemand, il est donné lecture de la correspondance, et notamment d'une lettre du compagnon Tsumin, de Paris, s'excusant d'être empêché par la maladie de prendre part au Congrès. Puis on reprend la discussion commencée la veille sur l'Organisation anarchiste.

Max Baoinsky.— Une grave erreur trop souvent commise, c'est de croire que l'individualisme répudie toute organisation. Les deux termes, au contraire, sont inséparables. Individualisme signifie plus spécialement un effort dans le sens de l'affranchissement intérieur, moral, de l'individu ; organisation signifie association entre individualités conscientes en vue d'un but à atteindre ou d'un besoin économique à assouvir. Il importo toutefois de ne jamais oublier qu'une organisation révolutionnaire a besoin d'individualités spécialement énergiques et conscientes.

Amédée Dunois. — Je constate que j'avais essayé de faire descendre la discussion du ciel des idées abstraites et vagues sur la terre ferme des idées concrétes, précises, humblement relatives. Croiset au contraire l'a fait remonter au ciel, à des hauteurs métaphysiques où je me refuse de le suivre.

La motion dont je propose l'adoption au congrès, ne s'inspire pas d'idées spéculatives sur le droit de l'individu au développement intégral. Elle part de considération toutes pratiques sur la nécessité qu'il y a à s'organiser, à solidariser les offorts de propagande et de combat.

(Et notro camarade lit la motion dont on trouvera plus loin le texte légérement amendé.)

Christian Cornélissen. — Rien n'est plus relatif que le concept d'individu. L'individualité en soi n'existe pas dans la réalité, où nous la voyons toujours limitée par d'autres individualités. Les individualistes oublient trop ces limites de fait, et le grand bienfait de l'organisation sera précisément de rendre l'individu conscient de ces limites en l'accoutumant à concilier son droit au développement personnel avec les droits d'autrui.

Benoit Broutchoux. — Mon expérience de militant révolutionnaire m'a fortement convaincu que l'organisation est encore le moyen le plus efficace pour empêcher ce fétichisme qui s'attache trop souvent à la personne de certains agitateurs et leur confrère une autorité de fait on ne peut plus dangereuse. Vous savez que nous avons, dans le Pas-de-Calais, une puissante organisation d'ouvriers mineurs. Eh bien, on ne trouverait pas chez nous la moindre trace d'autorité ni d'autoritarisme. Seuls nos ennemis peuvent soutenir le contraire et dénoncer, par exemple, dans les secrétaires de nos sections syndicales quelque chose comme des autorités constituées.

G. Rijnders. — Je ne suis pas, moi non plus, hostile à l'organisation. Du reste il n'y a pas un seul anarchisto qui au fond ne lui soit favorable. Tout dépend do la maniére dont l'organisation est conçue et établie. Ce qu'il convient avant tout d'y éviter, ce sont les personnalités. En Hollande, par exemple, la Fédération existante est loin de satisfaire tout le monde ; il est vrai que ceux qui ne l'approuvent pas n'ont qu'à n'y pas entrer.

Emile Chapelier. — Je demande que les discours soient moins longs et plus substantiels. Depuis le discours prononcé hier soir par Malatesta, lequel a épuisé la question, on n'a pas apporté pour ou contre l'organisation, un seul argument nouveau. Avant de parler d'autorité ou de liberté, il serait bon de s'entendre sur le sens de ces mots. Par exemple, qu'est-ce que l'autorité ? Si c'est l'influence qu'exercent et qu'exerceront toujours dans un groupement les hommes de capacité réelle, je n'ai rien à dire contre elle. Mais l'autorité qu'il faut à tout prix éviter entre nous, c'est celle qui découle de ce fait que certains camarades suivent aveuglément tel ou tel. C'est là un danger, et pour le conjurer, je demande que l'organisation qui sera créée ignore les chefs et les comités généraux.

Emma Goldman. — Je suis, comme je l'ai déjà dit, pour l'organisation. Seulement je voudrais que, dans la motion Dunois, fut explicitement affirmée la légitimité de l'action individuelle, à côté de l'action collective. Je présente donc un amendement à la motion Dunois.

(Goldman donne lecture de son amendement qui, accepté par Dunois, sera ensuite incorporé, en termes abrégés, à la motion de ce dernier.)

I. I. Samson. — Ici, en Hollande, existe une Fédération de Communistes libertaires, à laquelle j'appartiens. Sans doute, comme le disait tout à l'heure le compagnon Rijnders, beaucoup de camarades ont refusé d'y adhérer. Pour des raisons de principes ? Non pas : pour des raisons de personnes seulement. Nous n'excluons, n'avons jamais exclu personne. Nous ne nous opposons pas même à l'entrée des individualistes. Qu'ils viennent donc à nous, s'ils le veulent. A la vérité, je ne me dissimule pas que, quelque soit la forme de l'organisation, ils s'y conduiront toujours en mécontents. Ce sont des mécontents par nature et il n'y a pas trop à s'émouvoir de leurs critiques.

K. Vohryzek. — La motion Dunois ne disant rien sur le caractère que doit revêtir l'organisation anarchiste, je demande qu'elle soit complétée par une adjonction précisant ce caractère, adjonction que Malatesta a bien voulu signer avec moi.

(Vohryzek lit cette adjonction qu'on trouvera plus loin.)

La discussion est close. On va passer au vote sur les motions déposées. Il y en a deux : la première est celle de Dunois, légèrement amendée par Goldman et complétée par Vohryzek et Malatesta ; la seconde est celle du camarade Pierre Ramus.

Motion Dunois : (1)

Les anarchistes réunis à Amsterdam le 27 août 1907,

Considérant que les idées d'anarchie et d'organisation, loin d'être incompatibles, comme on l'a quelquefois prétendu, se complètent et s'éclairent l'une l'autre, le principe même de l'anarchie résidant dans la libre organisation des producteurs ;

Que l'action individuelle, pour importante qu'elle soit, ne saurait suppléer au défaut d'action collective, de mouvement concerté ; pas plus que l'action collective ne saurait suppléer au défaut d'initiative individuelle ; (2)

Que l'organisation des forces militantes assurerait à la propagande un essor nouveau et ne pourrait que hâter la pénétration dans la classe ouvrière des idées de fédéralisme et de révolution ;

Que l'organisation ouvrière, fondée sur l'identité des intérêts, n'exclut pas une organisation fondée sur l'identité des aspirations et des idées ;

(1) Le texte de cette motion a été quelque peu altéré dans l'édition française des Résolutions approuvées par le congrès anarchiste tenu à Amsterdam. Nous le donnons ici tel qu'il fut rédigé et voté.

(2) La proposition soulignée résume l'amendement d'Emma Goldman.

Sont d'avis que les camorades de tous les pays mettent à l'ordre du jour la eréation de groupes anarchistes et la fédération des groupes déjù créés.

ADJONCTION VOHRYZEK-MALATESTA :

La Fèdèrotion anarchiste est une association de groupes et d'individus où personne ne peut imposer sa volonté ni amoindrir l'initiative d'outrui. Vis-à-vis de la soeiété actuelle, elle a pour but de changer toutes les eonditions morales et èconomiques et, dans ce sens, elle soutient la lutte por tous les moyens adéquats. (1)

MOTION PIERRE RAMUS :

Le Congrès anorchiste d'Amsterdam, propose oux groupes de tous les pays de s'unir en fèdérotions locales et régionoles, d'oprès les diverses divisions gèographiques.

Nous dèclarons que notre proposition s'inspire des principes mêmes de l'anorchisme, car nous ne voyons pas la possibilitè de l'initiative et de l'activitè individuelle en dehors du groupement, lequel, constituè selon nos vœux, fournira seul un terroin pratique à la libre expansion de choque individuolitè.

L'organisotion fèdèrotive est la forme qui convient le mieux au prolétoriat onarchiste. Elle unit les groupes existants en un tout organique qui s'oecroît par l'odhèsion de groupes nouveaux. Elle est anti-autoritaire, n'admet oueun pouvoir lègislatif eentral à dècisions obligatoires pour les groupes et individus, eeux-ei ayant un droit reconnu ù se dèvelopper librement dans notre mouvement eommun et à agir dans le sens onorchiste et èconomique sans aueun ordre ou empêchement. La fèdèration n'exclut aueun groupe et choque groupe est libre de se retirer et de rentrer en possession des fonds versès, quond il le juge nècessaire.

Nous recommandons en outre aux compognons de se grouper selon les besoins et nèecessitès de leur mouvement respectif, et aussi de ne pas perdre de vue que la foree du mouvement anarchiste, national et international, dépend de sa constitution sur des bases internationales, les moyens d'émancipation ne pouvant dériver que d'une action internationale concertée.

(1) Même observation que pour la motion Dunois.

Compagnons de tous les pays, organisez-vous en groupes autonomes et unissez-vous en une fédération internationale : l'Internationale anarchiste.

Lecture de ces motions ayant été donnée en français, hollandais et allemand, il est passé au vote.

La motion Dunois obtient 46 voix ; l'adjonction Vohryzek 48. A la contre-épreuve, une seule main se lève contre la motion, aucune contre l'adjonction qui réunit ainsi l'unanimité des suffrages.

La motion Ramus est ensuite mise aux voix : elle réunit 13 pour et 17 contre. Beaucoup de congressistes déclarent s'abstenir pour la raison que la motion Ramus n'ajoute rien à celle qui vient d'être votée.

Le compte-rendu de Pages libres, que nous avons déjà cité, a souligné ainsi l'importance du votc émis par le Congrès :

« Cette résolution d'Amsterdam, y est-il dit, n'est pas tout à fait sans importance : désormais, il ne sera plus possible à nos adversaires social-démocrates d'invoquer notre vieille haine de toute espèce d'organisation pour nous bannir du socialisme sans autre forme de procès. Lc légendaire individualisme des anarchistes a été tué publiquement à Amsterdam par les anarchistes eux-mêmes, et toute la mauvaise foi de certains dc nos adversaires ne saurait parvenir à le ressusciter ».

On remarquera toutefois que dans les discussions précédentes, aussi bien que dans les motions déposées, il n'a été traité jusqu'ici de l'organisation qu'au seul point de vue théorique. Restaient à prendre des décisions d'un caractére pratique ; restait à créer l'Internationale anarchiste. Ce fut l'œuvre de la séance suivante.

HUITIÈME SÉANCE

Mercredi 28 août. — Séance de l'après-midi.

Cette séance est privée. La presse a été avisée qu'elle ne serait pas admise et ne se présente pas. En dehors des congressistes — dont l'appel se fait par nationalités pour éviter les intrus, — il n'y a dans la salle qu'un très petit nombre d'auditeurs, entre autres Fritz Kater, président de l'Union libre des syndicats allemands, qui suit depuis deux jours, au banc des délégués allemands, les séances du Congrès, — et quelques camarades d'Amsterdam connus des organisateurs.

Dès le début de la séance, la commission d'organisation du Congrès présente son rapport financier. Il en résulte que les dépenses ont de beaucoup dépassé les dépenses et qu'on prévoit un déficit d'environ 250 francs. Après un bref échange de vues, on décide qu'une collecte sera faite en fin de séance parmi les congressistes et qu'un appel à la solidarité des camarades de tous les pays sera adressé le plus tôt possible par le trésorier du Congrès (J.-L. Bruijn) à tous les journaux se réclamant de l'anarchisme.

Le Congrès ayant décidé que le compte-rendu de cette séance ne pourrait être publié d'une manière détaillée, nous devons nous borner à un aperçu rapide. Tout le monde était d'accord sur l'utilité d'établir, entre les anarchistes, des relations internationales ; mais sur la meilleure manière d'établir ces relations, les opinions divergeaient quelque peu. Un très grand nombre de délégués intervinrent dans la discussion. Ce sont : les camarades Georges Thonar, Henri Fuss, Chapelier, Malatesta, Fabbri, Ceccarelli, Monatte, Zielinska, Marmande, Broutchoux, Walter, Wilquet, Ramus, Goldman et Baginsky, Nacht, Samson et Cornélissen, Rogdaëff, Vohryzek, Lange et Friedeberg, Thonar demanda que l'Internationale fut composée de fédérations nationales ou régionales groupant chacune un certain nombre de sections locales ; les fédérations correspondraient entre elles directement, par l'intermédiaire de personnes sûres. A quoi H. Fuss répondit que le Congrès, sans entrer dans tous ces détails, devait se borner à créer un bureau de correspondance chargé de relier les divers mouvements nationaux. Vohryzek posa cette question : Recevra-t-on l'adhésion des individus isolés ? et demanda que ceux-ci ne pussent être admis quo sur présentation. Nacht soutint cette idée que les délégués des organisations existantes devaient commencer par s'entendre entre eux et présenter ensuite au Congrès un projet ferme d'Internationale.

Lanoe propose la création à Londres d'un Bureau international do correspondance de cinq membres, chargé do servir d'intermédiaire entre les groupes, et cetto proposition fut, comme on le verra, adoptée par le Congrès. Puis Friedebero demanda que le Bureau se tint en communication permanente avec les groupes et constituât, avec les journaux et les rapports écrits qu'il en recevrait, les archives de l'anarchisme international.

Emma Goldman s'éleva contre l'idée du Bureau de correspondance. Les dépenses qu'occasionnerait ce buroau, pensait-elle, seraient beaucoup mieux employées à la publication d'un Bulletin international, dont, au reste, les camarades d'Amérique s'engageaient à faire les frais. A quoi Cornélissen répliqua que ce Bulletin lui semblait en effet de la plus réelle utilité, mais que nul n'était mieux placé pour le publier que lo Bureau international.

A un certain moment, le président Lange fit connaître qu'un certain nombre de propositions concrètes avaient été déposées sur le bureau au cours de la discussion. Ces propositions émanaient des camarades Vohryzek, Marmande, Friedeberg, Lange, Nacht, Fabbri, Fuss, Broutchoux et Samson, et loin d'être incompatibles se complétaient l'une l'autre. Alors quelqu'un proposa la fusion en une seule de toutes ces propositions et la séance fut suspendue à cet effet.

Elle fut reprise au bout d'une demi-heure. Vohryzek, Marmande, Friedeberg et les autres s'étaient mis d'accord sur le texte suivant qui, soumis aussitôt à la ratification du Congrès, recueillit 43 voix contre 6. (1)

Les anarchistes (fédérations, groupes représentés et individus) réunis à Amsterdam, déclarent que l'Internationale anarchiste est constituée.

Elle est formée des organisations déjà existantes, des groupes et des camarades isolés qui y adhèreront ultérieurement.

Les individus, groupes et fédérations restent autonomes.

Un Bureau international est institué. Il sera composé de 5 membres.

Pour le cas où l'un des membres du B. I. se trouverait dans l'impossibilité absolue de remplir son mandat, les autres membres auront, d'un accord unanime, à le remplacer par un autre camarade.

Le Bureau a pour tâche de créer des archives anarchistes internationales accessibles aux camarades.

Il entre en rapports avec les anarchistes des différents pays, soit directement, soit par l'intermédiaire de 3 camarades choisis par les fédérations ou groupes des pays intéressés.

Pour faire partie de l'Internationale à titre individuel, les camarades devront avoir été identifiés soit par une organisation, soit par le Bureau, soit encore par des camarades connus du Bureau.

Les frais du Bureau et des archives seront couverts par les fédérations, groupes et individus adhérents.

(1) Nous donnons le texte publié officiellomont par le Bureau International. Il est suivi dans la brochure éditée par celui-ci d'un alinéa qui n'a pas été, croyons-nous, soumis au Congrès : « Que de chaque publication (journaux et brochures) il soit envoyé trois exemplaires au bureau international (archives) qui s'en servira au besoin pour les mettre à la disposition des groupes ou des individualités qui en auraient besoin à titre do documont. »

De leur côté, Baginski, E Goldman ot Ramus présentèrent la motion suivante qui ne recueillit que 4 voix :

Le Congrès international anarchiste déclare l'Internationale constituée. Celle-ci est dépourvue de tout office central. Son fonctionnement est assuré de la manière suivante : les fédérations, groupes et mouvements de tendance anarchiste de chaque pays éliront individuellement ou collectivement deux correspondants dont les noms et adresses seront publiés dans chaque numéro des périodiques anarchistes internationaux. Ces correspondants se tiendront, conformément aux instructions de leurs groupes ou fédérations, en contact constant avec les correspondants des autres pays. La publication d'un Bulletin international est résolue (1).

Ainsi fut constituée cette Internationale anarchiste que de nombreux camarades, en Hollande, en Belgique, en Allemagno et en Bohême, appelaient depuis longtemps de leurs vœux ! A la proclamation du scrutin, les applaudissements éclatèrent unanimes (2). Il était sept heures et la séance fut levée, tandis que de toutes les poitrines montait le chant de l'Internationale.

(1) Traduit sur le texte italien publié par Luigi Fabbri dans le Pensiero, de Rome.

(2) Voici comment notre ami Malatesta qu'on peut considérer commo lo plus ancien champion de l'organisation et de l'action collective a jugé dans les Temps Nouveaux, de Paris, (28 septembre 1907) l'institution de l'Internationale : « Ce n'est en réalité qu'un lien moral, une affirmation du désir de solidarité et de luttes communes. Mais c'est aussi ce qui importe le plus.

« L'important, je le répète, c'est le désir de lutter ensemble et l'intention de se tenir en relation pour n'avoir pas à se chercher quand il arrive le moment d'agir, avec le risque que le moment passe avant qu'on se soit trouvés. »

On l'écoute en silence présenter sa défense tour à tour en hollandais, en allemand et en français.

H. Croiset. — Le fait rapporté par Nacht est matériellement exact, je le reconnais avec un profond regret. Je mérite vos reproches et d'avance m'y soumets, à cause de ma légèreté coupable. Seulement je tiens à protester énergiquement contre une certaine expression employée par Nacht. Celui-ci dit m'avoir « surpris ». On ne surprend que celui qui se cache. Or c'est au cours de la réunion publique d'hier soir que j'ai parlé aux journalistes. J'ajoute que les renseignements que je leur ai transmis ne peuvent compromettre personne parmi nos compagnons.

Malatesta demande alors que le Congrès, tout en déplorant la légèreté du compagnon Croiset, passe à l'ordre du jour.

La majorité se range à l'opinion de Malatesta et adresse un blâme à Croiset. Ajoutons qu'un certain nombre de congressistes, dont Chapelier a été l'interprète s'est montrée opposée à ce blâme à cause des regrets exprimés par Croiset et du peu de mal qu'il a commis.

ONZIÈME SÉANCE

Jeudi 29 août. — Séance de l'après-midi.

Dès que la séance est ouverte, Emma Goldman donne lecture d'une résolution en faveur de la révolution russe, proposée par les camarades Rogdaëff, Wladimir Zabrejneff, conjointement avec Goldman, Cornélissen, Baginsky, Peter Meugnitch, Luigi Fabbri et Malatesta. Voici cette résolution qui fut naturellement votée à l'unanimité (1) :

Considérant

a) Qu'avec le développement de la révolution russe, on remarque de plus en plus que le peuple russe — le prolétariat des villes et des campagnes — ne sera jamais satisfait par la conquête d'une vaine liberté politique ; qu'il exige la suppression complète de l'esclavage économique et politique et emploie les mêmes méthodes de lutte, qui, depuis longtemps, sont déjà propagées par les anarchistes comme les seules efficaces ; qu'il n'attend rien d'en haut, mais s'efforce d'arriver à la réalisation de ses exigences par l'action directe ;

b) Que la révolution russe n'a pas seulement une importance locale ou nationale, mais que l'avenir le plus prochain du prolétariat international en dépend ;

c) Que la bourgeoisie du vieux et du nouveau monde s'est unie pour défendre ses privilèges afin de retarder l'heure de son anéantissement et a fourni l'aide matérielle et morale au plus fort soutien de la réaction — le gouvernement du tsar, qu'au détriment du peuple russe, elle soutient avec de l'argent et des munitions ;

(1) Le texte est celui qu'a publié le Bureau international. Toutefois nous avons cru devoir lui faire subir quelques corrections grammaticales.

d) Qu'au moment critique elle est toujours prête à lui apporter l'aide de ses canons et de ses fusils (tel est le cas des gouvernements d'Autriche et d'Allemagne) ;

Que l'appui intellectuel se traduit par le silence complet qu'on fait sur la lutte menée par le peuple russe, ainsi que sur toutes les brutalités de l'autocratie.

Le Congrès constate : que les prolétaires de tous les pays doivent opposer l'action la plus énergique émanant de l'Internationale Anarchiste ouvrière à toutes les agressions de l'Internationale Jaune composée des capitalistes unis, des gouvernements de toute sorte : monarchiques-constitutionnels et républicains-démocratiques, par cette action ils donneront la preuve de leur solidarité au prolétariat russe en révolte. Dans son propre intérêt, bien compris, il doit se refuser catégoriquement à tous les essais qui seraient entrepris pour étouffer les grèves et les insurrections en Russie. Jamais le prolétaire étranger en uniforme ne doit prêter la main à une action quelconque dirigée contre son frère russe. Si le prolétariat industriel, au moment d'une grève en Russie, n'avait pas la possibilité de déclarer une grève générale dans la branche correspondante, par suite des conditions locales, il devrait alors avoir recours aux autres moyens de lutte, au sabotage, à la destruction ou détérioration des produits envoyés à l'ennemi commun, à la destruction des voies de communication, des chemins de fer, des bateaux etc.

Le Congrès recommande avec insistance à tous ceux qui partagent son point de vue, la plus large propagande en faveur de tous les moyens par lesquels on pourrait aider à soutenir la Révolution russe.

On repreud alors la discussion relative à la grève générale et au syndicalisme. Christian Cornélissen prend le premier la parole.

Christian Cornélissen. — Je ne crois pas que les anarchistes puissent désapprouver en rien le discours

Monatte. Toutefois, il faut convenir que celui-ci a trop uniquement parlé en militant syndicaliste et que, de notre point de vue anarchiste, son discours aurait besoin d'être complété.

Anarchistes, c'est notre devoir de soutenir ot lo syndicalisme et l'action directe, mais à une condition : c'est qu'ils soient révolutionnaires dans leur but, c'est qu'ils ne cossent pas de viser à la transformation de la société actuelle en une société communiste et libertaire.

Ne nous dissimulons pas que le syndicalisme d'une part, l'action directe do l'autre, ne sont pas toujours et forcément révolutionnaires. On peut les employer aussi dans un but conservateur, voire réactionnaire. Ainsi les diamantaires d'Amsterdam et d'Anvers ont grandement amélioré leurs conditions de travail sans recourir aux moyens parlementaires, par la seule pratique de l'action syndicale directe. Or que voit-on ? Les diamantaires ont fait de leur corporation une sorte de caste fermée, autour de laquelle ils ont élevé une vraie muraille chinoise. Ils ont restreint le nombre des apprentis et s'opposent à ce que d'anciens diamantaires retournent à leur métier abandonné. Nous ne pouvons cependant approuver ces pratiques !

Elles ne sont d'ailleurs pas spéciales à la Hollande. En Angleterre, aux Etats-Unis, les trade-unions, elles aussi, ont largement pratiqué l'action directe. Par l'action directe, elles ont créé à leurs adhérents une condition privilégiée ; elles empêchent les ouvriers étrangers de travailler même lorsque ces ouvriers sont des syndiqués; composées d'ouvriers « qualifiés », enfin, on les a vues parfois s'opposer aux mouvements tentés par les manœuvres, les « non-qualifiés ». Nous ne pouvons approuver cela.

De même, quand les typos de France et de Suisse refusent de travailler avec les femmes, nous ne pouvons les approuver. Si actuellement, une guerre menace entre les Etats-Unis et le Japon, la faute n'en est pas aux capitalistes et bourgeois américains ; ceux-ci auraient même plus de profit à exploiter les ouvriers japonais que les ouvriers américains. Non, ce seraient les ouvriers américains eux-mêmes qui auraient déchaîné la guerre en s'opposant violemment à l'importation de la main-d'œuvre japonaise.

Il y a enfin certaines formes d'action directe que nous ne devons pas cesser de combattre : par exemple, celles qui s'opposent à l'introduction du machinisme (linotype, élévateurs), c'est-à-dire au perfectionnement de la production par le perfectionnement de l'outillage.

Je me réserve de formuler ces idées dans une motion qui dira quelles formes de syndicalisme et d'action directe peuvent soutenir les anarchistes (1).

La parole est donnée ensuite au compagnon Malatesta qui va prononcer, en réponse à Monatte, un de ses plus vigoureux discours. Un grand silence se fait dans la salle dès les premiers mots du vieux révolutionnaire, dont la rude et franche parole est unanimement aimée (1).

Errico Malatesta. — Je tiens à déclarer tout de suite que je ne développerai ici que les parties de ma pensée sur lesquelles je suis en désaccord avec les précédents orateurs, et tout particulièrement avec Monatte. Agir autrement serait vous infliger de ces répétitions oiseuses qu'on peut se permettre dans les meetings, quand on parle pour un public d'adversaires ou d'indifférents. Mais ici nous sommes entre camarades, et certes aucun d'entre vous, en m'entendant critiquer ce qu'il y a de criticable dans le syndicalisme, ne sera tenté de me prendre pour un ennemi de l'organisation et de l'action des travailleurs ; ou alors celui-là me connaîtrait bien mal. !

La conclusion à laquelle en est venu Monatte, c'est que le syndicalisme est un moyen nécessaire et suffisant de révolution sociale. En d'autres termes, Monatte a déclaré que le syndicalisme se suffit à lui-même. Et voilà, selon moi, une doctrine radicalement fausse. Combattre cette doctrine sera l'objet do ce discours.

(1) Voir les trois premiers paragraphes de la résolution Cornélissen-Vohryzek-Malatesta

Le syndicalisme, ou plus exactement le mouvement ouvrier (le mouvement ouvrier est un fait que personne ne peut ignorer, tandis que le syndicalisme est une doctrine, un système, et nous devons éviter de les confondre) le mouvoment ouvrier, dis-je a toujours trouvé en moi un défenseur résolu, mais non aveugle. C'est que je voyais en lui un terrain particulièrement propice à notre propagande révolutionnaire, en même temps qu'un point de contact entre les masses et nous. Je n'ai pas besoin d'insister là-dessus. On me doit cette justice que je n'ai jamais été de ces anarchistes intellectuels qui, lorsque la vieille Internationale eut été dissoute, se sont bénévolement enfermés dans la tour d'ivoire de la pure spéculation ; que je n'ai cessé de combattre, partout où je la rencontrais, en Italie, en France, en Angleterre et ailleurs, cette attitude d'isolement hautain, ni de pousser de nouveau les compagnons dans cette voie que les syndicalistes, oubliant un passé glorieux, appellent nouvelle, mais qu'avaient déjà entrevue et suivie, dans l'Internationale, les premiers anarchistes.

Je veux, aujourd'hui comme hier, que les anarchistes entrent dans le mouvement ouvrier. Je suis, aujourd'hui comme hier, un syndicaliste, en ce sens que je suis partisan des syndicats. Je ne demande pas des syndicats anarchistes qui légitimeraient, tout aussitôt des syndicats social-démocratiques, républicains, royalistes ou autres et seraient, tout au plus, bons à diviser plus que jamais la classe ouvrière contre elle-même. Je ne veux pas même de syndicats dits rouges, parce que je ne veux pas de syndicats dits jaunes. Je veux au contraire des syndicats largement ouverts à tous les travailleurs sans distinction d'opinions, des syndicats absolument neutres.

Donc je suis pour la participation la plus active possible au mouvement ouvrier. Mais je le suis avant tout dans tout le monde ici, l'anarchie est notre but final. Seulement, parce que les temps sont changés, nous avons modifié aussi notre conception du mouvement et do la révolution. Celle-ci ne peut plus être faite au moule de Quarante-huit. Quant au syndicalisme, si sa pratique a pu, en certains pays engendrer des erreurs et des déviations, l'expérience est là qui nous empêchera d'y retomber. Si, au lieu de critiquer de haut les vices passés, présents ou même futurs du syndicalisme, les anarchistes se mêlaient plus intimement à son action, les dangers que le syndicalisme peut réceler, seraient à tout jamais conjurés !

Georges Thonar. — Quoi qu'en ait dit Monatte, il n'y a pas ici des jeunes et des vieux, les uns défendant des idées nouvelles, les autres de vieilles idées. Beaucoup de jeunes, dont je suis, se font gloire de ne pas abandonner un pouce des idées anarchistes, lesquelles sont à l'abri des injures du temps.

D'ailleurs, je crois qu'entre les « jeunes » d'une part, et les « vieux » de l'autre, il n'y a que des différences d'appréciations, insuffisantes pour diviser en deux camps rivaux l'armée anarchiste.

La séance est levée à 1 heure du matin.

TREIZIÈME SÉANCE

Vendredi 30 août. — Séance du matin.

Il est neuf heures, quand Lange, demeuré à la présidence, déclare la séance ouverte. Le débat sur le syndicalisme et la grève générale est clos et l'on n'a plus qu'à voter sur les différents ordres du jour en présence avant d'aborder l'antimilitarisme. Mais le camarade Aristide Ceccarelli, demande à dire quelques mots sur le mouvement ouvrier et anarchiste argentin. Il à la parole.

Aristide Ceccarelli. — Depuis quelques années s'est dessiné, dans l'Argentine, un fort mouvement ouvrier. Tout un groupe de militants s'y intitulent syndicalistes. Mais comme les syndicalistes italiens auxquels ils ressemblent beaucoup, ils n'ont pas renoncé aux errements du parlementarisme ; et les seuls à faire, au sein de la classe ouvrière, un travail sérieux dans le sens révolutionnaire, ce sont les anarchistes. On peut dire que presque toutes les organisations de la Fédéracion Obrera Régional argentine, montrent des tendances libertaires ; et nombre d'entre elles font de la propagande anarchiste directe. Le récent congrès ouvrier argentin, dit d'unification, a approuvé à une grande majorité la proposition faite aux syndicats de contribuer à la propagande du communisme anarchiste.

A. Ceccarelli fait ensuite un sombre tableau de la misére des travailleurs argentins et termine en se déclarant mandaté pour proposer au congrès anarchiste le vote d'une résolution destinée à entraver, dans la mesure du possible, l'émigration européenne en un pays où, autant et plus qu'ailleurs, le pain et la liberté font défaut.

Errico Malatesta et quelques autres délégués font alors observer que la résolution proposée par Aristide Ceccarelli mériterait une discussion spéciale à laquelle le congrès ne peut procéder aujourd'hui, ayant avant toute chose à en finir avec le syndicalisme.

Sans statuer sur la question soulevée par Ceccarelli, on décide donc de passer au vote sur les motions relatives au syndicalisme et à la grève générale. Ces motions sont au nombre de quatre :

1° Motion Cornélissen-Vohryzek-Malatesta (1).

Le Congrès Anarchiste International considère les syndicats à la fois comme des organisations de combat dans la lutte de classe en vue de l'amélioration des conditions de travail et comme des unions de producteurs pouvant servir à la transformation de la société capitaliste en une société communiste anarchiste.

Aussi le Congrès, en admettant la nécessité éventuelle de la création de groupements syndicalistes révolutionnaires particuliers, recommande aux camarades de soutenir les organisations syndicales générales où ont accès tous les ouvriers d'une même catégorie.

Mais le Congrès considère comme la tâche des anarchistes de constituer dans ces organisations l'élément révolutionnaire et de propager et de soutenir seulement telles formes et manifestations d' « action directe » (grèves, boycottage, sabotage, etc.) qui portent en elles-mêmes un caractère révolutionnaire et vont dans le sens de la transformation de la société.

Les anarchistes considèrent le mouvement syndicaliste et la grève générale comme de puissants moyens révolutionnaires, mais non comme des succédanés de la Révolution.

Ils recommandent d'autre part aux camarades, dans le cas de la proclamation d'une grève générale en vue de la conquête du pouvoir, de se mettre en grève, mais les invite en même temps à exciter les syndicats sous leur influence à faire alors entendre leurs revendications économiques.

(1) Les trois premiers paragraphes de cette motion commune sont de Cornélissen ; le cinquième de Vohryzek, le quatrième et le sixième de Malatesta.

Les anarchistes pensent que la destruction de la société capitaliste et autoritaire peut se réaliser seulement par l'insurrection armée et l'expropriation violente et que l'emploi de la grève plus ou moins générale et le mouvement syndicaliste ne doivent pas faire oublier les moyens plus directs de lutte contre la force militaire des gouvernements.

Cette motion qui porte, outre les signatures de ses auteurs, celles des camarades Wilquet, Emma Goldman, de Marmande, Rogdaëff et Knotek, est approuvée par 33 voix contre 16.

2° Motion R. Friedeberg (1) :

La lutte des classes et l'émancipation du prolétariat ne sont pas identiques avec les idées et les aspirations de l'anarchisme, qui tend — par dessus les aspirations immédiates des classes — à la délivrance économique et morale de la personnalité humaine, à un milieu exempt d'autorité, et non pas à un pouvoir nouveau, celui de la majorité sur la minorité.

L'anarchisme considère toutefois l'abolition de l'oppression des classes, la suppression de la dépendance économique de la majorité des êtres humains, comme une étape absolument nécessaire et essentielle dans la voie vers le but final. L'anarchisme doit toutefois s'opposer à ce que la lutte pour l'émancipation du prolétariat se poursuive par des moyens qui contredisent l'idée de l'anarchisme et sont un obstacle (2) au but précis de ce mouvement. Il s'oppose, partant, à engager cette lutte par le moyen préconisé par le socialisme marxiste, c'est-à-dire par le parlementarisme et par un mouvement syndical corporatif ayant uniquement en vue l'amélioration des conditions du prolétariat, — ces deux moyens ne pouvant que favoriser le développement d'une nouvelle bureaucratie, d'une autorité intellectuelle patentée ou non, et nous conduire à l'oppression de la minorité. Les moyens anarchistes pour la suppression de l'oppression de classe ne peuvent être que ceux qui découlent directement de l'affirmation de la personnalité individuelle : « l'action directe » et « le non-consentement de l'individu » — c'est-à-dire l'individualisme actif et passif, soit d'une seule personne, soit d'une masse pénétrée d'une volonté collective.

Le Congrès Communiste Libertaire repousse par conséquent la grève pour les droits politiques (Politischer Massenstreik) dont le but est inacceptable pour l'anarchisme, mais reconnaît dans la grève générale économique révolutionnaire, c'est-à-dire dans le refus du travail de tout le prolétariat comme classe, le moyen apte à désorganiser la structure économique de la société actuelle et à émanciper le prolétariat de l'oppression du salariat. — Pour la réalisation de cette grève générale, la pénétration des syndicats par l'idéal anarchique doit être considérée comme indispensable. Un mouvement syndicaliste pénétré de l'esprit anarchiste, peut, au moyen d'une grève générale révolutionnaire, détruire l'oppression de classe et ouvrir la voie au but final de l'anarchisme : l'avènement d'une société exempte de toute autorité.

Cette motion est approuvée par 36 voix contre 6.

3° Motion Dunois, contresignée par Monatte, Fuss, Nacht, Ziélinska, Fabbri, K. Walter :

Les anarchistes réunis à Amsterdam du 26 au 31 août 1907,

Considérant que le régime économique et juridique actuel est caractérisé par l'exploitation et l'asservissement de la masse des producteurs, et détermine, entre ceux-ci et les bénéficiaires du régime actuel, un antagonisme d'intérêts absolument irréductible qui donne naissance à la lutte de classe ;

Que l'organisation syndicale, solidarisant les résistances et les révoltes sur le terrain économique, sans préoccupations doctrinaires, est l'organe spécifique et fondamental de cette lutte du prolétariat contre la bourgeoisie et toutes les institutions bourgeoises ;

Qu'il importe qu'un esprit révolutionnaire toujours plus audacieux oriente les efforts de l'organisation syndicale dans la voie de l'expropriation capitaliste et de la suppression de tout pouvoir ;

Que l'expropriation et la prise de possession collective des instruments et des produits du travail ne pouvant être accomplies que par les travailleurs eux-mêmes, le syndicat est appelé à se transformer en groupe producteur, et se trouve être dans la société actuelle le germe vivant de la société de demain ;

Engagent les camarades de tous les pays, sans perdre de vue que l'action anarchiste n'est pas toute entière contenue dans les limites du syndicat, à participer activement au mouvement autonome de la classe ouvrière et à développer dans les organisations syndicales les idées de révolte, d'initiative individuelle et de solidarité qui sont l'essence de l'anarchisme.

Cette motion, fut approuvée par 28 voix contre 7. Comme elle était muette sur la grève générale elle fut complétée par la motion suivante :

4° Motion Nacht-Monatte, contresignée par Fuss, Dunois, Fabbri, Zélinska, et Karl Walter :

Les anarchistes réunis à Amsterdam du 26 au 31 août 1907, déclarent tenir la grève générale expropriatrice pour un remarquable stimulant de l'organisation et de l'esprit de révolte dans la société actuelle et pour la forme sous laquelle peut s'accomplir l'émancipation du prolétariat.

La grève générale ne peut être confondue avec la grève générale politique (Politischer Massenstreik) qui n'est autre chose qu'une tentative des politiciens pour détourner la grève générale de ses fins économiques et révolutionnaires.

Par des grèves généralisées à des localités, à des règions, à des professions entières, on soulèvera progressivement la classe ouvrière et on l'entraînera vers la grève générale expropriatrice qui comprendra la destruction de la société actuelle et l'expropriation des moyens de production et des produits.

Cette motion recueillit 25 voix et, par conséquent, fut approuvée elle aussi.

Le lecteur s'étonnera peut-être que ces quatres motions aient pu, malgré leurs évidentes contradictions, être toutes adoptées. Il y a là, en effet un manquement aux usages parlementaires, mais un manquement voulu. Il ne convenait pas que l'opinion de la majorité étouffât ou parut étouffer celle de la minorité. La majorité a donc pensé qu'il fallait voter successivement, par pour et par contre, sur chacune des motions déposées. Or toutes les quatre ont recueilli une majorité de pour. Par conséquent toutes les quatre ont été approuvées. (1)

Il semble qu'on en ait fini avec le syndicalisme et la gréve générale Mais Emma Goldman se léve et dit qu'il serait étrange qu'un congrès anarchiste ne se déclarât pas

(1) Nous détachons de la courte préface mise par le Bureau International en tête des Résolutions du Congrès d'Amsterdam, les lignes suivantes qui confirment ce que nous venons de dire :

« Pour ceux qui sont habitués à considérer les Congrès comme des corps législatifs qui dictent aux membres du parti la doctrine officielle et la conduite à suivre, il peut paraitre étrange qu'on ait pris sur les mêmes questions plusieurs résolutions plus ou moins différentes. Mais pour les camarades cela n'aura rien que de très naturel.

« Le Congrès d'Amsterdam, étant un congrès d'anarchistes, n'avait pu, et ne pouvait pas, avoir la prétention de faire la loi aux autres : il voulait seulement exprimer les opinions des camarades intervenus et des groupes représentés, et proposer ces opinions à la discussion et, possiblement, à l'approbation de tous les anarchistes. »

en faveur du droit de révolte entendu dans son acceptation la plus large ; et elle lit la déclaration suivante que le camarade Baginsky a signée avec elle :

Le Congrès Anarchiste International se déclare en faveur du droit de révolte de la part de l'individu comme de la part de la masse entière.

Le Congrès est d'avis que les actes de révolte, surtout quand ils sont dirigés contre les représentants de l'Etat et de la ploutocratie, doivent être considérés d'un point de vue psychologique. Ils sont les résultats de l'impression profonde faite sur la psychologie de l'individu par la pression terrible de notre injustice sociale.

On pourrait dire, comme règle, que seul l'esprit le plus noble, le plus sensible et le plus délicat est sujet à de profondes impressions se manifestant par la révolte interne et externe. Pris sous ce point de vue, les actes de révolte peuvent être caractérisés comme les conséquences socio-psychologiques d'un système insupportable ; et comme tels, ces actes, avec leurs causes et motifs doivent être compris, plutôt que louès ou condamnés.

Durant les périodes révolutionnaires, comme en Russie, l'acte de révolte — sans considérer son caractère psychologique — sert de double but : il mine la base même de la tyrannie et soulève l'enthousiasme des timides. C'est le cas surtout, quand l'activité terroriste est dirigée contre les agents les plus brutaux et les plus haïs du despotisme.

Le Congrès en acceptant cette résolution, exprime son adhésion à l'acte individuel de révolte de même que sa solidarité avec l'insurrection collective.

MALATESTA. — J'accepte pour ma part la déclaration Goldman-Baginsky. Mais étant donné qu'on ne peut la rattacher ni à la discussion sur le syndicalisme, qui est close, ni à la discussion sur l'antimilitarisme qui va s'ouvrir dans un instant, je propose qu'on la considére comme une simple déclaration de principes et non comme une motion ordinaire, ot que le congrès la vote comme telle.

Emma Goldman. — Quelque nom qu'on donne à notre proposition, Max Baginsky et moi tenons, avant tout, à ce que le congrès la vote.

Mise aux voix, la déclaration Goldman-Baginsky est approuvée à l'unanimité.

Il est près de onze heures lorsque le président déclare la discussion ouverte sur cette question : L'antimilitarisme comme tactique de l'anarchisme.

Les rapporteurs sont les compagnons R. de Marmande et Pierre Ramus. Le président rappelle le vote émis à ce sujet dans la première séance du Congrès.

R. Friedeberg demande la parole pour une motion d'ordre.

R. Friedeberg. — Etant donné que l'heure tardive ne nous permet pas une discussion approfondie de la question antimilitariste, étant donné, d'autre part, que le Congrès international antimilitariste a commencé ses travaux ce matin même, dans une salle voisine, je propose que nous nous joignions à lui pour discuter la question avec lui.

Malatesta. — Le temps nous manque, en effet, pour une discussion approfondie. Il est vrai que cette discussion n'est pas indispensable. Sur la question antimilitariste, tous les anarchistes sont bien d'accord. Je propose donc que nous allions au Congrès antimilitariste, mais non sans avoir au préalable indiqué notre manière de voir dans une motion que les rapporteurs seront chargés de défendre au Congrès antimilitariste.

De Marmande. — Je me range à l'opinion exprimée par Malatesta.

Christian Cornélissen. — Je pense au contraire qu'il est indispensable que la discussion ait lieu tout au long ici même. Il ne faut pas qu'après que les social-démocrates de Stuttgart ont dénaturé l'antimilitarisme, les anarchistes négligent de prendre position sur cette question capitale.

Malatesta. — Je m'oppose énergiquement à cette manière de faire. Le temps nous manque, tandis qu'au congrès antimilitariste où nous irons ce soir, toutes les discussions pourront être instituées. Je demande que le Congrès se range à l'opinion que j'ai exprimée tout à l'heure et vote la motion que j'ai déposée avec quelques camarades, motion que Marmande et Ramus soutiendront devant le Congrès antimilitariste.

Voici cette motion à laquelle finalement se rallie Cornélissen :

Les anarchistes, voulant la délivrance intégrale de l'humanité et la liberté complète des individus, sont naturellement, essentiellement, les ennemis déclarés de toute force armée entre les mains de l'Etat : armée, gendarmerie, police, magistrature.

Ils engagent leurs camarades — et en général tous les hommes aspirant à la liberté, à lutter selon les circonstances et leur tempérament, et par tous les moyens, à la révolte individuelle, au refus de service isolé ou collectif, à la désobéissance passive et active et à la grève militaire — pour la destruction radicale des instruments de domination.

Ils expriment l'espoir que tous les peuples intéressés répondront à toute déclaration de guerre par l'insurrection.

Ils déclarent penser que les anarchistes donneront l'exemple.

Cette motion qui porte les signatures de Malatesta, Marmande, Thonar, Cornélissen, Ramus et Domela Nieuwenhuis, est approuvée sans discussion.

La séance est levée. Il est midi.

QUATORZIÈME SÉANCE

Vendredi 30 août. — Séance de l'après-midi.

Conformément aux résolutions prises, cette séance est commune au Congrès anarchiste et au Congrès antimilitariste. Celui-ci a tenu dans la matinée sa première séance, réservée aux sections hollandaises de l'Association internationale antimilitariste.

Les congressistes sont donc très nombreux, ainsi que le public. Le camarade Vohryzek, délégué de la Fédération anarchisto de Bohéme, est élu président.

La parolo est donnée, en premier lieu, à R. de Marmande, que le congrès anarchiste a chargé de s'exprimer en son nom.

R. DE MARMANDE fait d'abord rapidement l'historique du mouvement antimilitariste en France. Il montre le rôle considérable joué par les anarchistes. Il rappelle les poursuites de 1887 contre la Ligue des antipatriotes; la condamnation qui frappa Jean Grave en 1894 pour son livre de révolte, la Société mourante et l'anarchie. Il signale la campagne continue, menée dans les Temps Nouveaux et le Libertaire, contre l'armée et l'idée de patrie. « Vraiment, dit-il, l'esprit anarchiste inspire partout l'action antimilitariste et révolutionnairo ». Il entre ensuite dans le détail des manifestations antimilitaristes de ces derniéres années: Manuel du Soldat, de Georges Yvetot; création de la section française de l'A. I. A. ; déclarations de Gustave Hervé au Tivoli Vaux-Hall, en 1905 ; procès de l'Affiche Rouge et condamnation des signataires, afficho des douze, etc. Depuis lors des poursuites judiciaires n'ont cessé d'être exercées, suivies pour la plupart de condamnations féroces. L'antimilitarisme reste en France à l'ordre du jour.

Avant de terminer, Marmande indique que la forme de la propagande a changé. Lo rôlo de l'A. I. A. semble terminé, en France du moins ; les sections, formées en majeure partie d'anarchistes, reprennent leur autonomie. Le programme de l'A. I. A. contenait un certain particularisme qui devait être assez tôt épuisé. L'antimilitarisme n'est pas une doctrine. Il y a des conceptions anarchistes où trouvo place tout naturellement l'antimilitarisme. L'anarchisme a lancé, semé à la volée et fait germer partout la révolte.

Marmande, en terminant, lit la motion antimilitariste approuvée dans la matinée par le Congrès anarchiste, et propose que le Congrès antimilitariste la vote à son tour.

A l'unanimité, le Congrès adopte cette motion, dont le texte a été donné plus haut.

Prennent ensuite la parole les délégués suivants: Friedeberg, Rogdaeff, Domela Nieuwenhuis, Croiset, Pierre Ramus, Emma Goldman, la citoyenne Sorgue. Luigi Fabbri, délégué des sections italiennes de l'A. I. A. et du journal antimilitariste La Pace, expose l'état de l'antimilitarisme italien, dont parle également la citoyenne Sorguo.

Il s'agit de décider où le Bureau aura son siège. Quelques délégués tout d'abord proposent Paris ou Genève, mais ces propositions, vivement combattues par d'autres camarades, sont abandonnées ; Bruxelles et Amsterdam n'ont pas plus de succès et l'on se met d'accord sur Londres, centre essentiellement international où résident des militants de tous les pays.

Reste à choisir les ciuq membres du Bureau. Une liste circule, sur laquelle figurent les noms de : Errico Malatesta, (malgré ses protestations) Rudolf Rocker, A. Schapiro, John Turner (absent) et Jean Wilquet.

Ces cinq camarades sont élus, Malatesta en tête avec 53 suffrages. Malatesta est Italien ; Rocker et Wilquet sont Allemands ; Schapiro est Russe ; Turner est Anglais.

Sur la proposition de Malatesta, le Congrès charge le Bureau international d'engager, dans tous les pays d'Occident où il aura des relations, une action simultanée en faveur du camarade belge Edouard Jooris, condamné à mort par les tribunaux turcs pour participation à un attentat contre le Sultan (21 juillet 1905) (1).

Avant de lever la séauce, un délégué demande qu'on fixe la date et le lieu du prochain Congrès. Un échange de vues à lieu à cet effet. On décide qu'un nouveau congrès aura lieu dans deux ans et on laisse au Bureau International le soin d'en fixer le lieu et la date exacte, d'accord avec les fédérations et groupements adhérents.

On se sépare à midi et demi.

(1) Cette campagne a eu lieu en novembre-décembre. Au moment ou nous écrivons ces lignes (25 décembre), nous apprenons que Jooris vient d'être grâcié et libéré.

DIX-SEPTIÈME ET DERNIÈRE SÉANCE

Samedi 31 août. — Séance de l'après-midi.

Cette séance, la dernière du Congrès, se tient, par exception, dans une salle du premier étage. Les délégués sont nombreux, autant, sinon plus, qu'au premier jour ; mais on sent une lassitude générale, — la lassitude de toutes les fins de Congrès. Cependant l'ordre du jour n'est pas épuisé, mais tout le monde est d'accord pour en finir au plus vite.

La présidence est conférée à Emma Goldman.

L'Education intégrale de l'Enfance est le premier point porté à l'ordre du jour de la séance. Le rapporteur en est Léon Clément, de Paris, mais celui-ci est absent, et c'est le camarade de Marmande qui se charge de résumer à grands traits l'intéressant rapport envoyé par Léon Clément.

L'idée générale de ce rapport est que, les ouvriers étant plus aptes que personne à déterminer le caractère de l'éducation à donner à leurs enfants, le soin de l'éducation revient essentiellement aux syndicats ou mieux aux Bourses du travail et Unions ouvrières.

Tout le monde est d'accord pour approuver une telle idée et pour souhaiter que le rapport de Léon Clément soit publié (1) et répandu ; mais aucune résolution n'est prise à son sujet.

Pierre Ramus renonce, à cause du manque de temps, à faire entendre le rapport qu'il a préparé sur cette question : La Littérature moderne et l'Anarchisme, et le camarade G. Rijnders, qui devait parler sur Anarchisme et Religion, renonce lui aussi à la parole.

Sur la question de l'Alcoolisme, le Prof. J. Van Rees apporte la motion suivante (1) :

1. L'Alcoolisme est un ensemble de phénomènes sociaux caractérisés par l'assujettissement des hommes aux boissons alcooliques.

2. Tandis que l'usage immodéré de la boisson avec ses suites funestes est censé constituer l'alcoolisme, l'usage modéré de la boisson n'en constitue pas moins un phénomène spécial d'alcoolisme.

3. Cet alcoolisme général, suite de l'alcoolisme modéré qui affecte spécialement notre jugement à l'égard de l'habitude de boire modérément, est beaucoup plus dangereux et beaucoup plus inguérissable que l'intempérance ordinaire.

4. L'alcoolisme, menaçant surtout le niveau déjà acquis par l'humanité, aussi bien que la race future, il est nécessaire d'en finir avec les habitudes de boire, pour tout homme d'esprit et de cœur.

5. L'anarchisme veut dire cette conception de vie qui a rompu avec la croyance en la nécessité d'une autorité extérieure pour tous les hommes normaux.

6. L'influence qu'ont les habitudes « alcooliques » sur les idées et sur la manière de vivre des individus, exerce précisément une de ces autorités extérieures que les anarchistes désapprouvent.

7. Ainsi l'alcoolisme (outre qu'il est un des plus grands fléaux de l'humanité entière) est encore au plus haut point autoritaire, et par conséquent contraire à l'idée anarchiste qui réclame l'affranchissement de l'esprit et de la conscience, de toute autorité extérieure.

8. Les anarchistes, ennemis de toute mesure législative, sont encore, plus que les autres socialistes, tenus de combattre l'alcoolisme par des moyens purement individuels.

(1) Texte publié par Emile Chapelier dans Le Communiste (n° 4, 21 septembre 1907).

9. La propagation de toute idée socialiste et anarchiste est énormément entravée par l'alcoolisation immodérée ou modérée.

10. La société future anarchiste sera ennemie des boissons intoxicantes, ou elle ne sera pas.

Cette motion est complétée par l'adjonction suivante, proposée par E. Chapelier et acceptée par J. Van Rees.

1. L'alcoolisme est, à cause de la démoralisation qu'il provoque, un des plus puissants soutiens de la société capitaliste.

2. Les gouvernements sont incapables de combattre l'alcoolisme et sont du reste intéressés à l'entretenir, car c'est grâce à lui qu'ils peuvent équilibrer leur budget.

Cette motion ne fut pas mise aux voix, la presque unanimité des congressistes s'y étant montrée nettement opposée. Malatesta a donné les raisons de cette opposition : « On avait proposé, a-t-il écrit, (1) une résolution contre l'alcoolisme, mais on passa à l'ordre du jour. Personne certainement n'aurait hésité à acclamer une résolution contre l'abus de boissons alcooliques, quoique peut-être avec la conviction que cela ne servait à rien ; mais la résolution proposée condamnait même l'usage modéré, qu'on considérait plus dangereux que l'abus. Cela nous parut trop fort ; dans tous les cas, on pense que c'est un argument qui devrait plutôt être discuté par les médecins..., en admettant qu'ils en sachent quelque chose. »

L'ordre du jour appelle ensuite la discussion sur ce sujet : L'anarchisme comme vie et comme activité individuelle. (E. Armand et Mauricius, de Paris, rapporteurs.)

Mais les deux rapporteurs sont absents et l'on passe outre, personne n'ayant démandé à traiter la question.

Sur la question de l'association de production, l'un des rapporteurs, I. I. Samson a été entendu la veille ; l'autre, Emile Chapelier, imitant l'exemple précédemment donné par Ramus et Rijnders, renonce à prendre la parole.

Mais le congrès est en présence d'une résolution de Samson dont voici le texte (1) :

Le congrès international anarchiste d'Amsterdam est d'avis que l'association de production, soit isolément soit de concert avec le mouvement syndical révolutionnaire, est compatible avec l'idéal anarchiste et peut lui venir en aide.

Il serait avantageux qu'avant et après la grève générale, un grand nombre de sociétés de production, pussent venir en aide, fortes de leur expérience, à toute la classe ouvrière émancipée, en organisant la production et l'échange sur une base nettement anti-capitaliste et anti-parasitaire.

De même le congrès est d'avis que dans les circonstances actuelles, le mouvement syndical révolutionnaire, ainsi que toute la classe ouvrière, peut tirer profit de la pratique des sociétés de production.

Mais ici encore, le congrès refuse de passer au vote. La question soulevée par la résolution Samson n'est pas de celles qu'on peut résoudre en quelques minutes ; or le temps matériel manque pour l'examiner sous toutes les faces ; mieux vaut donc la laisser en suspens jusqu'à un congrès prochain.

On aborde enfin la question dernière : l'Espéranto. Le camarade Chapelier a apporté sur cette question un volumineux rapport, mais il se borne à demander l'adoption de la résolution suivante qu'ont signé avecc lui Malatesta et Rogdaëff (2) :

(1) D'après le Pensiero, de Rome.
(2) Texte du Communiste (n° 4).

Le Congrès Communiste-Anarchiste International d'Amsterdam, considérant :

1. que la multiplicité des langues constitue des frontières intellectuelles et morales et par suite une entrave à la propagation des idées révolutionnaires ;

2. qu'au cours même de ses débats, il a été constaté que les difficultés et les inexactitudes fatales de traduction nous ont fait perdre au moins les trois quarts de notre temps ;

3. *que l'emploi d'une langue commune faciliterait l'échange des communications de l'*Internationale Libertaire ;

4. qu'aucune langue vivante ne réunit les conditions nécessaires de neutralité, de facilité et de souplesse ;

5. que de toutes les langues artificielles, l'Esperanto est la seule qui soit sérieusement employée et qui semble être appelée au succès ;

Emet le vœu que tous les anarchistes ou tout au moins les militants étudient l'Esperanto et que dans un avenir prochain nos congrès internationaux puissent se faire en langue internationale.

Amédée Dunois, soutenu par Henri Fuss, se déclare hostile à cette résolution. « Nous ne sommes qualifiés, ni les uns ni les autres, dit-il, pour juger de la valeur de l'Espéranto. Nous ne sommes point des linguistes. » — Et il propose que le congrès se borne à conseiller à tous les camarades l'étude et la pratique d'au moins une langue vivante.

E. Chapelier. — S'il en est ainsi, je demande que le Congrès entende la lecture de mon rapport où j'ai réuni tous les arguments qui militent en faveur de l'Espéranto. Ces arguments n'ont rien d'inaccessible et peuvent être compris par tout le monde. Les nombreux groupes d'espérantistes qui m'ont délégué ici ne comprendraient pas qu'un Congrès anarchiste, dont tous les membres se disent internationalistes, se refusât à m'entendre.

E. MALATESTA. — Cependant on ne peut demander au Congrès de voter une motion qui n'a pas été préalablement discutée et sur laquelle tous ne sont pas d'accord. Or le temps manque et je crois qu'il serait préférable de voter une résolution se bornant à recommander aux camarades d'étudier le problème d'une langue internationale.

Et l'on met aux voix l'ordre du jour suivant qui est adopté sans difficulté :

Le Congrès, tout en reconnaissant l'utilité d'un mode international de communication, se déclare incompétent. pour juger de la langue internationale proposée (Espéranto)

Le Congrès émet le vœu que les camarades pouvant s'en occuper, étudient le problème d'une langue internationale.

La camarade Emma Goldman, présidente, déclare alors que l'ordre du jour est épuisé et que le Congrés a terminé ses travaux. Et elle invite le vaillant doyen (1) Errico Malatesta à prononcer quelques paroles de clôture.

MALATESTA se lève et d'une voix pénétrante et forte, prononce le discours suivant :

Compagnons, notre Congrès est terminé. Les journaux bourgeois de toutes les couleurs avaient annoncé au monde que ce premier Congrès international se passerait dans le tumulte, le trouble et l'incohérence. Certains camarades eux-mêmes avaient prédit qu'il n'aboutirait logiquement qu'à jeter dans nos rangs un peu plus de discorde.

L'événement a démenti tous ces prophètes. Malgré l'insuffisance de préparation matérielle, imputable à notre seule pauvreté, malgré la difficulté qu'il y avait à s'entendre entre délégués de langue et d'origine si différentes, ce premier

(1) Bien qu'il u'eût que 53 ans au moment du Congrès Malatesta n'en était pas moins le doyen des congressistes !

Congrès a admirablement réussi. Il n'a pas seulement ruiné de fond en comble les espérances perfides de tous ses adversaires ; je puis dire qu'il a dépassé les plus optimistes espérances de ses partisans.

Loin de provoquer une scission dans le camp anarchiste, il a ouvert la voie qui mène à l'union féconde ; il a exhorté les compagnons qui luttaient isolément jusqu'ici, à se donner la main par-dessus les frontières pour marcher tous ensemble vers l'avenir anarchiste. Sans doute, des divergences de vues se sont manifestées entre nous ; elles n'affectaient pourtant que des points secondaires. Tous, nous nous sommes trouvés d'accord dans l'affirmation des principes essentiels.

Et pouvait-il en être autrement ? Ne voulons-nous pas tous, d'un même élan de tout notre être, la délivrance de l'humanité, la destruction complète du Capitalisme et de l'Etat, — la Révolution sociale ?

Notre premier Congrès portera ses fruits, si tous ceux qui sont ici, une fois rentrés dans leur pays, voient moins le travail accompli que celui qui reste à accomplir, si tous nous nous remettons à la propagande et à l'organisation avec plus que jamais de confiance et d'énergie. A l'œuvre, compagnons !

Une salve d'applaudissements accueille ces paroles vibrantes. L'enthousiasme est à son comble. La joie éclaire les visages. Alors un camarade entonne l'Internationale :

Debout ! les damnés de la terre !
Debout ! les forçats de la faim !

Tous accompagnent le chanteur. L'hymne révolutionnaire français a vraiment conquis l'universalité. Partout où des hommes, anarchistes ou socialistes, luttent contre l'iniquité sociale et rêvent de délivrance humaine, l'Internationale est devenue le refrain de guerre qui retentit sur les champs de grève, dans les meetings ou les congrès.

C'est fini. La salle se vide peu à peu. Les mains s'étreignent ; des adieux, des au-revoir plutôt, s'échengent, car si la plupart des congressistes ne quittent Amsterdam que dans la journée de demain, il en est qui doivent prendre les trains du soir et de la nuit.

A 9 heures, dans la grande salle du premier étage. du Plancius, a lieu le dernier meeting populaire. La salle est pleine de ce public remarquablement attentif et calme qu'est le public hollandais. Tour à tour Cornélissen, Broutchoux, Monatte, Ramus, Chapelier, Samson, Mougnitch, Sepp Oerter, Frauböse et Ludwig prennent la parole. Une même pensée se retrouve dans leurs discours à tous : c'est que le Congrés d'Amsterdam laissera dans le monde révolutionnaire une impression dureble et que l'anarchisme international en sortira grandi et fortifié.

APPENDICE

DEUX RÉUNIONS SYNDICALISTES

Sur les deux réunions strictement privées où se rencontrèrent les syndicalistes révolutionnaires venus au Congrès d'Amsterdam, nous trouvons quelques renseignements assez précis dans l'article suivant publié par LA VOIX DU PEUPLE, de Lausanne, (2e année, N° 40, 5 octobre 1907) sous ce titre :
Le Bureau International de Presse :

La nécessité d'une entente entre les groupements ouvriers dès maintenant acquis aux principes du syndicalisme révolutionnaire et aux méthodes de l'action directe, préoccupe en plus d'un pays plus d'un militant. — On sait que le Secrétariat international ouvrier, dont le siége est quelque part en Allemagne, s'est signalé jusqu'à ce jour bien plus par son antipathie déclarée à l'égard des idées révolutionnaires que par sa réelle activité pratique. Ses démêlés avec la Confédération générale du travail sont encore dans toutes les mémoires. Issus du refus du Secrétariat d'inscrire à l'ordre du jour des deux derniéres conférences des questions aussi considérables que celles de la gréve générale et de l'antimilitarisme, ces démêlés, firent au congrès d'Amiens, l'objet d'un débat retentissant, et l'on peut prévoir qu'ils aboutiront avant longtemps à quelque rupture éclatante dont la responsabilité incombera sans partage au Secrétariat international.

Cependant le syndicalisme révolutionnaire fait dans tous les pays des progrès incessants. Partout où il apparaît, on peut dire qu'un nouveau mouvement ouvrier commence, lequel n'a rien de commun avec l'ancien. Pourquoi donç

This crooked Lane became a Road,
Where many a poor horse, with his load,
Toiled on beneath the burning sun,
And traveled some three miles in one.
And thus a century and a half
They trod the footprints of that Calf.
The years passed on in swiftest fleet,
The Road became a village Street,
And this, before the men were 'ware,
A City's crowded thoroughfare,
And soon the central street was this
Of a renowned Metropolis.
And Men two centuries and a half
Trod in the footsteps of that Calf.
Each day a hundred thousand rout
Followed the zigzag Calf about.
And o'er his crooked journey went
The traffic of a continent.
A hundred thousand Men were led
By one Calf near three centuries dead.
They followed still his crooked way,
And lost one hundred years a day:
For thus such reverence is lent
To well established Precedent.

A moral lesson this must teach,
Were I ordained and called to preach.
For Men are prone to go it Blind
Along the Calf-paths of the Mind,
And work away from sun to sun,
And do what other men have done.
They follow in the beaten track,
And out and in, and in and back,
And still their devious course pursue,
To keep the path that others do.
But how the wise old wood-gods laugh,
Who saw that first primeval Calf!
And many things this tale might teach—
But I am not ordained to preach.

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

From pulpit and press, from millions of Christian hearts come the glad tidings, "Peace on earth, good will to all men!"

Can the human mind conceive of a more terrible taunt, a more horrible lie than this old Christian phrase?!

"Peace on earth!" cries the President, ordering the decks of his warships cleared for action.

"Peace on earth!" echo the Jingoes, demanding an increased army and navy.

"Good will to all men," unctiously proclaim the servants of the lowly Nazarene, while praying their governments to send soldiers to help "convert" the "heathen."

"Peace and good will," says the judge, as he pronounces the sentence of death.

"Thy will be done!" murmurs the steward of the Lord's bounty, as he raises the price of oil, coal and other necessaries of life.

"Good will to all men," greets you the landlord, ordering your eviction.

"Peace!" cries the employer, as he snatches the bread from the poor man's table.

"God is Love and His Law is Liberty," echo the guns trained upon starving strikers.

"Peace and good will!" jubiliantly announce the newspapers, dwelling upon the numerous murders, robberies, rapes and evictions of the preceding day.

"Peace on earth, good will to all men!" proclaims the Christian world, while thousands are dying of starvation, the cities crowded with the unemployed, the park benches lined with the homeless, the prisons overfilled. and "free" men, women and children are miserably perishing of hunger, cold and neglect.

Peace on earth!

The poor Nazarene could not have possibly foreseen the practical effects of his Sermon on the Mount: the capitalists have ever since been trying to feed the multitudes on three loaves of bread—with disastrous results. But how much longer is society going to permit them to carry on this terrible experiment? They have indeed wrought a great miracle: they have charmed mankind into the belief that life must mean poverty and misery for those that toil, and luxury for the idlers. "The poor ye have always with ye." What horrible consequenees this highly immoral injunction has had, what a vale of tears and sorrow it has made of a beautiful world! If "poor" and "idler" were synonymous, one might perhaps bow to the inevitable, if such it be. At least, one could understand and explain it. But are the poor really idlers, and are the idlers poor?

See yonder grand palaces, gems of beauty, art and luxury. They are filled with sunshine, joy and all the things with which the labor of the world blesses its creators. Therein dwell the men that mine coal out of the dark bowels of the earth, to supply mankind with light and warmth. And the men of the field and factory dwell there, who give us our food and all necessaries of life. And other men and women live in these palaces, all enjoying the riches they have helped to produce. There live the masons, bricklayers, carpenters and iron workers who have built these palaces; and the tailor and shoemaker live there, too; also the sailor who takes us safely across the seas; and the telegrapher, motorman and engineer, who literally bring the world together; and all those live there, in comfort, joy and peace, who bless humanity with its riches, wealth and splendor.

But look at yonder hovels, dark, miserable, joyless. See those starvelings, dillapitated and homeless men, women and children, with the misery-hunted look on their faces,—these are our Rockefellers, Morgans and Belmonts; the social idlers who will not labor and who add nothing to the producing power of the world. These idlers are justly punished: they do not sow, neither shall they reap.

The world is just and beautiful.

Even at its best, the fate of the workingman is a miserable eking out of a mere existence. The "iron law of wages"—a euphonious term for the conspiracy of employer, storekeeper and landlord—has ordained that the producer shall receive just enough pay to—keep on producing. And if by some happy chance—usually by systematic stomach-robbery—the workingman has succeeded in laying aside a few dollars for a rainy day, when that rainy day eomes, the poor man finds that his banker has "lived beyond his income," and that the "bank has closed its doors" for that or some other equally good reason.

Even in time of so-called prosperity the lot of the workingman is not to be envied. But during an industrial crisis, such as the present, for instanee, the eondition of the masses becomes unbearable. The number of unemployed is growing appallingly. In New York alone there are now a hundred thousand men out of work—and that means dire poverty, lack of the necessaries of life, cold firesides, starving women and children.

What shall be done? It is not a "mere Anarchist theory" that confronts us. We are facing hard, cruel facts. Where are our sage political economists? What solution can our learned professors suggest to relieve the terrible distress? What explanation can the apologists and defenders of our insane economic system offer? The crops have been unusually good. Why, then, do human beings starve in the midst of plenty? The warehouses and stores are chocked with clothing. Is it therefore that people must go about half-naked? There are plenty of houses and many vacant lots where homes could be built. Why, then, are thousands shelterless?

The fool sayeth in his heart, "There is no work." But life is sustained by the products of work, not by work in itself. And if those products and the opportunity to create them were not monopolized by the social idlers, we would have neither crises nor hard times.

Let hypocrites and their dupes talk about "inevitable dull times," "stringency of money," "lack of work" and similar rot. Their object is to befog the minds of the people and to stifle the cries of the hungry with lying phrases.

But you, workingmen of America, do not allow yourselves to be deceived. You do not want charity; nor will any makeshifts do. "Bad times" will recur again and again; delay will but intensify your agonies. Do not depend upon others for a solution of these problems. You are the greatest sufferer, the eternal victim. You are to be your own savior. The remedy lies in your own hands. You are the true owners of the wealth you yourselves have produced. It is yours by right of creation.

You need but demand back what has been stolen from you. Let your motto be: The land and the fulness thereof to the producer!

Little straws on the current of life show whither we are drifting.

Recently we read in the press dispatches that

"Charles Smith laughed at a Newark, N. J., policeman in a derisive manner Thursday night. For doing so he was fined $20 by Judge Herr in that city yesterday morning. The court said that mocking a policeman meant mockery of the established social system. Such action was immoral, he said, and therefore a fine with an alternative of sixty days in the penitentiary was imposed."

Paradoxical as it may sound, the judge was right; the more's the pity. He said that "mocking a policeman meant mockery of the established social system." Quite true. The policeman is the visible representative of that combination of brute force, arbitrariness and graft, known as the established social system.

The established social system! What a mockery in the very words. A system in which everything is "established" except justice and humanity; everything "systematized" into murder, chicanery and artificiality; everything "socialized" along the most anti-social lines.

Wars, pestilence, poverty; tyranny and oppression; cowardice and knavery—these are the triumphs of the established social system, whose chief exponent is the policeman with the big stick.

The Federal government has again been overcome by a spasm of "morality." A recent number of the Eugenics has been found—by some ignorant bureau clerk, no doubt—to contain "immoral and obscene" matter, in punishment of which the magazine may be deprived of its right to be carried in the mails as second-class matter.

The Federal government has long regarded our brave little contemporary, the Eugenics (formerly known as Lucifer), as a dangerous exposer of prudishness, sham and hypocricy in the relations of the sexes. Hence the persecution. But the pioneers of truth and liberty have ever had to suffer for their devotion to the cause. The gallows and prison have never yet conquered the aspirations of the human soul. The Federal government is waging a losing battle.

A sentence of two years in prison at hard labor and a fine of two thousand dollars was imposed by Judge William M. Lanning, in the United States District Court, upon Bernarr Macfadden, editor of the Physical Culture Magazine, for violation of the postal laws of the United States by sending "objectionable literature" through the mails.

The charge is based upon the contents of the serial story which began in the October, 1906, issue of the magazine; the story was entitled, "Growing to Manhood in Civilized (?) Society," and was designed to arouse the public conscience to the frightful immorality of accepted moral standards.

There is no crime which governments punish with greater severity than the espousal of an unpopular cause, looking toward the enlightenment of benighted humanity.

The case of Bernarr Macfadden has been carried to the Supreme Court of the United States. Foreseeing, however, probable defeat, the friends of Macfadden are now circulating a petition for his "pardon." Those wishing to sign it, are requested to communicate with Bernarr Macfadden, Flatiron Building, New York City.

The capitalists of Nevada—aided by the ever servile State and Federal authorities—have tried all means at hand to provoke a condition of affairs at the Goldfield mines which might serve as a pretext for the wholesale slaughter of the strikers. Having failed in their purpose, in spite of the regulars which the White House Tsar so obligingly sent to aid the exploiters, the cabal of law and capital is now planning to obtain a Federal injunction, ostensibly to prevent picketing, but in reality to bring about the dissolution of the Goldfield Miners' Union.

C. E. Mahoney, vice-president of the Western Federation of Miners, is reported to have expressed himself as follows:

"An injunction of this kind, if issued, will mean that there is nothing left for the miners to do but to go and jump in the sea. Any judge and set of men who fancy that the Goldfield miners will tamely submit to this procedure are greatly mistaken. I would favor ignoring any such order from any court in existence. Injunctions have come to be a mere joke to the American people, and this one would be the biggest joke of all. We shall fight it with every weapon at our disposal. There would be nothing else for us to do."

Quite right. There is nothing for labor to do, but to fight for its emancipation from the thraldom of State and capital. Only those who are willing to fight for liberty deserve it. Only those have it who conquer it.

Lieb' Vaterland, magst ruhig sein—Chancellor Day has spoken. Without any previous notice the learned gentleman of Syracuse University overwhelmed an unsuspecting public with the discovery that "the rich make it possible for the laboring man to earn a livelihood."

'Tis more than a discovery, Chancellor. 'Tis an invention; and by no means recent; in fact, a hoary old lie. Suppose, Chancellor, that you and the rich were to emigrate to Hades. Would then the bakers of your city quit making bread? Why, I trow they'd even bake cake to celebrate the event.

But we understand you, Ananias. Your fling at labor, Anarchy and Emma Goldman, and your glorification of the rich—we understand them all, old prostitute: 'tis the flunkey's bid for the Oil King's New Year's tip.

Two noble veterans of the Russian Revolution have fallen into the clutches of the bloody Bear—Nicholas Tchaykovsky and Katherine Breshkovskaya.

They are dangerous, undesirable citizens. Dangerous to all tyranny and oppression; undesirable because they love liberty, aye, with an enthusiasm and zeal which know no limit. They have devoted their lives to the cause of the people; they have sacrificed wealth, position, even their own liberty to aid Russia achieve freedom. Long, weary years they have passed in prison and exile, only to prove that the fires of liberty cannot be extinguished even by the snows of Siberia. Again these brave martyrs returned to Russia, ever responsive to the call of humanity. They feared neither prison, nor probable sentence of death. Russia needed them, and they came.

Would the world had more of this spirit, more of these noble, self-sacrificing idealists. Though misunderstood, persecuted and condemned, the future is theirs. That is their highest reward.

Our friend and comrade John R. Coryell, well known to all readers of MOTHER EARTH by his able contributions to our magazine, is the editor of a new monthly, The Wide Way.

THE NEW GOSPEL

AS of yore, church bells and organs are again announcing the glad tidings of the birth of the Son of God, who had come on earth to redeem mankind.

Yet, while the legend of redemption is being repeated, thousands of hungry and shelterless beings are tramping the cities and towns in search of work.

They cannot but question the truth of those tidings that have brought them naught but misery and despair, and that have closed all opportunities for the many, yet lavishly bestowing upon the few.

The story proclaimed from church and steeple during two thousand years has served bigoted priests to weave a net of lies wherewith they have caught human souls, while human bodies were allowed to perish.

But the time has come when large numbers of people are beginning to realize that the Nazarene, whom they are called upon to worship as the Son of God, himself was slain by the powers of wealth and authority, even as those are made to die who dare to cry out against the thieves and Pharisees of modern times.

Christ thundered against the rich and took his place with the poor. It was to the oppressed and degraded slaves he carried the gospel of hope, of justice, of liberation. No wonder "the poor heareth him gladly."

He died the champion of a new social conception, and many of his disciples, since canonized, had continued to wage war against wealth and property.

tions to acting with the Federation along the points stated. Comrades, there are probably various questions of principle and tactics upon which different opinions prevail. But on the other hand there are certain issues upon which all can join, and it is these we lay before you for your discussion and final action.

The burning questions of the day offer us a wide field of action. Let us not remain standing passively aside. Let us rather immediately enter the arena.

The Federation has already initiated its activity by organizing monster mass meetings of the unemployed. Its immediate program further contains the organization of a series of lectures to popularize Anarchism. Also the immediate publication, in English and Jewish, of a pamphlet on the Crisis, to be spread in hundreds of thousands all over the country.

We call the attention of groups and comrades to the necessity of immediate action with regard to the proposed pamphlet, which is already written and set. The question of joining the Federation the groups can decide only after some discussion. That will necessarily require time. But the question of the pamphlet must be decided upon at once, and we call upon all comrades and groups to notify us without unnecessary delay as to the number of pamphlets they desire, and to what extent they can contribute to help defray the expenses of publication.

What energy and zeal can accomplish has been shown during my tour in the textile districts, where a few devoted comrades had arranged all my meetings. The Emma Goldman Papers

Our Propaganda / Emma Goldman. — pp. 579-581 ; 20 cm. In Mother Earth. — Vol. 2, no. 12 (Feb. 1908).

Obtained from the University of California, Berkeley. Institutional Location: Doe Library.

As I have said, I do not think it matters much whether one enters into a conventional marriage or an unconventional one under the name of free union, so that one preserve his freedom; but I am willig to go on record as saying that any calling of public attention to sex union is either a concession to prurient curiosty or the slavish following of a custom. I know a young woman who is a mother without being a wife. No one knows who the father of the child is. She says it is no one's affair. She lives alone with her child, having given her body into the keeping of neither husband nor lover, prepared to maintain full control of herself and to say when, if ever, she will become a mother again. That young woman I honor and applaud.

So my conclusion is that it is difficult, if not impossible, to be free in either marriage or free union, and that, therefore, I think there should be found a better way than either; for to me freedom is the paramount consideration. That is to say I want to be myself, and just as passionately I want the woman I love to be herself. One can be himself only in freedom.

And as the last word, now, I want to say and to ask you to believe that I mean all that is implied in the words: a woman can be a mother in freedom; she cannot be a wife in freedom.

OUR PROPAGANDA

My tour through the State of New York was as successful as could be expected at the present time of industrial misery, when thousands of people are out of work.

The meetings at Utica, a Catholic city and one of the most backward in the State, were very poorly attended; still, some good was accomplished, inasmuch as the newspapers brought good reports. Especially was this true with regard to my paper on "What Anarchism Really Stands For." The Utica Daily Press published an almost stenographic report of the greater part of the lecture.

At Syracuse the meetings were well attended, in spite of a terrific snowstorm. As the comrades were anxious to hear an oral report of the Amsterdam Congress, a group meeting was decided upon after my second lecture, and all Anarchists and their sympathizers were invited to attend. About thirty people gathered at a comrade's house. While I was making my report, a knock was heard at the door and three brutish-looking men entered. They proved to be two detectives and a reporter, who came to break up the "secret" session of the Anarchists. They were informed that they had no legal right (not to speak of decency, which has never been characteristic of detectives) to enter a private residence so late at night, and that they would have to leave at once. After threatening to arrest me and freely using coarse language, they backed out. This is another example of our glorious freedom, where every detective assumes the right to invade and annoy people in their own homes.

The comrades all expressed themselves in favor of the International, contributing to the latter five dollars and eighty cents.

Rochester, my "native" city, turned out very good audiences, especially to the lectures on "The Revolutionary Spirit in the Modern Drama" and "Woman Under Anarchism." It is not so very long ago that an Anarchist could not be found in Rochester with a searchlight. Now a large group of young people is doing active work, and many Anarchists, though not affiliated with the group, are spreading our ideas in an effective manner.

At Albany, the centre of political corruption and graft, two good meetings and a social were held. At the latter five dollars were collected for the International.

Schenectady gave the largest American audience and a very enthusiastic one at that. I spoke on "Syndicalism —a New Phase in the Labor Movement," which was listened to with great interest and appreciation. The success of the Schenectady meeting was entirely due to the efforts of one man, comrade Schneider, who worked persistently and faithfully, in spite of many discouragements and obstacles. An obscure little body, The Workers' Circle of Schenectady, felt called upon to notify the press and the city fathers that "it had nothing to do with the Emma Goldman meetings." No wonder that wage slavery continues to exist, when the workers are such lickspittles.

After the meeting the Social Educational Club was organized, which will continue the work of Anarchist propaganda.

That the comrades of the State of New York mean to continue the work systematically is best proved by their decision to arrange a series of meetings for our friend John R. Coryell, who is to lecture in Syracuse February 23rd; in Rochester on the 24th and 25th; in Buffalo on the 26th, and in Schenectady on the 27th.

I was booked to speak in Philadelphia January 24th and 25th. But a severe cold prevented my going. Comrade Alexander Berkman went in my stead and addressed a large audience.

Though still indisposed, I went to Baltimore January 26th, where I spoke before the largest audience I have had in the East for some time. More than a thousand persons packed the hall, while hundreds had to be turned away. The audience as well as the comrades were very kind and forbearing with me, as my throat was bad and my speech still worse.

Monday, January 26th, I lectured in Pittsburg, the city where thousands of working people are yearly sacrificed to the Moloch of capitalism, the worst grinding mill being the Westinghouse. In this city it was also a solitary comrade, H. Kraemer, who arranged my meeting single handed and at his own expense, and it was very successful indeed.

I shall start my tramp westward via Canada, my schedule being as follows:

Montreal, February 14th and 15th, at San Joseph's Hall, 182 Catherine St. (Lecture in German.)

Montreal, February 16th, at the Labor Temple, 123 San Dominic St. (English lecture.)

Toronto, February 17th, at 214 Adelaide St. (English.)

Toronto, February 18th, at the same hall. (German.)

London, February 19th and 20th, at Cullis Hall, 259 Wellington St. (Both lectures in English.)

Cleveland, February 21st and 22nd, at 5217 Woodland Ave. (German lectures.)

Cleveland, February 23rd, at Pythian Temple, cor. Prospect Ave. and Huron Rd. (English lecture.)

Toledo, February 24th, 25th and 26th.

St. Louis, February 28th, 29th and March 1st.

Springfield, March 2nd and 3rd.

Chicago, March 5th till 19th.

Milwaukee, Minneapolis, New Ulm and Winnipeg will keep me engaged till the 6th of April. After that I shall go to Omaha, Denver and the Coast.

Much as I dislike to repeat that I expect the proceeds of my lectures to be devoted to MOTHER EARTH, I must do so to avoid misunderstanding, since one has already occurred with a certain group. I tour for MOTHER EARTH exclusively. If some important matter should arise which will require financial aid, I expect the comrades to consult with me; otherwise I desire the proceeds to go to MOTHER EARTH, which cannot exist without it.

Emma Goldman On Trades Unions

Declares Anarchy Is the Ideal State

Addressed a Small Audience in Cullis Hall Last Night.

Emma Goldman, the notorious woman anarchist, held forth last night in Cullis Hall, to an audience of about a hundred people, the majority of whom were of foreign origin.

Miss Goldman was neatly dressed in a dark gown, cut Empire style, with low neck, which showed a powerful, muscle-lined throat to the full extent as it worked with the efforts she made to convey her views to the audience.

Her voice is like that of a man, strong and penetrating, while her language is generally excellent English, except at times, when she becomes excited, and relapses unconsciously into the guttural tones of Russian or German.

Famous, Indeed.

Many of the audience attended out of mere curiosity to see the woman who was accused of having instigated Leon Czolgosz to the atrocious assassination of President McKinley at the Pan-American Exhibition in 1901. Miss Goldman has the unique distinction also of having been under police surveillance more than any other woman in America. It is said that she is shadowed continually. She espoused, though without the formality of marriage, the man who tried to assassinate Frick, of the Carnegie Steel Company.

Needed No Chairman.

At the outset Miss Goldman declared she needed no chairman to introduce her, and stated that she had no bombs concealed about her.

Coming to trade unionism, the relation of which to anarchism was the subject of her lecture, she said that it was to be regretted that the average trade unionist knew nothing of the objects of the association to which he belonged.

...haps the richest and most conservative in the world.

They need to learn that a large treasury is not power.

What is needed is men, men of every class, who can be directed into one general movement, and used as a single unit.

Are They Disinterested?

At present unions are most disunited and the aim seems to be not to help each other.

Manhood, courage and integrity were never more needed in unions than they are today.

France is nearer to the ideal of unionism than any other country.

There the unions unite to form one great union, and this plan is the only effective one against capital.

In America, however, trade unionism has gone back on all its fundamental principles.

Nothing they had ever attempted has been carried out.

The courts, the tool of the capitalist, she said, declare that everything the labor unions obtain is unconstitutional.

Thus the supreme court of the United States declared the eight-hour day, and the child labor bill unconstitutional. When men try to resist the enroachments of capital the militia, another tool of capital, is called to shoot them down.

Trade unions have developed into mere insurance or benefit organizations. The lecturer ridiculed the idea of labor unions giving notice that they were about to strike, as it gave the capitalist time to bring in scabs.

Anarchy.

Anarchism was, in Miss Goldman's opinion, the remedy for all the evils of the time.

Direct action and a general strike are the most effective means of accomplishing the end desired, as the courts, the militia, the church, were the bitterest enemies of the working classes. The object of anarchism was to rid the people of Government, of soldiers, of priests, and of religion, and by destroying all these useless and ...

Coming to trade unionism, the relation of which to anarchism was the subject of her lecture, she said that it was to be regretted that the average trade unionist knew nothing of the objects of the association to which he belonged.

He knows still less of anarchism, which he regards with horror.

Both had their origin in unsatisfactory economic conditions.

Josiah Stevens introduced unionism into America first.

The average union man looked upon the union as a means solely of raising his wages and giving him a more effective means of combating capital.

He does not enter as into a training school with the object of becoming better, but often from compulsion, and generally with the idea of causing trouble some time or other.

Alleged False Friends.

Mark Hanna, Bishop Potter and John Mitchell, who were posing as the friends of the workingman, are really his worst enemies.

The one aim of these men is to secure arbitration.

All arbitrations between labor and capital had in the past proven disastrous to the worker, and were so dangerous that the advanced labor organizer of today resolutely refuses to enter into them any more.

The English trade unions are perFrance is nearer to the ideal of unionism than any other country.

The object of anarchism was to rid the people of Government, of soldiers, of priests, and of religion, and by destroying all these useless and unprogressive institutions, make a beautiful harmonious union of all men for common ends in the parts best suited to them.

Socialism and Anarchism.

Replying to a question asked from the audience as to what the distinctions between socialism and anarchism were, Miss Goldman explained, that socialism recognized government institutions, while anrchy did not.

She was then asked the difference between an ideal and practical socialist, and said that an ideal socialist was an anarchist, as he did not believe in institutions as the practical socialist did.

Asked why the church was against socialism, Miss Goldman said the church was opposed to everything progressive, and appealed to and had its hold upon the masses of ignorant people.

Educated persons did not believe half of what the church required them to believe.

Miss Goldman lectures again tonight on "The Revolutionary Spirit and the Modern Drama."

FAMOUS ANARCHIST DELIVERS LECTURE

Large Number Hear Emma Goldman, of International Renown, at Cullis Hall

Just as Madame Calve was the event of the season to the musically inclined, so was Emma Goldman the event of the season to the anarchistically inclined, when she appeared at Cullis' Hall last night in an address on "Trade Unionism," which was closely listened to by an audience of about 200 people. Miss Goldman lectured under the auspices of the Self Educational Club, and it was her first appearance in London.

She is probably the foremost woman anarchist in the world. At the time of the death of President McKinley, when Leon Czolgosz was arrested in September, 1901, the police held her on suspicion that she had urged Czolgosz to the deed. There was no evidence against her and she was released.

Short in stature, Emma Goldman is nevertheless a person of stage presence. She wears a plain black dress, low at the neck, lacking in ornament save for a small gold pin of peculiar design at her throat.

Manner of Speech.

She talks quickly and with some ardor, but has few mannerisms or gestures. Her attitude is one of close concentration, and her manner is not automatic. She appears to be fired with the spirit.

"Those of you who came here out of curiosity," she began, "no doubt expected to see daggers, bombs and dynamite. You will be disappointed. I speak to-night on 'Trade Unionism, Its Purpose and Aims.'"

The majority of trade unionists did not understand the meaning and purpose of trade unionism, she said. Its principle should be that of a helpmeet to those who toil without receiving. It was dangerous to authority and it was a weapon in the hands of the people if properly used.

But the trade unionist held the belief that the principal thing was a fair day's work for a fair day's pay. So long as the unionist was willing to sell himself and have a master over him there would be no talk of a fair day's work or a fair day's pay.

The general opinion was that trade unionism was a sort of insurance. The union man prided himself that he was an orderly, law-abiding person. The very laws he lived under were forces that made independence impossible, as long as others robbed him of the fruits of his labor. Consistent trade unionists were persecuted as dangerous classes in society.

Union Compulsion.

"The average trade unionist joins a union through compulsion," declared Miss Goldman. "Economic necessity compels him. In rambling with his fellows. He joins, not out of principle, but out of compulsion. His desire is to wrench from

"Anarchism is opposed to the wishy-washy trade unionism, but not to trade unionism of a progressive nature," Miss Goldman went on calmly. She brought "progressive" out strongly, and it made an effect, for there was more applause.

"Some think anarchism stands for destruction," she continued. "People take the ordinary newspaper conception of anarchy that it propagates the destruction of society. Anarchy only stands for destruction of the institutions that have kept our race in bondage for years. It stands for the institutions of the finest traits, the noblest inspirations, the deepest love of your fellows. It cries aloud for the destruction of that two-headed monster—Government and capitalization.

The Government assists capitalization, and we anarchists have declared a relentless war on them both. The anarchists appeals to the human mind to come out of the darkness of the past ages and its superstitions.

Claims Laws Increase Crime

"Your laws have increased crime, not decreased them. It is not in keeping with human nature to have man-made laws.

"If a man does not work I do not blame him. All that was noble and fine and original has been destroyed in him. He is an automatic nonentity. Let him choose the truth. Only then can he create. If any commodity requires human life, surely we can do without that commodity. Society must be for man, not man for society," and with a simple "I thank you" Emma Goldman concluded probably the most remarkable lecture ever delivered by a woman in London.

She offered the literature of anarchism following the lecture.

She will again be heard this evening in Cullis' hall. Her topic will concern "Anarchism."

Union Compulsion.

"The average trade unionist joins a union through compulsion," declared Miss Goldman. "Economic necessity compels him, to combine with his fellows. He joins, not out of principle, but out of compulsion. His desire is to wrench from the powers whatever he can gain. He hears of the relationship of capital and labor. He is told they are twin brothers. But it is a case of Big Brother Capitalist pulling the hair out of Weak Sister, Labor until there is nothing left in her head. 'This is because he loves her.' (Laughter).

Continuing her criticism of trade unionism, she referred to the financial arbitration meetings between representatives of capital and labor—over champagne and good cigars. 'The Gompers and the Mitchell's were living off the sweat and toil of thousands and millions. (Applause).

"Take your grievances to the judges," she exclaimed, "and your mission will be as futile. You have been emancipated from slavery, been made free to starve, free to die, free to sell yourselves. Capital is like a highway robber; and a highway robber would take your life. It does take your life because if you have not the means of subsistence you have not life."

The contract system between employer and employe was described as one of the greatest evils. There was no hope for the latter. If he went to court it was like "taking the devil into his grandmother's court."

Trade unionism struck at times, it was true, but never before it had given capital warning and allowed "blacklegs and scabs" to be brought in. When a lockout was declared because of hard times or any other cause, did capital warn labor?

Miss Goldman had never heard of such an instance. The workingman was thrown out into the streets "like a pressed-out lemon," when the employer desired. In slavery days the slave-owner was compelled to take care of his slaves as he would his horse, but the unionist only had to do with capital so long as he worked.

Must Prepare for Fight

"The professional fighter must prepare for the fight," said the famous exponent of the "red" doctrines. "The trade unionist is in the economic arena, where the gladiator must prepare to meet the foe. If he does not prepare for the foe he must go to the floor and be the laughing stock of all. Trade unionism must therefore be the training school for the struggle to come. You are fighting for life, for your children, for everything worth while."

The hoarding of money in their treasuries by unions was strenuously condemned by the speaker. High initiation fees kept many men out of the unions, and the presence of wealth produced an aristocracy more snobbish than that of the wealthy classes. They took no interest in the unemployed. They hadn't even discussed them. They were indifferent to the needs of these outcasts, not caring whether they died or starved. (Applause).

"Only when the people are aroused to their condition will they come to their integrity, courage, manhood and aggressiveness," the speaker exhorted. "Then all the militia, laws and soldiers cannot compete with you. Freedom will be the greatest weapon in the struggle for progress and advancement."

Trade Unionism and Labor

Miss Goldman Addresses Large Audience in Forester's Hall

Must Prepare for Fight

An Intelligent Argument

"Trade unionism has been a failure, and will be a failure, and has not life."

The contract system between employer and employe was described as one of the greatest evils. There was no hope for the latter. If he went to court it was like "taking the devil into his grandmother's court."

Trade unionism struck at times. It was true, but never before it had given capital warning and allowed "blacklegs and scabs" to be brought in. When a lockout was declared because of hard times or any other cause, did capital warn labor?

Miss Goldman had never heard of such an instance. The workingman was thrown out into the streets "like a pressed-out lemon," when the employer desired. In slavery days the slave-owner was compelled to take care of his slaves as he would his horse, but the unionist only had to do with capital so long as he worked.

Must Prepare for Fight

"The professional fighter must prepare for the fight," said the famous exponent of the "red" doctrines. "The trade unionist is in the economic arena, where the gladiator must prepare to meet the foe. If he does not prepare for the foe he must go to the floor and be the laughing stock of all. Trade unionism must therefore be the training school for the struggle to come. You are fighting for life, for your children, for everything worth while."

The hoarding of money in their treasuries by unions was strenuously condemned by the speaker. High initiation fees kept many men out of the unions, and the presence of wealth produced an aristocracy more snobbish than that of the wealthy classes. They took no interest in the unemployed. They hadn't even discussed them. They were indifferent to the needs of these outcasts, not caring whether they died or starved. (Applause).

"Only when the people are aroused to their condition will they come to their integrity, courage, manhood and aggressiveness," the speaker exhorted. "Then all the militia, laws and soldiers cannot compete with you. Freedom will be the greatest weapon in the struggle for progress and advancement."

At mention of the Industrial Workers of the World there was burst of applause from the band of hearers. Miss Goldman saw in their coming into existence the rescue of labor out of the present capitalistic pasture—out of the present conception that there was harmony.

An Intelligent Argument

"The moment our trade unionist realizes that he has power in his hands, muscles and intelligence, from that moment they may use their armies and troops without avail. They cannot compete with productive capacity, for soldiers and officers are human beings and must depend upon the producer. When you refuse to work for the parasites who are shooting you down, the soldiers will need you, not you the soldiers. They think the industrial workers a danger to society because they will not compromise. They are willing to fight or die for the truth. Everyone willing to die for the truth is a danger to society. Force must be reckoned with. They keep these troops ostensibly for the purpose of defending the people. They are kept to take arms against the internal enemy. Anti-militarism should be advocated. This legalized murder must be stopped. Trade unionists must FIGHT.

EMMA GOLDMAN HELD FORTH AGAIN

Aired Her Views in Cullis' Hall —Spoke of the Drama and Revolution.

The lecture by Emma Goldman on "The Revolutionary Spirit in the Modern Drama" in Cullis' Hall last night proved to be, as she herself expressed it to her audience, "the first time that certain views on certain subjects had been presented to them in such a free and unconventional form in this city." The hall was well filled.

Commencing with Tolstoi and his works, she spoke particularly of the "Dominion of Darkness," and the people were described in it—people whom, she said, were poor and ignorant, and committed crime, not because they were bad, but because they believed they were doing right in trying to overthrow the church, "which for more than 2,000 years has proven the greatest hindrance to progress that it was possible to have."

The Jewish Question.

The solution of the individual is the salvation of the race, and the Jewish question will not be solved in Russia until capital is abolished.

"Ibsen," said Miss Goldman, "has given the world more social dynamite than any other writer in the 2,000 years."

Ibsen's fight was against the erroneous social conditions of the time. "The Doll's House," expressing her belief that there was nothing else for her to do.

If more women would "find" themselves they would make for the general good.

Motherhood, she holds is not composed solely of being the mother of a child, but in the capacity to treat with the mothering instinct a child that is no blood relation. Miss Goldman spoke briefly of the works of Hauptmann, the German dramatist.

Touching on the American drama, she said there was none, because the capitalists were too busy making money out of human life.

Bernard Shaw's drama, "Mrs. Warren's Profession," was freely discussed and favorably commented upon.

A Question.

Miss Goldman was asked if she considered Jesus Christ an anarchist.

"In some ways, yes," she replied. "I do not for a moment regard him as a supernatural being. He taught us nothing that had not been taught before. Christ propagated truth and would be crucified right here in London today if he came here and tried to propagate similar ideas.

"Your so-called Christians worship him on Sunday and commit all sorts of crimes every other day.

"Why I tell you that if Christ were here today he would be ashamed of having died for people who have made such a botch job of his teachings."

"How would morality be protected without law, as advocated by anarchists?" someone asked.

Morality Not Protected.

"Your morality is not protected now, with all your laws," she replied. "Human life was never held as cheaply as it is today, and under the present system we have all kinds of crime. The

The Jewish Question.

The solution of the individual is the solution of the race, and the Jewish question will not be solved in Russia until capital is abolished.

"Ibsen," said Miss Goldman, "has given the world more social dynamite than any other writer in the 2,000 years."

Ibsen's fight was against the erroneous social conditions of the time.

"The Doll's House," the greatest of his works, was the story of the awakening of a rebellious woman. Ibsen is the father of the idea of the emancipation of woman.

All efforts to emancipate women, Miss Goldman holds, have not gone deep enough.

Women must be free to take their places side by side with men.

They are not merely complementary to men. Women and men are complementary to each other.

Through the ages women have been on their knees to men.

Woman's Attitude.

Their gods have changed, but their attitude never has.

Either they have bowed to the church, the state, the race, or popular opinion, but always they have worshiped something.

Women must learn to stand on their feet.

They must think for themselves.

As a case in point, Miss Goldman do not for a moment regard him as a supernatural being. He taught us nothing that had not been taught before. Christ propagated truth and would be crucified right here in London today if he came here and tried to propagate similar ideas.

"Your so-called Christians worship him on Sunday and commit all sorts of crimes every other day.

"Why I tell you that if Christ were here today, he would be ashamed of having died for people who have made such a botch job of his teachings."

"How would morality be protected without law, as advocated by anarchists?" someone asked.

Morality Not Protected.

"Your morality is not protected now, with all your laws," she replied. "Human life was never held as cheaply as it is today, and under the present system we have all kinds of crime. The law does not mean what it says.

"It merely tells you how to steal.

"If you steal a loaf of bread you are a thief, but of you steal millions you are a captain of industry with a pew in the church.

"If a man kills a dozen men in war, shoots them down in cold blood, he is a hero, but if he does it any other way, he is a murderer.

"You can have no true morality under a system of that kind, based on iniquity pure and simple.

Alleged Real Morality.

"Real morality is a growth of intellectual application—not booklearning, for there are plenty of professors who know less about life and its problems than many a street sweeper.

"A real education does not mean book-learning, but a knowledge of one's self and our relationship and duty to our fellow men.

"The only college in which to learn this thoroughly is life itself.

"A free society will develop its own morality and needs, no law for its protection.

"The morality of savages is far superior to ours of today.

"They have no prisons and jails, because they do not need them, and that they are happier and better no one can question.

Anarchist Doctrine.

"Every individual should be free, government by force non-existent.

"The duty of the individual is first of all to himself and in being true to himself he will be true to others."

Miss Goldman stated to The Advertiser that her trip through Canada had been most successful, and that, although she was leaving for Cleveland in the morning in a day or two she was going to Winnipeg.

ANARCHIST LOOKS ON DARKER SIDE

Ideas Born of Misbegotten Genius Crowd Lecture of Female Agitator

Most emphatic in speech, clever and having the ability to move an audience to the wildest pitch of excitement and then to relieve the tension with laughter; and above all possessed with and governed by a spirit that is nothing short of fanaticism, such is Emma Goldman, who addressed a meeting in Cullis' Hall last night.

She is regarded by the Government of Europe as one of the most dangerous individuals now endeavoring to propagate the spirit of anarchy.

A Russian Jewess by birth, the lecturer speaks with a decidedly foreign accent, which at first makes it a little difficult for the audience to follow her remarks. She speaks with great emphasis, putting her remarks in such a way that her audience, whether they agree with her or not, could not fail to be impressed.

Last night Emma Goldman made several remarks that undoubtedly came as rather a shock to those present, for they bordered on and often crossed the line which separates the sacred from the profane. Her turn of expressions, however, evidently took away from the shock which these statements would otherwise have produced, and throughout the evening she apparently curried her audience with her.

A Declared Anarchist

A declared anarchist herself, Miss Goldman made many statements filled with the anarchistic spirit last night. She is a free thinker, and dealt with subjects usually avoided in public gatherings in the most open manner. Perhaps this very openness purged them of much offence.

Looks at Darker Side

In the address of last evening the lecturer took up the revolutionary influences of the modern drama, using the subject to bring out many of her own revolutionary ideas, for, although all that was drawn from the plays mentioned was undoubtedly true, yet it was not life, for it was in many cases but half the truth, the sweeter side of life suggested in the plays being left unconsidered, while all that was base and altogether unlovely was held up to the radiance of her hearers.

At times the lecture became a veritable call to arms. "Some say the Jewish people can't fight," said the speaker, "The Jewish people are going to fight, and will continue to fight until they are as free as the rest of the world."

"Ibsen, more than any other man, has portrayed the spirit of revolution," asserted Miss Goldman.

"In 'The Doll's House' this spirit is shown in connection with the development of woman. The revolutionary spirit

Methodist Plan Ten-year Mission Campaign in East

Associated Press Despatch.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—A ten-year plan of missionary work on an increasing scale in foreign fields, especially in the Orient, was mapped out here to-day at the session of the Methodist Mission Reform Church in America.

It is planned by the terms of the resolution which the board adopted to increase the missionary appropriation by $30,000 each year for ten years, so as to raise it from $124,000 in 1908 to $424,000 in 1918. Particular attention will be given the mission fields at Amoy, China and Arcot, India, and those of Japan.

MEET TO-MORROW

Annual Session of East Middlesex Conservatives at Central Committee Rooms

The adjourned annual meeting of the East Middlesex Conservative Association will be held to-morrow afternoon at 1.30 o'clock at the Conservative Club in the Bennett Theatre Buildings. The annual election of officers will take place, and the date will be set for convention to select candidates for both the Dominion [illegible] that was drawn from the plays mentioned was undoubtedly true, yet it was not life, for it was in many cases but half the truth, the sweeter side of life suggested in the plays being left unconsidered, while all that was base and altogether unlovely was held up to the ridicule of her hearers.

At times the lecture became a veritable call to arms. "Some say the Jewish people can't fight," said the speaker. "The Jewish people are going to fight, and will continue to fight until they are as free as the rest of the world."

"Ibsen, more than any other man, has portrayed the spirit of revolution," asserted Miss Goldman.

"In 'The Doll's House' this spirit is shown in connection with the development of woman. The revolutionary spirit demands of woman not only political, but freedom in all departments. It is necessary for the women to become free if the race is to be free."

"The play is true," said the lecturer, "if read properly, not with the head of a minister or of an old granny."

"Ghosts," another of Ibsen's famous plays, was dealt with. According to Emma Goldman the spirit of this play is that sacrifice is useless, which is the opposite to Christianity, for Christianity is based upon sacrifice.

"Give unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's," quoted the lecturer. "You can give to Caesar and God, for Caesar and God have lived together all through life."

The story of "The Enemies of Society" was told with all Miss Goldman's powers of description. Dr. Stockman's unceasing effort to get what he knew to be a harmful force publicly recognized as such was shown.

"Is it true that it is useless to go against a wall head-on, as Dr. Stockman did," asked the lecturer. "If you have accomplished anything at all you owe it to such men who have made the wall fall."

Talks on Shaw's Plays

Bernard Shaw's plays, too, were dealt with and his habit of treating society without gloves exemplified.

"The spirit of revolution has come to stay," concluded the speaker. "It has permeated every mind, and will not keep silent until you have smashed the institutions of hypocrisy and lies, and stand true."

At the conclusion of the regular speech questions were asked for, and the interest taken in these showed how close had been the attention of the audience, though it was evident that many were not willing to go either so fast or so far as Emma Goldman would have wished.

A Pointed Question

"Would you regard Jesus of Nazareth as an anarchist?" one asked.

"To some extent, yes," came the answer. "I do not regard Him as a supernatural being—that is only good for the foolish-minded. Christ taught nothing new. He propagated a truth contrary to the conditions of the times, and so was crucified. Precisely the same thing would happen if He came to London today. Every period has its Christ who sacrifices all for an ideal. Of one thing I am sure. If Christ came to earth today He would be ashamed to have died for a people who have made such a botch job of His idea."

Such remarks as this last were dispersed throughout the lecture. Nothing was too sacred to be held up to ridicule and everything, including people and press, was made the subject of a laugh.

High Priestess of Anarchy Says Labor Organizations Are Becoming Greedy.

CREECY IS AFTER HER

Chief Will Not Let Her Speak, Saying She Is a "Trouble-Maker."

Emma Goldman, high priestess of anarchy, termed by her followers "the Louise Michel of America," who would reform everything by overthrowing everything now in existence, is in St. Louis to deliver a series of four lectures, commencing Friday night.

She was met by a committee of St. Louis anarchists at Union Station Friday morning and escorted to 3331 Franklin avenue, where she will stay while here.

Chief of Police Creecy told a Post-Dispatch reporter Friday afternoon that he would not permit Miss Goldman to deliver an address here. At the moment he was reading an account of the attempt to assassinate the Shah of Persia, in which three persons were killed, and pointing to it he said, "That's the sort of thing she stirs up—certainly she can't speak here."

The Chicago authorities have announced that if she returns there they will have her deported as an undesirable immigrant. She has recently been in Russia.

When not speaking or lecturing, Miss Goldman will be holding receptions, her St. Louis adherents expecting her not only to gain new recruits for the cause, but to start a boom for the party of the red flag.

Miss Goldman received a Post-Dispatch reporter in a small, chilly apartment, where several of her admirers had gathered.

Always Glad to Talk.

"I am always glad to talk to the public," she said. "You know the anarchists are the most maligned and misrepresented persons in the world.

"My first lecture will deal with the subject of anarchism in its relations to trade unionism.

"Trade unionism is an economic weapon which labor can use to crush its enemy, capital and trade unions are the training schools for the use of this weapon.

"Labor unions are injuring themselves in an effort to establish large treasuries. To do this they raise initiation fees and in this way prevent persons who will not pay the large fees from joining."

Assails the Churches.

Emma Goldman glories in her anarchy, and is eloquent in her denunciations of society. She assails in particular the monopolies and the churches.

The churches, she declares, are enslaving the masses of the American people.

answered the demand in the letter for $500.

"Bring the money yourself Feb. 18 or send your brother Peter," the letter, translated from the Sicilian, reads; "If you give us the money we promise you under oath that we will not harm you. If you are afraid to be there, make Filippe or Peter bring it. We do not permit two to come.

"Get on a Broadway car at 8 p. m. at Biddle street, with a birdcage in one hand and a large envelope in the other, with the money in it. Get off the car at 3700 and walk north.

Domitick Lamenia, a grocer at 704 Biddle street, was taken into the cell to face the prisoner before the latter was released. He gave Cipriano $200 three months ago. Cipriano fastened sharp black eyes on the grocer, and Lamenia declared trembling, that the money was just a loan.

When the front of Viviano's shop was wrecked Feb. 8 he declared that he had received no Black Hand letters, and that he could not account for the explosion. Since then he has received six letters demanding money, all ending with the formal threat, 'Si presento la mano nera.' 'You are presented with the Black Hand.'

Afraid to Tell Police.

But Viviano feared to tell the police of the letters, and he kept silence. While Sergt. Adrozzo and Patrolmen Tomassello and Jacks, the Black Hand experts of the Carr Street District, were investigating the letter to Dr. John F. Menestrina of 3411 Washington avenue, threatening decapitation if $2000 was not forthcoming, they were told by an Italian of the check Cipriano had cashed.

"Two persons will meet you and ask for the blind cage. Give them the envelope. Do not attempt to speak to them as you value your life.

"Do this and you will be safe. Fail, and your life is lost. You are presented with the Black Hand."

Policemen were placed on guard Friday at Viviano's place of business, with instructions to shoot any person attempting to throw any missile toward the building.

EDISON WILL PROBABLY GET WELL, SAY DOCTORS

Inventor Is Resting Easily After Delicate Operation for Relief of His Ear.

[illegible] attendance on Thomas A. Edison today at the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital announced that the inventor's condition is slightly improved.

Mr. Edison's brother-in-law, J. Miller, gave out the following statement on authority of Dr. Dorr:

"The second operation for the relief of Mr. Edison's ear was performed last night. It was remarkably successful. He had a comfortable night. Only in the event of unforeseen complications set-that he would not permit Miss Goldman to deliver an address here. At the moment he was reading an account of the attempt to assassinate the Shah of Persia, in which three persons were killed, and pointing to it he said, "That's the sort of thing she stirs up—certainly she can't speak here."

Assails the Churches.

Emma Goldman glories in her anarchy, and is eloquent in her denunciations of society. She assails in particular the monopolies and the churches.

The churches, she declares, are enslaving the masses of the American people.

She says she wishes to give the laws of nature full sway, so that the revolution may come as soon as possible.

"We have heard a good deal of late recently about attainties," she remarked quizzically.

"Now isn't that a ridiculous term to apply to people who sincerely love one another.

Calls Marriage Laws Absurd.

"The legal or religious contract of marriage is the most absurd thing in our laws today. If a man loves a woman there should be a voluntary bond between them and when they get tired they ought to quit living together.

"This is not true marriage, but true love, and when anarchy reigns as I trust some day we will carry out this anarchy program."

There are 50,000 anarchists in the United States, according to Emma Goldman, and every city of the United States is represented by a branch of the society.

"We do not believe in the promiscuous slaying of rulers, such as we have witnessed recently," she says.

"Indeed, no! When the revolution of anarchy triumphs there will be no laws and no Constitution to harass the people. Anarchy means a voluntary state of co-operative society based on order. All persons are equal."

To Be Arrested in Chicago.

Press telegrams to the Post-Dispatch from Chicago Friday announced that Emma Goldman will be arrested when she goes there to speak March 8.

An order to the police to this effect has been received from Frank P. Sargent, United States Commissioner of Immigration.

It will cure a very large per cent of all cases, even after they have reached the ulcerative, or chronic stage, and no matter of how many years' standing they may be. It is equally efficacious in affections of the mucous lining of the larynx, bronchial and respiratory organs in general, thus curing bronchitis, laryngitis and other affections giving rise to obstinate, acute coughs following sudden colds, as long on coughs. It is not good in the lingering, chronic coughs. Nor must the "Golden Medical Discovery" be expected to work miracles. It will not cure consumption in its advanced stages – no medicine will do that, but for all obstinate hang on coughs due to laryngeal or bronchial irritation and kindred affections of the throat, which, if neglected or badly treated, are likely to lead up to consumption, the "Discovery" can be relied upon to produce the best curative results.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is, from its tonic and specific curative control over mucous surfaces, especially efficacious in curing indigestion, dyspepsia, weak stomach and "Liver Complaint," or biliousness. Even ulceration of the stomach and bowels has in thousands of cases been cured by it; also obstinate chronic diarrhea.

In addition to all the foregoing, not the least valuable of the marvelously efficacious properties possessed by the "Discovery" is the unequaled regulating and strengthening effect exerted by it over the heart's action. It has made some wonderful cures of very pronounced valvular and other affections of that organ.

WOULD BANISH EMMA GOLDMAN

Chief Creecy and Federal Officer Confer on Her Deportation.

HERE TO PREACH ANARCHY

Meetings of "Reds" Will Be Held at Their Wash Street Headquarters.

AUTHORITIES ARE BUSY

District Attorney of Chicago Is Interested in Active Measures.

Emma Goldman, apostle of anarchy and free love, is in St. Louis to deliver a series of lectures on anarchy under the auspices of the "Freedom" and "Liberty" groups of this city, which have headquarters at 1630 Wash street.

Chief Creecy is considering whether he will permit the leader of the "reds" to make public addresses, as advertised. He is awaiting instructions from the federal authorities of Chicago, who are considering her deportation to Russia under the provisions of the immigration laws.

Dispatches from Washington state Commissioner of Immigration Sargent directed the Federal authorities in Chicago to arrest her and United States District Attorney Sims announced his determination to co-operate with the Department of Commerce and Labor in "cleaning out" the anarchists.

It is claimed that she is not naturalized. Chief Creecy had a conference with Immigration Inspector Dunn of St. Louis Friday to decide what should be done.

Confers With "Comrades."

In a bare room on the third floor of a lodging house at 1331 Franklin avenue, Miss Goldman Friday conferred with "comrades" of the St. Louis group. She arrived Thursday night from Toledo, Ohio, where she has been spreading anarchistic propaganda.

She is a Russian Jewess, 39 years old, with steel-gray eyes, red hair and stocky figure. She wore a blue serge gown, extremely plain in design, without ornament.

"My parents reside in Rochester, N. Y., which is home, but New York is my headquarters," she said. "My father is a naturalized American citizen, which extends to his children. I have two sisters and two brothers in Rochester. I emigrated to America with a sister and my parents and the rest of the family followed."

Miss Goldman addresses audiences in fluent English, German, Russian and Yiddish. She converses in French, but does not use it on the platform.

Plain in face, the mere mention of her "life calling," as she styles it, causes her features to light expressively.

"Anarchy is a doctrine which believes in the free initiative of the individual and the voluntary co-operation of human effort. It is against human government as we know it. Perfect equality of man and woman is one of its keystones.

Opposes Marriage Ceremony.

"I preach against the marriage ceremony. I never have been the chattel of any man. I believe the union of man and woman is so private and sacred that the public law has no right to interfere."

"In the event of death of love between such a couple after children are born, what then?" was asked.

"They should separate by mutual consent, the woman to have the children, if she wishes, the man to provide amply for them. I have known many such unions and hardly any instance in which the man failed to do his part. Children born of free love invariably are provided for. Women in such unions are not articles of property, but man's equal and associate in every way.

"Next to Russia, which is purely despotic, America, called the 'home of the free,' is the most rigid and arbitrary in the world. The greatest political freedom is enjoyed in England and Holland, with Germany next.

"Even in Russia, barring political repression, there are features in which there is greater freedom than in America. America has grown exacting and imperialistic so that free speech, a constitutional right, is almost a dead thing.

"I have emancipated myself from law. As a free agent, one who never harmed a man, woman or child, I do not need it."

EMMA GOLDMAN MEEK AS A LAMB IN HER HARANGUE

Bombs? Pish and Tush! She Believes in Slapping Unruly Capitalists on the Wrist.

Emma Goldman, anarchist, "roared like any lamb" at Fraternal Hall, Eleventh street and Franklin avenue Friday night.

The 250 men and 50 women in the audience waited in vain for her to say something which would make them sit up and take notice, but she didn't and, as her speech progressed, there were murmurs of disapproval, and many of her hearers left the hall shaking their heads and declaring that she was not the fire-eating Emma of other days.

Miss Goldman spoke in Yiddish, and the burden of her talk was a mild tirade against trade unionism which, she said, is responsible for the sway of the "capitalist class."

The misery of the unskilled and unorganized workman, she said, is largely due to the power of unions. In Miss Goldman's audience were many union men and, when she reached this point in her discourse, there were cries of disapproval.

This was as near as any one came to being excited. The five detectives and 10 uniformed policemen assigned to the meeting stood in the back of the hall and yawned as Emma said: "The capitalists should be reasoned with and brought over to our way of thinking. I am not in favor of bombs or murder."

That was the signal for an exodus. There was a stream of fierce whiskers through the outer door, and only a few remained to hear the rest of the speech.

It was at first announced that the police would stop the meeting, but Chief [illegible] on her promise that she would not stir the passions of her hearers.

NAGEL POSSIBLE CANDIDATE FOR U. S. SENATOR

Victor Over Niedringhaus Laughs at Suggestion, Says No Committeeman Yet.

INTERVIEWED IN OFFICE

Attorney for Busch Is Opposed to the Brewery-Owned Saloon.

Following his sweeping triumph in the contest for national committeeman at the Republican State Convention, Charles Nagel of St. Louis is being urged by well-known Republican leaders as the most available candidate of their party for United States Senator.

Mr. Nagel himself is not encouraging such a movement. "I am not yet elected national committeeman," said he to a Post-Dispatch reporter. "As to the senatorship, I have not given it a thought.

"No personal considerations prompted me to seek the national committeemanship. That is an honor implying a duty to the party—an obligation to promote its best interests, without regard to the so-called spoils of office."

Seen in His Office.

During the interview Mr. Nagel was seated in a large leather-cushioned chair in one of the 11 apartments composing his suite of law offices on the seventh floor of the Security Building.

He prefaced his remarks with the statement that he is a great believer in publicity, declaring that public men ought to talk frankly to the public on public questions.

As he said this a messenger entered with the announcement that "Mr. Howe and Mr. Stifel are outside waiting to see you."

"I'll see them in a little while," said Mr. Nagel.

"Now," he said, turning to the interviewer, "fire away."

The remark was typical of the man.

Enthusiasm Not Lacking.

Although quiet and reserved, he is not apathetic or lacking in warm enthusiasm as many politicians would have one believe.

Because he is an attorney for the Busch interests, the opposition to Mr. Nagel objected to his candidacy because of the prevalent wave of prohibition in Missouri.

"I am against prohibition for many reasons," said Mr. Nagel emphatically. "The chief reason is that I regard it as an invasion of individual rights. Too large a proportion of the people are opposed to it and the ability to enforce such a law must depend on a preponderance of sentiment in favor of it. Unless the people favor a law it will not be enforced. If it fails in that it is of itself a failure.

Believes in Regulation.

"But I am a believer in the strict regulation of the liquor traffic," continued Mr. Nagel.

The policies of President Roosevelt have come to stay, according to Mr. Nagel, just as the public man or the politician of odious record is being relegated to private life.

Mr. Nagel was president of the St. Louis City Council from 1893 to 1897 and in the early 80's served a term as a member of the Missouri House of Representatives. Several of the men who voted for him at the State Convention were his legislative associates—the most impressive incident of his victory.

MOTHER EARTH

A child born of love will always prove a joy and comfort to its parents. No matter how great the care such a child may require, no matter what hardships and pangs it may cause, the parents will endure all cheerfully for the sake of the one that came into the world of their own desire, through that most precious of all human ties, Love.

MOTHER EARTH is such a child. It was begotten by a great, intense love, the love for Freedom, for human Justice. Those who gave birth to MOTHER EARTH were not wedded by State or Church "till death doth part"; they were united by love, by an ardent desire to rouse man from his stupor, to banish strife and the lust for gain and power. To make man conscious of his true place in the world and his proper relationship to his fellows, was the raison d'être of MOTHER EARTH'S birth. As the offspring of true love, MOTHER EARTH was cared for tenderly, and its health and growth looked after by its parents through many weary days and nights. No pains or struggles were spared to make the infant a true example of what love and devotion can do.

Like all infants, MOTHER EARTH went through the process of teething, measles, whooping cough, etc. In that condition it often incurred the displeasure and the opposition of neighbors, who have no sympathy for other people's children.

Coming from healthy stock and backed by love, MOTHER EARTH is now entering upon its third year. Its parents do not claim for it absolute perfection; for true love is not blind. It sees with wide-open eyes; indeed, it is exocting, because its pinnacle is Freedom, and it will be sotisfied with nothing short of thot. To reach thot pinnacle MOTHER EARTH must grow—in depth, in scope, in aspirations. And it shall do all that as far as is in the power of its parents, whose main aim it has been to instill in their child the meaning of true love and harmony which grow out of universal parenthood. A parenthood comprised not only of mother and father, but of all human beings imbued with the spirit of solidarity and comradeship. It is this spirit that has gained for MOTHER EARTH many friends all through Americo and in Europe; friends who have helped faithfully in the maintenance of the child. That is the beauty of a universal baby; it is not dependent only on its parents. Because of that the parents are even more eager to care for it. True, the mother must forego the comforts of a home, exposing herself to many hardships while racing about the country, seeking new friends for her child. But love overcomes everything. Besides, when the mother can choose the father of her child, she need never fear to leave it to his care and affection.

From all appearances the baby is gaining in strength. Its cry to-day is no longer that of a sickly, ill-nourished child; rather is it the voice of strong lungs. In proportion as it will continue to grow, it will gain in power and become what its latent qualities design it for: a fighter against all sham and hypocrisy; a true hater of all authority and oppression; a fearless champion of Freedom, as embodied in the noblest conceptian of human society—Anarchism.

EMMA GOLDMAN,
ALEXANDER BERKMAN.

TO OUR ENEMIES

CORRUPTION breathes easier again. The greedy capitalist, the brazen politician, the venal judge, the crooks of the police force, the prostitution-supported pillars of the Church, the Tenderloin demi-mondaine—they all breathe freer again. They have successfully raised the cry, "Crucify the Anarchists!" in order to lull the "common people" into forgetting the crimes of the social parasites.

That is the fond hope of the wholesale murderers, exploiters, and oppressors; of all the big and little scoundrels of our glorious Republic. Will they succeed in this?

Can they still the cry of hunger with the blood-curdling sensations of the press? Can they abolish the poverty and misery of the masses by reciting gruesome tales of "Anarchy"? Drive away the pangs of starvation by sounding idiotic alarms? Will the desperate man, meditating suicide, be saved by reading the police discovery of alleged Anarchist plots?

Anarchism is again to be annihilated. But how? Have the servants of our capitalists—the law-makers, judges, and police—left anything undone to accomplish that result? Have they not usurped most arbitrary powers? Have not the courts virtually abolished the one-time safeguard of popular liberties, the right of habeas corpus? Are not the last vestiges of the freedom of the press being strangled by the Postmaster General and his adjutant, Comstock? Has not every police pasha the power to veto the right of assembly? Is not every detective an infallible god who may without warrant attack peaceful citizens in their homes and drag them to court on the charge of "disorderly" conduct? Is there any other country in the wide world—Russia, Turkey, and China not excepted—where every policeman assumes the authority to violate popular rights, as is the case in our glorious land?

"Down with the Anarchists!" That is the cry raised whenever the corruption of the ruling clique, or the misery of the people—or both, as is the case now—has reached a climax.

But what has happened? A poor devil, tramping the streets of Denver hungry and homeless, knocking at the doors of charity in vain, became desperate and shot a servant of God. A servant of that God without whose knowledge and will not even a sparrow may die. But why hold the Anarchists responsible for the workings of God's will, or for the acts of men driven to desperation by hunger?

An Anarchist? Perhaps he was. Perhaps not. No one seems to have known him. Even Anarchist philosophy cannot still the hunger of the victim of capitalism.

At Chicago and Philadelphia the unemployed wage slaves, asking for bread, were brutally beaten by the police. The Tsar's Cossacks were not more cruel on Bloody Sunday. Among the victims was a young man. He witnessed the police inhumanity, he heard their mocking jeers, and felt their brutality. He saw the clubs in the hands of well-fed giants rain a storm of blows upon the heads of haggard demonstrators, attacked unawares. Perhaps he himself was struck, and the hurt revived his Kishineff experiences, when those most dear to him were foully murdered. But that was Russia. . . . He felt stunned. He was not long in this country; he had not yet become sufficiently Americanized to passively witness such terrible deeds. His blood boiled, his heart beat faster than those of his fellow-slaves. He knew there was no appeal from police outrages; no justice to be had. He wanted to punish the Chief of Police, the man he considered responsible—and he lost his life in the attempt.

An Anarchist? Perhaps. Perhaps not. No one seems to have known him.

Are the Anarchists responsible for police brutality resulting in such incidents? If so, then are they not equally guilty of the gruesome wholesale murders daily committed in this glorious country of ours? They should also be charged with all the catastrophes in coal mines, on railroads, and sea—the Iroquois Theatre, the "General Slocum," and the recent school holocaust in Cleveland, to mention but a few instances. Yet every citizen knows that avaricious capitalists and venal officials are the responsible men. But why does not the "respectable" citizen rise in indignation against them?

The early Christians were the scapegoats of Roman corruption. For similar reasons the Anarchists are crucified to-day.

Crucify and exile the Anarchists! But turn to the pages of history. It was ever the privilege of the noblest spirits to be exiled. Our very ancestors, the fathers of this country, were exiles. The pathfinders of every age, were they not ever persecuted, deported, exiled?

The Anarchists may serenely suffer themselves to be classed with criminals and denounced as enemies of society. Did not Christ die between two thieves on Golgotha?

The authorities may deport a few poor devils, but never Anarchism: the spirit of liberty, of the highest aspirations of humanity,—Anarchy, whose genius is the triumph of man's potential achievements. To destroy that it were necessary to eradicate humanity, life itself.

Mankind will continue its ascent, despite all obstacles. And we Anarchists, the pioneers of liberty, will ever hold high our banner, and proudly and enthusiastically battle with unjust and corrupt conditions, all calumny and persecution notwithstanding.

OBSERVATIONS AND COMMENTS

HAVING heard of the distinguished bravery displayed by the police of Chicago at the recent clubbing of defenceless, half-starved men marching the streets in search of bread, the Philadelphia authorities determined to look to their laurels.

A mass-meeting of unemployed was taking place, at which the present economic situation was discussed. Suddenly, while one of our local comrades was in the midst of his address, the audience began to crowd to the doors. In vain did the speakers call upon the people to remain. In a moment they found themselves practically deserted. The greater part of the audience started to walk to City Hall, presumably to ask the Mayor for work. It was a case of spontaneous action; evidently the people needed bread more than speeches.

Here was a glorious opportunity for the guardians of the peace.

The marchers were quiet and orderly—till the police appeared. Without warning they swooped down upon the people and began unmercifully clubbing them. The warders of order created a riot and distinguished themselves by making numerous arrests.

Not satisfied with this brave performance, the police the next day arrested a number of our local comrades, among them the speakers of the preceding evening, Voltairine de Cleyre and H. Weinberg. Charges of inciting to riot were brought against them, in spite of the fact that all the evidence was to the effect that the speakers tried their utmost to disuade the people from making a demonstration in such small numbers.

The authorities of Philadelphia are using the opportunity to abolish the last vestiges of free speech in the city that give birth to Colonial Independence. At the same time, no efforts are spared to manufacture a case against our comrades. The object is to railroad them to prison. Several innocent victims of the police-made riot have already been hastily tried and sentenced to most cruel terms in the penitentiary. Thus, one of the "rioters" has been condemned to five years, the Judge remarking that the man could not be punished too severely—for being hungry. Poverty is the worst crime in the eyes of Mammon.

Lovers of liberty and justice! Lose no time rallying to the support of the cause of free speech. The voice of truth shall not be strangled by the coarse hand of the law's myrmidons.

We call the attention of our readers to the appeal appearing in this issue, "The Case in Philadelphia." We ask quick moral and financial aid for the Denfence Fund, to enable us to fight the cases both of those awaiting trial as well as of the victims already condemned.

THE mission of government as the servile handmaid of capital has been strikingly illustrated by the silk workers' strike at Phillipsburg, N. J.

The immediate cause of the strike was the tyrannous and humiliating treatment of the employees by the managers of the Standard Silk Company. The "hands" were in a condition of abject slavery, veritable chattels of their masters. The last straw was added when the company had the water supply shut off, on the pretext that the employees "wasted too much time washing their hands." Why, indeed, should a slave wash himself? The Company evidently regarded cleanliness as a symptom of dangerous aspirations.

The circa one thousand men and women employed in the mills went out on a strike. They demanded better treatment and the reduction of their working hours from 10¾ hours to 10 hours per day. Naturally, the Company could not "afford" such luxuries—for its workingmen. It refused to arbitrate and tried everything in its power to break the strike. But the workers stood manfully together, determined to win their just demands. Thereupon the Company appealed to the State authorities. A noble judge was speedily found who issued an injunction, virtually forbidding the strikers to breathe within sight of the mills. The injunction failing, however, to drive the men back to work, the Company resorted to a shocking outrage. Five of the most active strikers were suddenly arrested on the alleged charge of slapping a scab. In vain they proved their innocence. They were speedily railroaded to prison, condemned to three years each. Three years for three men for hitting a strike-breaker! And not a whit of evidence to support the charge, except the scab's "oath."

Several public meetings have been held in Phillipsburg to protest against this outrage. It is doubtful whether a parallel to this crying injustice can be found in the history of the country. The people of the State of New Jersey would prove themselves unworthy of a man's respect if they should fail to demand the instant liberation of the imprisoned victims of capital.

IN a recent public address, Governor Hughes solemnly assured his audience that—

> "The country is morally sound. Its standards of business were never higher. In this land of industry, with unexampled opportunities for production and exchange, with an area and population enjoying advantages of distribution free from artificial barriers, the men of business inevitably represent the intelligence and moral sentiment of the people."

With practically every pillar of our financial and commercial world a proven scoundrel, it is refreshing to learn that the moral standard of our commercial life is higher than ever. Equally pleasant is the unexpected news that our robber barons represent the highest moral sentiment of the people. Are we, then, a nation of cut-throats? But more startling yet is the information that distribution is free from artificial barriers. The poverty of the masses is, no doubt, one of the blessings of our "free" distribution.

The Governor is a poor economist. Civilization has never witnessed a system of distribution more artificial than our own; nor a system of production more irrational. We do not produce for the needs of the people; things are not made to be used, but to sell. Hence distribution is determined, not by real demand, but by the ability to buy. Starvation in the midst of plenty is the natural result. But that, according to our wise man, is "the advantage of distribution free from artificial restraints."

In effect the Governor says, literally, "You are free to starve." And he is right, more's the pity.

IN a moment of forgetfulness the truth occasionally escapes a politician, and history is the richer.

Ex-Senator William M. Stewart, of Nevada, writing his reminiscences of President Andrew Johnson, states that the latter was intoxicated when he entered the Senate Chamber to take the oath of office as Vice-President; that on that occasion he began an incoherent tirade and had to be removed by the Sergeant-at-Arms. We further learn that when the news of President Lincoln's assassination was carried to Johnson by Senator Stewart, the Chief Justice, and Senator Foote, of Vermont, the successor of Lincoln was found drunk and was sworn in in that condition. Senator Stewart's account of what followed runs like this:

> "We took him to the White House, and Stanton sent for a tailor, a barber, and a doctor. He had a dose administered, and the President was bathed and shaved, his hair cut, and a new suit of clothes was fitted to him. He did not, however, get into a presentable condition until late in the afternoon, when a few persons were permitted to see him to satisfy themselves that there was a President in the White House."

The Senator should take care. Statements like the above are liable to shock "decent" people's gray matter into motion. Some even might be so bold to think that Presidents are made of the same clay as ordinary men. What is the country coming to, anyway?

"LAW and order" are vindicated. Capt. Van Schaick, who was in charge of the steamboat "General Slocum," is now safe in prison.

The conviction of the old Captain and the sentence of ten years at hard labor imposed on him are nothing short of cannibalism. Van Schaick was charged with criminal negligence in failing to observe the navigation law while in command of the steamboat "General Slocum" on June 15, 1904. At the time 1,031 lives were lost with the burning of the vessel off North Brother Island. But the Captain was merely an employee. He had no means of forcing his employers to consider the safety of those aboard. The Company's avarice and indifference to the safety of its patrons were primarily responsible for the disaster. On the other hand, it was proven that Van Schaick sustained severe injuries in attempting to save the excursionists. Where are the owners of the burned vessel? They are the men responsible for the disaster.

But the law does not punish the mighty. It searches the gutters and crucifies the obscure, the friendless, while crime is rampant in the palaces.

NOT the Tsar, nor the bureaucracy is the chief enemy of Russian freedom. The greatest danger to the emancipation of that much-suffering people are its false friends, the corrupt elements ever on the alert for an opportunity to exploit popular movements for their own aggrandizement.

Such a danger is the alleged "Committee of the Russian Republican Administration," which apparently consists of but one man, the discredited adventurer, Ivan Norodny.

This self-styled "Chief Executive Commissioner" has issued a declaration converting, with a stroke of his pen, the Empire into "The United States of Russia." Simultaneously with this declaration a letter is addressed to the Tsar. After branding the autocrat as a common criminal, the "Chief Executive Commissioner of the United States of Russia" promises him a province as residence, and signs himself "Respectfully."

Having declared the independence of Russia, Norodny volunteers the announcement that bonds for the newly established Republic have been issued, and that they would be offered for sale immediately. The bonds, printed on parchment paper, set forth the fact that they are "liberty bonds" secured by first lien on all of the national property of the Republic.

Each of the bonds contains a statement to the effect that it is one of a series of 50,000 of $100 each, "which are to be used for the purpose of the United States of Russia," and to be distributed in the United States of America, France, Great Britain, and Germany. The faith of the Russian people is pledged for the payment of the bonds with interest.

We hope that no true friend of Russian emancipation will countenance, morally or financially, the impostor Ivan Norodny.

THE subtlest and most pernicious effects of authority are the weakening of man's natural spirit of self-reliance and independence.

This truism has never been more clearly illustrated than by the present clamor for anti-gambling legislation. Whenever some symptom of the diseased body politic becomes particularly obnoxious, forthwith is heard the cry, "We need more laws!"

But laws merely suppress. They do not cure. They change neither human nature nor conditions. Legislation against race-track gambling would but aggravate the evil by adding hypocrisy to it. Men will continue to gamble; the law will but force them to deceit. Suppressed evil is a double evil.

Education is more effectively reformative than mere legislation. Race-track gambling is by far the least serious symptom of our diseased social body. There are more vital questions. The crusaders against the race-track are themselves the greatest gamblers, the champions of a system based on robbery, sham, and deceit. Were they sincere, they would enlighten the people as to the dishonesty of every form of parasitism, of all profit-making. Rouse the public conscience to the shame of exploitation in whatever disguise, and you will have more effectively abolished gambling than laws can ever do.

But mere preaching is no cure. Betting on horses is but an insignificant expression of that great gambling conspiracy called capitalist society. Every phase of our social being is permeated by the same spirit—the love of conquest and gain, the passion for profits, the exploitation of another's labor.

The source of gambling is in our economic system, which is based and thrives on parasitism, hypocrisy, and theft. To effectively abolish gambling, society must be reconstructed on the foundation of justice and equity.

But not legislation will regenerate humanity. Enlightenment, based on individual self-reliance, is the cure. Free co-operation and direct action are the pivot of a better future.

SOME people are inclined to consider Great Britain as lagging in the march of progress. According to latest advices from London, however, England is soon likely to rival America in the development of her industries.

Great Britain has profitably extended her traditional policy of free trade to the manufacture of nobility. Nowadays a rich Englishman, quite irrespective of his character or talents, can buy a peerage almost as easily as he can buy a castle, and at almost as well-recognized a tariff. The most respectable method is to give a large sum to "charity." But this method is not infallible.

The one infallible way is to buy your peerage from a great political party; in other words, to subscribe to the party fund, exactly as our own corporations, for other corrupt equivalents, subscribe to party funds.

No glory is gained by giving $50,000 to a secret fund. A return must be exacted in some other way, and, in fact, a title is the only recognized consideration. If the title-hunter is rich and generous to the party, he becomes a peer; and thenceforward he and his descendants gain the "divine right" of sitting in a gilded chamber, reigning as kinglets, and shaping the destinies of the nation.

The ennobling example of our own political life is thus bearing good fruit across the pond. They have learned from us the valuable lesson of the democratic spirit. And they find that "it pays." For, after all, the highest expression of the art of government is—graft.

THE JOYS OF TOURING

I KNOW that I came into the world in a "respectable" manner, like all "decent" people, in bed, surrounded by loving relatives whose first expression of affection for the poor infant is to smother it with clothes and feathers. I am certain I shall not leave this world of ours in a like manner. Should I be spared the merciful accompaniment of the law, some speeding train is sure to lead me into a better world. I know it, because I spend more time in trains than anywhere else. It isn't likely to happen very soon, though; my constitution is guarantee for that. Anyone who can survive twenty years of tossing about in the foul and suffocating air of our railroad cars must indeed be strong.

So here I am again in a rumbling train, en route to St. Louis. The temperature is that of a July day in New York. The Lord forbid that a window be opened; an uprising is certain to ensue; but as the passengers are all well behaved Americans, such a thing must not be. Besides, we Americans can stand anything, except air. We are ready to submit to any abuse, any imposition or insults, but air, fresh air! Never.

With the crisis causing want and misery among thousands, and tortured by a racking cough when I left New York Feb. 13th, I did not think I should have either strength or the necessary wherewithal to reach St. Louis: but the Gods are good to those who doubt them.

Montreal, the city of the dark ages, priestcraft and churches, proved unusually wide awake this time. Two packed Jewish meetings. But then, Jewish meetings are always packed—with men, women, infants, and baby-carriages. The herding instinct of my race has aided its survival, despite all the horrors it was made to endure. Besides, what would become of progress were it not for the Jews? To be sure, there are some American radicals, Socialists, and Anarchists, but it is a radicalism that will not forego a single comfort or expose itself to any inconvenience, least of all strive to make itself known. It thrives in seclusion, for it dreads nothing so much as public opinion. There are a few happy exceptions, of course, but they are either impractical or foreignized. There was Albert Parsons; how stupid of him to have taken his place with his comrades, when he might have saved himself and continued to do work in a "quiet and respectable" way. There is Voltairine; why the dues does she want to speak at an unemployed meeting of Italians and Jews? It is a pity such people will not use wisdom and declare themselves once for all lovers of peace, "philosophic Anarchists." But as I said, these few hot-heads are foreignized; the bulk of our American radicals would positively die of inertia and anaemia, were it not for the Jews constantly infusing new blood into their system. Some day our radicals may awaken to the realization that social changes are made by man and not by theories; nor are such changes brought about at five o'clock teas or parlor gatherings, and least of all through fear and dread of public opinion and the sacredness of the law.

Well, whether it is agreeable or not, the Jewish Anarchists are acquainting Americans with Anarchism, especially since they have learned to realize that it is the English-speaking public that needs awakening. Their sleep being almost death-like, it requires more energy, more constant and systematic respiratory efforts.

Such efforts the "Arbeiter Freund" group of Montreal has certainly brought into play when it arranged the English meeting Sunday, Feb. 15th. No wonder it was a great success, especially from an educational standpoint. The same newspapers that gave a fair interview with myself, together with other papers, hastened to sound the alarm of horror. A meeting on Sunday, in superstition-ridden Montreal, and attended by Canadians! Canadians, who were so bold-faced as to publicly declare themselves in sympathy with the lecture on "The Relation of Trade Unionism to Anarchism," and even offer a vote of thanks to the speaker! Unheard of! Of course it is the fault of those bad foreign Anarchists; if it were not for those creatures Canada would continue to be dull and pious and stupid. But as it is, some light may enter benighted Canada, and that's more than the average newspaper editor can stand.

The "Arbeiter Freund" group has proven what perseverance and enthusiasm can accomplish. Go on, dear comrades, and we will soon have the Montreal inhabitants interested in modern ideas.

Toronto lacks the energy of the Montreal group; therefore meetings are never very extensively attended. Still, the quality of the English-speaking audience made up for the lack of quantity, and that is, after all, the main consideration.

London, Ont. For all that its people have ever done for their advancement, the city might as well not be on the map. It was therefore very daring, indeed, on the part of Sarah and Meyer Hornstein—two beautiful progressive souls transplanted into a desert—to arrange two English meetings at their own expense. But daring will yet conquer the world; meanwhile it has succeeded in bringing Anarchy before a London audience. It was a small gathering, but a hundred and twenty-five people; quite a victory, though, as compared to the twenty-five beings who mustered up enough courage to see Mary Shaw in "Ghosts."

The first meeting, on Feb. 19th, was not very spirited. Those who ventured to come at all, did so because curiosity is often stronger than even the instinct of life or the fear of public opinion. The next day, no dynamite explosions having been reported, no arrest and no breaking up of the metting, the Ontarians took courage, and evidenced considerable interest and enthusiasm. The important feature of the meetings was the large sale of literature and the winning of some subscribers to MOTHER EARTH. I am glad I ventured to London; not so much because of the great achievements of my lectures, but because of the pleasure of meeting two genuine souls, Sarah and Meyer Hornstein. The two days I spent in their quiet and restful home, the sleigh ride on the crisp white snow, competing with the gold of the warm sun, were a treat indeed.

Cleveland has not changed since last March. The blank and dismal Union Station is still there, as are the smoke and dirt on the streets. The Single Tax Mayor, too, is there; but lukewarm reforms have never yet regenerated a people, nor loosened the iron grip of poverty created through economic inequality. True, the demonstration of the unemployed in Cleveland passed off without police brutality. But even if the Cleveland police were as savage as those of Philadelphia, they would have done nothing to the marchers—they were so well behaved, so peaceful, they carried the star spangled banner with such meekness. Why should they not have been permitted to march! And the leaders—of course they were as orderly as behooves Socialists who cringe before the sacredness of the law even more than the ordinary conservative. No red flags, deathly silence, no complaints! Such were the orders to the marchers, whose empty stomachs and empty heads lacked the power of resistance.

Something, however, did change in Cleveland. The Progressive Library has new quarters, light and airy, a fine reading room, many books and magazines, and a new spirit of activity. Our boys are making themselves felt in the Jewish unions which they have helped to federate. They have also successfully carried on a bread strike, and are doing good work in general.

The meetings were satisfactory in every way. There is much progressive material in Cleveland; unfortunately, they are in the fog and smoke of reform attempts, which accomplish nothing except robbing the people of initiative and self-reliance.

Toledo, too, suffers from an imaginary disease which resists cures more stubbornly than a real malady. There, a gentleman who spends his idle time writing, at the expense of the people, about social problems, is making the Toledians believe that he is doing something for them. The city is in the most neglected condition, with thousands of unemployed; but that cannot be helped, of course; at least, not right away. Gradually, through the Initiative and Referendum, may be ——. American politicians are like American dramatists and American ladies. Poor, barbarian Europe! If it were not for you, the American dramatist could write no drama for lack of material; American women would stalk about naked for lack of styles, and American reform politicians would run short of campaign speakers and election bait. Initiative and Referendum, which have proven such a farce in Switzerland, merely helping the government increase the army to be used during strikes, are now being given to the poor American voters as a new panacea for all ills.

But where does the traffic in patent medicines thrive better than in America?

That the Toledo meetings were poorly attended was due partly to the cowardice of the "Arbeiter Ring" that invited me to lecture, but lost heart when it was called on to do work openly. The entire responsibility was thrown upon the shoulders of one comrade, who has been out of work for many months, and who lacks the language at that. Still, he did his utmost, for which I am grateful to him. The inclement weather, too, was a handicap. The ice on the sidewalks of Toledo made it dangerous for anyone to venture out. That thousands of the unemployed might be put to shoveling snow and clearing the sidewalks, thus giving them a chance to earn a few dollars and saving the city from disease, has probably never occurred to the reform politicians. They are far too busy with the Initiative and Referendum.

In all the cities so far visited I have found among the comrades a very live and active interest in our recently organized Federation. There is a spirit of enthusiasm which augurs well for the work mapped out by the new organization: more systematic and energetic propaganda of Anarchism.

THE CASE IN PHILADELPHIA

AN APPEAL

A MEETING of the unemployed was called for Thursday, Feb. 20, at 2 P. M., by the Jewish and Italian Anarchist Groups. The hall was overpacked before the hour, and at about 2.30 the lower hall was opened for an overflow meeting. In both halls some two thousand people were assembled. The major portion were Italians; the remainder chiefly Russian Jews. The first speaker at the upstairs meeting was De Bella, in Italian; I followed in English; then Weinberg in Jewish; then another Italian speaker, whose name I do not know; and lastly Geo. Brown had started to speak in English. At this point a voice at the back of the hall cried something in Italian; what it was I cannot say, but all the people began to crowd for the door. In vain the chairman, Mr. Brown, and an Italian speaker called to them to remain and listen. In vain we protested with some on the platform against the uselessness of going out in a demonstration with so few people. The people wished to go and they went. What their purpose was, I do not know; it is possible they meant to ask the authorities at the City Hall to relieve their condition. Whatever it was, they went. And the inevitable followed. They were met by the police, who began brutally clubbing the people. Some resented this with force, and were clubbed into insensibility. Fortunately no one was killed, although several shots were fired.

In the end three Italians were held charged with inciting to riot and assault and battery with intent to kill; Comrade Weinberg and myself were arrested the next day charged with inciting to riot; and later two young members of the Radical Library were arrested for the heinous offense of having hired the hall and distributed circulars; a third young man whom none of us know, and who, so far as I am able to learn, was not even present at the meeting, was also arrested. These three have since been discharged, after having been five days in jail.

After a two hours' hearing, Comrade Weinberg and myself were held for court under $1,500 bail each, which is the present standing of the case. The State presented

Supt. Mallary Indorses a Certain Firm Before State Board and Convict Labor Contract Is Secured

Secrets of the Pontiac reformatory were brought to light today showing the existence of a plot to turn over the prison labor of the state to contractors, the products of such labor to come into competition with the products of union labor. The whole matter in the plot at Pontiac is said to be Supt. M. M. Mallary, whose participation is revealed in the minutes of the meetings of the board of managers which were secured by Representatives Hinde and McLaughlin on their recent visit to the institution.

These minutes show that Mallary acted as the agent of the Ford & Johnson company, Indiana and Sixteenth streets. On application for an appeal to Gov Deneen which he was asked to appeal to the board of prison labor asking it to arrange for the establishment of factories in the penitentiaries of the state, these factories to be conducted in the interest of the Ford & Johnson company.

Mallary Praises Company

In a long letter to Gov Deneen the whole of which is set out in the minutes of the board meetings Mallary praises this company and calls attention to the fact that it conducts one of the largest chair factories in the country inside the walls of the penitentiary at Michigan City, Ind.

He declared the concern wanted to establish a chair factory in the penitentiary at Chester, which would employ an indefinite number of men a woodenware factory that would employ 300 men a chair factory that would employ fifty men, and a carpet-weaving factory that would employ 150 men.

"This concern is one of the largest manufacturers of chairs in the United States," wrote Mr. Mallary, "and I believe it would be well to take up their proposition with the members of the board of prison labor. The company agrees to put in the machinery in all cases and to accept payment for same in the finished product."

Factories Are in Existence

What was done in the premises by Gov Deneen, Representative Manny, who made the discovery of the plot, has not yet been able to discover but it is known that there is a chair factory in the Chester penitentiary, from which, it is charged, the state receives but little return. They are a number of other factories in the Chester penitentiary, and there are also similar places at Pontiac and at Joliet.

Members of labor unions who have learned of this action are indignant, and action by them is expected. Supt Mallary especially is blamed.

In addition to these secrets unearthed by the minute book Representative Manny discovered figures in the expense columns for which he declares he will demand an explanation. These figures show there are hundreds of dollars spent every month which are charged on the books as having been paid out for school books for the inmates and for school seats made at

Emma Goldman, High Priestess of Anarchy, Sneers Over Crime

Emma Goldman.

(By Special Correspondent)

SPRINGFIELD Mo March 3 Emma Goldman had a sneer and a mocking laugh as an answer today to the query:

"Did you know Averbuch, who was shot by Chief Shippy to Oh ages" She was told it had been proved the assassin was an anarchist.

Isn't that absurd?" said the high priestess of the anarchists. "Somebody always somebody else tries to kill them and the officers of the law the newspapers, and the people cry 'Anarchist'.

"I know nothing authentic about the Chicago affair but I'll guarantee that the man was not an anarchist but a fanatic of some one who had a private grudge against Shippy."

It is universally conceded that Miss Goldman's speeches helped to inspire Czolgosz, assassinate President McKinley. She was in retirement for a couple of years after she was arrested following the shooting of the president but during the last three or four years she has been as active as ever in her attacks on society.

Three years ago she worked for a time as a hairdresser in Pittsburg where Alexander Berkman who shot Henry C. Frick was released from the penitentiary she and Berkman contracted an anarchical marriage and have since been touring the country together.

She first met Berkman when she was a schoolgirl in St Petersburg, and it was her teachings after she returned him to the United States which led him, when he was 21 years old to shoot Mr. Frick chairman of the Carnegie Steel company during the Homestead strike in July, 1892.

me to go ahead and cook it; that it was only ground up wrong.

Corn Meal in Unfit Condition

The witness detailed the condition of the corn meal saying:

"It was too wormy to cook. It would not get hard enough to fry, and was not fit to eat. The worms in it were longer than those in the oatmeal. Miss Henderson told me it was because I didn't cook it right. I complained to Dr. Hardt, but he told me to go back to Miss Henderson. The prunes had bugs and worms pressed in on them, and when I showed them to Miss Henderson she told me to wash the bugs out and cook them anyway."

Miss Jordan said she was discharged on a trumped-up charge that she had burned the bacon. She said she had went in Gov. Deneen and told him the whole story of the worms in the food. She did not know what action the executive had taken in the matter in the food.

Other Cruelties Related

Other details of alleged cruelties were brought out by her and by O. E. Waller, another witness. She told of an alleged attack on Harry Thomas, a male, by Miss Danaher an attendant. Miss Danaher chased Harry Thomas with a hatchet and a butcher knife, said Miss Jordan and finally overtook him and buried the right hand with the butcher knife, cutting his forefinger and breaking the bone.

Attendant Waller told of the attack upon Eddie Kutz, who was beaten up by William Beach less than a week ago.

"The boy was beaten all to pieces," said Waller. "His face was cut, his eyes were blackened and his chest and stomach were bruised and cut. The boy died. Mr. Beach had knocked him down and jumped on him. There was blood on the floor where the boy was picked up after the beating.

Two other boys were beaten by Beach one of them Jesse Greco and his eyes blackened and the other boy had a hole in his cheek. Neither of them made complaint. They don't know enough for that. Beach was dismissed.

Had Heard Boy Was Beaten

Chairman Hill asked the witness if he had heard that former Superintendent Miller and a man named Hutchins had been charged with beating inmates. He said he had heard Miller had beaten a boy, but he knew nothing about it. He had heard nothing of Hutchins.

Waller told the committee that Arthur Simmons, the attendant who was dismissed because he allowed Harry Hinkley an inmate to be burned by scalding water in a bathtub, told him he was a second cousin of Joseph C. Mason, secretary of the state civil-service board.

He said further that after he dismissed Simmons told him he had been assured at Springfield he could get another job when ever he should want it.

SINGER DEMANDS INJUNCTION

Asks Court to Prohibit the San Carlo Opera Company from Advertising Her While She Is Absent

MME. JANE NORIA

Mme Jane Noria, the former San Carlo opera singer, is very angry because she misses the opera company is touring the country, advertising that she is with it while in reality she is in St Louis. It is said.

She asked the United States court today, through her attorney Morton A. Merchandhem, to issue an injunction prohibiting the opera company from using her name in advertisements and on the programme while another person is filling her former part.

Mme. Noria sang with the San Carlo company while it was here. She was considered a success and the opera-going public was pleased with her. Then she asked to leave the company and the arrangements were satisfactorily completed.

She left for St. Louis and the company continued through the northwest. But she says that it did not take her name from the bills or programmes and that an understudy sang in her name. Mme. Noria came here today to sign the bill in a decree, which is directed against Henry Russell, the director, and the San Carlo opera company.

MALLARY PLANNED TO RUB SALT IN PRISONERS' WOUNDS, SAY WITNESSES AT PONTIAC

Farmers Tell Investigators Reformatory Head Was Discussed by Threats to Free Boys

PONTIAC, Ill., March 6.—Charges of inhuman and cruel methods alleged against Warden W. J. Mallory of the reformatory were discussed today by witnesses who appeared before the state board of charities to investigate the charges. Mallory is charged with having threatened to rub salt in the wounds of prisoners who attempted to escape.

The charges were made by Walter Holmes and William Maher. They are inmates and testified under immunity. Maher's parents live at Chicago. Holmes's father is a farmer near Lexington. Both admitted having served terms in the house of correction.

Wounds Caused by Shot

This is the first time that the charges of cruelty have been made in public. Mallory himself has always maintained the reformatory is a model institution. Many prominent persons have visited the institution and have been favorably impressed with its management.

The negroes, whom I believe was named Oliver Moore, escaped from the institution last July, said Holmes. They were captured in a weed back of Mallory house. They had been riddled by shot fired at them by the members of the posse, and Mallory sent one of the boys in the posse to Watkins house for a gun. He was prepared to rub it into the fugitives' wounds when the farmers interfered and took the men away from him.

Says Officials Showed Fear

Maher told a similar story. He said, however, that he did not hear Mallory send for the salt.

"I saw the salt," he declared, "and I know that it had been brought from my house.

Holmes declared further that during the chase Mallory and his guards kept to the rear, firing to a within range of the negroes who were armed with a revolver they had stolen from a guard.

"They put the farmers out in front," said Holmes. "They were willing enough that if any one was killed it should be a farmer."
